Make your congregation's ears ring, brother minister, with the clang of hammer and trowel arising from the houses of worship under construction in new communities as a result of Church Extension.

And make their hearts burn to have fellowship in a work so evidently blessed of God.

LET THE DISCUSSION BE CHRISTIAN!

DISCIPLES of Christ seem just now to be facing the deepest-going questions they have met with in their entire history. The controversy over missionary societies and the use of instrumental music in worship, fifty years ago, was superficial when compared to the differences that now find expression amongst us. This is a time to test the spiritual mettle of every soul of us.

Three courses are open to us.

One is to suppress our convictions, to put a seal upon our lips, to stand and watch this movement of ours proceed in what seems to us the wrong direction and, for the sake of the peaceful turning of the wheels of our organized acivities, or on account of the personal discomfort involved, to refuse to let the sentiments of our hearts be known.

Another is to ruthlessly plunge the brotherhood into fierce factional strife by brash and bigoted speech, and by unfraternal and ill-considered action.

The third course open to us is to speak out bravely, frankly, temperately, in a Christian-minded discussion, holding fast to the faith that however deep-going our differences may be our unity is deeper-going, to remember that on both sides we are actuated by the same motive of loyalty to the will of Christ.

This third course is the course The Christian Century earnestly desires to take and to see all its readers take.

We believe that a full, open discussion, participated in by every interested layman and minister, is the only safe pathway for us at this time.

For twenty years the problems we are now facing have been steadily assuming definite outline. The question of our CHARACTER as a people is now in the balance. Practically all the serious questions before us reduce themselves to this single issue:

Whether we Disciples are to take our place in the midst of the denominations, as one of them, having fixed customs and fixed definitions of belief, departure from which involves a church or an individual in ecclesiastical ostracism; or to make good our historic purpose to be a common denominator of the denominations—one with their churches in all things essential to the Church of Christ and at variance with their churches only in the things that pertain to the denominational order.

Time and again during the past century this question has flitted in and out upon our pathway, but now at last it has taken up a position fairly in the focus of our vision, and it must be thought through.

The voices that counsel suppression and silence are as futile as they are mistaken. They are futile because the problem is a moral problem. It is not just a question of consistency or inconsistency. It does not belong merely to the realm of theory. The question strikes deep into the conscience—on both sides it strikes deep into the conscience. Advocates of the practice of Christian unity are impelled by the will of Christ. Advocates of the practice of restricted membership are no less moved by the will of Christ.

It is a moral problem. It cannot be smothered without sin.

Can we not stand all together in the presence of Christ and talk it out? Cannot we Disciples, all of us earnestly striving to be loyal to him, give the world a proof of the power of his Spirit to calm our tempers while we seek to know what, in truth, his will for us is?

That is what we have always claimed loyalty to his will would do for others. Shall we not give Christ a chance to do as much for us, now?

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN TUCKE.

HE WAS only twenty-one when he graduated from Harvard, and he cherished ambitions for a great career; but he found his field of labor on the Isles of Shoals, and there he lived, labored and died. Bleak and desolate then as now, those islands now practically uninhabited, sustained a population of over 1,000 souls. They were rough, profane and ignorant people for the most part, if we are to trust either the reports to the missionary societies or the later sketches of Celia Thaxter, and a ministry among them can never have been replete with pleasant intellectual companionships for a college bred man. The men were notoriously given to drink; the women were violent scolds. It was said that no community in New England consumed so much rum in proportion to its population as that on the Isles of Shoals. Yet among these people John Tucke, Master of Arts, lived and wrought and suffered and died.

Twenty-one was he when he left college; seventy-one when he died; and the earth of Star Island yielded grudging room for a shallow grave for his remains.

And to what end was it all?

The population, driven out by the war of 1812, never returned in sufficient numbers to reestablish the precarious prosperity of former days; the little church declined in membership and finally disappeared; the little stone meeting house stood empty and silent as the grave of John Tucke. What had been the use of it all?

To have given one's life with this result, that a thousand rough and otherwise unshepherded people became a little less rough, a little less besotted, a little less brutal, was something, surely. To have left behind a record of righteousness and constant Christian helpfulness, was a thing worth while. But this was not all. For eighteen summers now there has been held annually on the Isles of Shoals a notable religious assembly, and one of its daily features is the morning and evening services of devotion in the bare little old church, in which the name and work of John Tucke are often mentioned with examples of fidelity, earnestness, and Christian zeal.

More than 100 years ago a slab was erected above his grave bearing this testimony:

"He was affable and polite in his manner, amiable in his disposition, of great piety and integrity, given to hospitality, diligent and faithful in hs pastoral office, well learned in history and geography, and a careful physician both to the bodies and the souls of his people."

A century the inscription stood, and was replaced when the storms had worn it to illegibility; and in 1914 a massive granite monument was erected visible far out to sea, and on it was copied the old inscription.

Thus is preserved imperishably the name of a man of ability and learning, who served God and his own generation in a humble place, but whose memory is treasured as an inspiration to countless thousands.

BAPTISMAL BRIBERY.

BAPTISTS and Disciples are often criticised by their Christian neighbors for their alleged overemphasis of baptism and especially their emphasis upon immersion. But we have yet to find in either of these communions an instance of superstition and bad taste so glaring as the following taken from the calendar of a Methodist church not a thousand miles from Chicago:

BAPTISMS WITH RIVER JORDAN WATER

Sunday morning, Aug. 2, Doctor Frye will baptize infants and adults with water he brought from the sacred river Jordan. No matter whether church members or not, parents or others presenting children for baptism will be accepted. Same with adults. This privilege is only once perhaps in a lifetime. The baptismal certificate will contain a note of water from the Jordan. Members will be received by letter and by profession of faith. Do not miss this most beautiful service. You will never forget it.

The Standard (Baptist), commenting on the above, characterizes it as the offer of "a sort of prize package in every baptismal certificate, with no blanks." That seems to fit the case exactly.

THREE VIEWS.

UPON giving it a second thought the Christian Standard seems to have decided that, on the whole, the California situation cannot be defended. It leaves the problem with those who are advocating representative conventions, and asks:

> If we are to have delegate bodies, with the local church as a unit, by what means shall just such issues as this [the case of the Berkeley church] kept out? Would they not be relevant and unavoidable from the very nature of the case? Then, representatives of the churches—that is, the churches acting by representatives—would be settling questions of doctrine—the very thing we are set not to do. We leave this question to be settled by our friends who are promoting the delegate convention scheme.

This paragraph has the fine virtue of being candid. The Standard thus declares its disapproval of the whole excommunication proceeding at Berkeley. It was "the very thing we [Disciples] are set not to do." If its editor had been there he would have stood with Dr. Breeden and Mr. McCartney against Mr. Smither and Mr. Ware and Mr. Russell.

The "Standard" is opposed to delegate conventions, such as they have in California, because it regards the raising of such issues as this as inherent and inevitable in such a convention.

The "Evangelist" favors delegate conventions and argues that such action as the California convention took is justified because, forsooth, the convention has the "right" to take it! It has the "right" to determine its own membership. It has the "right" to reject credentials from any church whose doctrines or local practices may not conform to the orthodoxy of the majority. It has the "right" to constitute itself an ecclesiasticism.

The Christian Century favors delegate conventions also, and while it does not dispute the RIGHT of such conventions to do what the "Evangelist" insists they have the right to do it declares that, being conventions of Disciples of Christ, they OUGHT not do such things.

It is within the "rights" of such a convention to exclude a church which uses an organ in its worship, or employs a minister at a stipulated salary. Many other narrow and sectarian things such a convention has the "right" to do. It has the "right" to bar out Socialists or believers in the pre-millenial theory of the second coming.

It is a mere truism to say that a delegate convention has the "right" to determine its own membership. It is not a question of "rights" but of principles, of ideals.

The whole question of delegate conventions comes back to this: What do you want delegate conventions FOR? If they are wanted in order to obtain uniformity in doctrine and congregational practice, The Christian Century is against them. As we pointed out a year ago, we have grave doubts that certain of its advocates KNOW what they want the delegate convention for. Certainly, a convention which limited its legitimate function only by its "rights" would quickly prove itself a bane and a blight upon our movement.

But a delegate convention organized for PRACTICAL MISSIONARY PURPOSES and welcoming credentialled representatives from any church of Christ that chose to send them would make for order and efficiency in the work of the gospel, and for the advancement of the cause of Christian unity.

STOP THE LEAK AT THE TOP.

THERE has been much recent discussion of the loss of leadership in the ministry through the dropping out of many of the men most fitted to be leaders. Hundreds of young idealists, we are told, are doing their work outside the church when they should be doing it within, and the reasons given are partly, but only partly, theological. One of the most serious leaks in the ministry is in the loss of successful pastors at middle age who withdraw and enter commercial or other occupations, not because their theology is at fault, nor because they are disinclined to work, but because they foresee the time when they will be cast adrift with no provision for their old age.

There are at present a number of men of high intellectual and spiritual attainments, who have served successfully as pastors, and who are out of employment because churches fear to employ men of fifty or over. The strong church seeking a pastor prefers one about thirty-five, a man of experience, a man who has been tested and proved successful, and who is ready for ten or fifteen years of the most strenuous and fruitful work. Those years it takes from him, giving him in return a comfortable salary, perhaps the first on which he can actually save a little money, but nowhere nearly enough if in those fifteen years he is to provide for the twenty-five years before his death at seventy-five. The minister remembers that congregations are fickle, that any two or three disgruntled families can, if they will, unseat him, and he does not wish to stay beyond his welcome. He becomes restless for fear the church may become restless, and when he makes overtures to churches, he finds he is ten or fifteen years too old. He is vigorous, successful, but the suggestion has now and then been made that a younger man would be more effective with the young people, and he would prefer to go before he is wanted to go.

But where shall he go? Dozens of churches would be proud of him, if only he were thirty-five instead of fifty. Not but that he is all right now, but churches fear to have a minister growing old on their hands.

No one panacea exists for this unfortunate condition, but one thing could be done that would help it. That would be an adequate retiring fund for all ministers who have rendered faithful service and for whose present service the churches have no demands. Men could then continue to the full end of their pastorates knowing that when they could no longer serve they would be adequately provided for. It also would doubtless do something toward making it more possible to attract worthy young men into the ministry. We do not think it would do everything, perhaps less than those who are promoting the cause expect. But it would be a just and righteous thing for the churches to do, and it would have something to do with stopping the leak at the top.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Seattle Churches Move Toward Unity.

A significant movement is reported from Seattle, Wash. The pastors and people of Seattle are planning to launch a co-operative social service work this fall which bids fair to revolutionize the work of the Seattle churches, and to go a long way toward bringing about Christian unity. During the last three years a wave of sentiment has swept the country which has opened wide the fields of co-operative social endeavor. Boy scouts, civic centers, elder brother and circles and clubs of many spheres of action have turned the churches swiftly into a current that the centuries had left untouched. The Seattle plans will include the platting of the city into districts, each of which will be studied, classified and indexed. Suburban churches and the prelude to their union as seen in the interminable sequence of union meetings for these many months, will pool their labors and the whole district in which they are placed will be the object of solicitude to their joint attention. A council, composed of representatives of every church in the city, will plan and care for the labors of the whole, strengthening outlying outposts that show weakness, solving problems of duplication and maintaining a house-to-house and individual check upon the entire population of the city. Representation, as tentatively planned, will be based upon membership, and labors will be proportioned in the same manner. This would place Dr. M. A. Matthews, already distinguished for wide missionary zeal in the city and its suburbs, in a position of further influence, and further permit the mother churches downtown to continue to exercise their influence and protection to the churches and missions founded under their care. Parochial lines will disappear, and pastors themselves will move freely from their own church to their neighbors. By the same means, a larger community life is to be developed. In many directions this will go as far as the actual services, but in some cases, notably of the larger churches, this is impossible, and their interests will be confined to the field of social service, which it is planned will comprise everything from the courts and the stockade to the visitors passing through the city.

Jesus Christ and the War.

Before the outbreak of the war in Europe, Sir William Robertson Nicoll published in The British Weekly a series of editorials on "The Difference That Christ is Making." He traced a multitude of particulars in which the ideals of Christ have transformed modern society—many really monumental differences, indeed, which the Christ has made within the last two generations. The Continent suggests that probably Dr. Nicoll would admit now, as a supplement to his series, the sorrowful acknowledgment that Jesus has not yet made enough difference in the world to render war impossible. Yet, continues the Continent, all Christians know that that is not an acknowledgment of powerlessness in Jesus. He would have made even that difference if his followers had been everywhere instant and constant champions of his loving spirit among men. The inevitable confession is that war exists in the world today because men who accepted Christ's name have been, such a host of them, too selfish to live his life.

Christian Unity in Japan.

William Imbrie, the veteran Presbyterian missionary in Japan, has done an excellent service to missionary unity not alone in Japan but in all missionary lands, by publishing a little pamphlet entitled "Church Unity in Japan," which gives the history of all the efforts made since the introduction of Christianity into that empire for the realization of the ideal of one church for the Protestant Christians at least. Dr. Imbrie makes it plain that the situation today is very much better than when he and his companions of four decades since applied themselves to the unification problem.

Dr. Ozora S. Davis, President of Chicago Theological Seminary, Congregational, which will henceforth be affiliated with the University of Chicago on the same basis as the Disciples Divinity House.

Wilson Praises Christian Religion.

At the opening of the Methodist University at Washington, President Wilson declared that "scholarship has usually been more fruitful when associated with religion, and scholarship has never, so far as I can at this moment recollect, been associated with any religion except the religion of Jesus Christ."

Dr. Mott's Trip Postponed.

Owing to the war, the proposed trip of John R. Mott to the near east this fall in the interest of the continuation committee has had to be abandoned. The war has also demoralized the World Christian Association, which has headquarters at Geneva, for three of its leaders, Secretary Fermand, of Switzerland and Secretary Sauttern of France and Secretary Childius of Germany have been recalled to their own countries to fight.

Seattle Pastor to Preach Peace in East.

Dr. Mark A. Matthews has requested a leave of absence covering from six to nine months in 1916, when he plans to visit Japan and China in the interests of international peace. He will also spend some time in the holy land. Dr. Matthews has been pastor of Seattle First Presbyterian Church thirteen years.

Dr. Daniel Bliss, 91.

Dr. Daniel Bliss, founder and president-emeritus of Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, passed his ninety-first birthday Aug. 17. His health is excellent, and, in spite of his years, Dr. Bliss retains a vigor and zest of life that many a younger man might envy. His son, Dr. Howard S. Bliss, is the present president.

Moving Pictures for Church Use.

Dr. William Carter, of New York City, is at work on a great series of Biblical and missionary moving pictures for church use.

Chautauqua Movement Has Birthday.

The chautauqua idea is not dying, although it is forty years old. On August 4, the mother chautauqua at Chautauqua, N. Y., celebrated her fortieth birthday. The origin of the movement is as follows: In 1874 under the leadership of John H. Vincent, later Bishop Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a gathering of Sunday-school teachers and ministers held a conference at Chautauque, N. Y., the outcome of which was the establishment of the chautauqua as an institution. It is reported that this summer 3,000 chautauquas are being held in the towns and cities of the United States to which 8,000,000 persons will have paid admission, amounting to a total of $7,500,000.

Christian Union Idea Again Wins.

At the University of Oregon recently an interdenominational conference was held attended by eighty-one ministers, representing eight religious bodies. The experiment is to be repeated on a larger scale it is reported. A volunteer committee was authorized to make a survey of religious conditions in Oregon and see what might be done to remedy "overchurched" conditions. It was agreed that one enthusiastic, hopeful church, well equipped in every way, would be of far greater value to a community than five feeble churches dragging out a starved existence.

Federal Council to be Incorporated.

Representative Roberts of Massachusetts has introduced a bill for the incorporation in the District of Columbia of the Federal Council of the Church of Christ in America. More than 100 incorporators are named, including clergymen and laymen of virtually all the Protestant denominations. According to the bill the council will be organized for the purpose of promoting friendship service and co-operation among the churches constituting said federal council, securing large efficiency in their work, preventing duplication of effort and expenditure and increasing their influence by united action. The council would be empowered to acquire and hold property in the District of Columbia to the extent of $1,000,000, to be exempt from taxation.

Sunday-school Leaders to South America.

Amid all the wars and rumors of wars nothing has yet transpired to interfere with the cruise of the Sunday-school boat, "Lapland," around South America next January. The vessel will fly a neutral flag and will be sailing entirely in neutral waters far from the scene of probable conflict. The manager of the tour reports that there has been no appreciable falling-off in the bookings. Sunday-school workers who have been disappointed in being forcibly deprived of a trip to Europe might go to South America instead in company with the band of Sunday-school leaders and experts who are to visit the mission stations of all the leading port cities of South America. Those interested are urged to write at once to Mr. Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary of the World's Sunday-school Association, Metropolitan Tower, New York.

Citizenship Day, October 18.

Christian Endeavor leaders, through their good citizenship secretary. Mr. Daniel Poling, are announcing "Citizenship Day" for observance throughout the country October 18. President Wilson writes to Mr. Poling, commending the idea as follows:

Your letter of recent date, which would have been answered sooner had I not been confined to my room with a cold, interests me very much indeed. I want to say very cordially that the observation of a "Good Citizenship Day" seems to me full of possibilities for the right kind of stimulation and instruction in the duties and privileges of good citizenship, and I hope sincerely that the plans for the observation of such a day may be carried to a successful consummation. As for the date to be chosen, I should think that probably the date that you suggest in October would find more people at their homes and at their customary occupations than the date immediately preceding the Fourth of July. Otherwise, I see no ground for preferring the one date to the other."

Congregationalists Report Gains.

The Congregational Year Book has appeared and presents some interesting figures. The reports indicate that substantial gains have been made during the year in membership, in number of churches and in support of missions. The number of churches in 1913 was 6,064; in 1914, 6,096; a gain of 32 churches. To this should be added the number of mission churches belonging to the American Board, 2,168. The 1913 enrollment showed 743,016 members, that of 1914 reaches 750,193, a gain of 7,177. The mission churches of the American Board enroll 83,152 making a grand total of 833,345. Sunday-schools number 698,-010, a gain of 22,333, to which should be added 42,754 in mission and independent schools, making a total enrollment of 740,764. Young people's societies show the last year 124,654, at present 126,565, gaining 1,911 members. Benevolent offerings to societies reach $1,245,185, a gain of $27,665. The total of Congregational benevolence for the year is $2,593,017, a gain of $229,433, and the amount of home expenditures has climbed to a total of $10,812,202, a gain for the year of $1,-504,584. The church has, therefore, recorded gains in every department, of which the financial side appears large. The annual gifts of Congregational churchmen for home purposes, therefore, appear to total over $15 per member, and their contributions to benevolence nearly $4 each. The gain of church members is noticeably double that of the previous year. The average salary of the Congregational minister has reached $970.

Peace Conference Discusses War

The Outbreak of the European War and the Peace Conference at Constance.

BY SIDNEY L. GULICK.

Representative of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

At the very hour when the eighty delegates of the Church Peace Conference should have gathered for their first formal session, they were in full flight for England on the last train from Constance, while on the date set for the Roman Catholic Conference at Liege, that city was repelling a furious attack from a German army, in which nearly 30,000 of the flower of the land were killed or wounded.

But the Protestant Conference was held nevertheless and was not in vain. Lovers of peace saw afresh the urgency of their cause. They realized in actual experience the truth of their utterance that civilization goes forward by credit and good will among men, not by brute force. At the first real suspicion of war, all the customary conveniences of civilization, nay even the necessities of life, vanished as if by magic. Railroads ceased to run. Tens of thousands of travelers were stranded in the midst of hostile lands. Banks closed and not a cent of money could be had, though men might have thousands of dollars duly certified by their letters of credit. Postal and telegraph service and all hotels were entirely disorganized, and also every industrial enterprise, for the orders for mobilization at once withdrew from every establishment all the able-bodied men liable to military service.

Famine at no distant date stares many parts of Europe in the face—widespread and fatal as no natural famine in Europe has ever been. Germany is surrounded by foes prepared either to attack her or at least to defend their neutrality, with all their power. While the rulers of Germany apparently recognize no treaty obligations or solemn pledges of neutrality if they conflict with her interests, it may be well questioned whether the responsible citizenship would justify such international perfidy.

Ominous, to those who have eyes to see, were the fields of ripening grain, many of them partly reaped, abandoned by the tillers to join the armies of destruction. Who will reap the crops and prepare the food needed by every family in the land, to say nothing of the armies? Already old men, women and school children are ordered to the fields to reap the crops. But what can inexperience and weakness accomplish?

No feeling found more common expression among the peace delegates than that of pity and sorrow for Germany; while the soldiers may be fierce the people were friendly. And even the soldiers no doubt believe that the war is essentially one of defence of fatherland rather than that of aggression. The responsibility for the awful situation lies upon the ambitious and unprincipled rulers of the nations who have been deceiving the peoples for a score of years and more, rather than upon the people who want peace. The final responsibility for the war cannot be laid upon Germany or Russia or even Austria alone. It lies rather upon all the nations who have believed that might makes right. Neither England nor France is blameless in this matter.

Such were the sights that greeted our eyes as we gathered at Constance when the crisis was reaching its climax and that we experienced as we fled on the last train that left Constance for Cologne. At every station were hundreds seeking in vain for passage. Soldiers everywhere dominated. Several refugees who took our train told of brutal scenes of murder and bloodshed which they had just witnessed on railway platforms when suspects protested or resented arrest. In all probability it will never be known how many were killed even without the formality of a court martial, in the days preceding the declaration of war.

At the informal meetings of the Peace Conference held on Sunday, important business was transacted. When it was certain, late Sunday night that we should take the train Monday morning one regular session of the conference was held, four important resolutions were passed and then we adjourned to meet at The Hague or some other place to be decided by the committee.

German newspapers were unable to get or to publish much news, so we little knew what was actually happening. But we learned later how the chancellors of every nation professed to be working strenuously for peace while the whole of Europe drifted helplessly into war. Even before our train left Constance and several days before war was actually declared between the nations, military reprisals and clashings were occurring here and there.

Our safe and relatively comfortable trip through Germany was in large measure due to the strenuous exertion of Pastor Siegmund-Schultze, the only German pastor to attend the congress. He came at the special request of Emperor William, and, by his personal relations with the Emperor and consequent influence with local officials, rendered us invaluable service.

As we approached the border land, we passed train loads of soldiers, horses, artillery, "food for powder." It was soon clear that we would better be entirely out of the Continent. Crossing over to England, German warships and British naval patrols justified to us the decision of our committee.

On the eventful day in which England declared war on Germany, and Germans attacked Liege, our conference held its one and closing session in London. It filled our hearts with anguish to think that thousands of troops we had seen hurrying to the front had been killed and wounded in that treacherous attack on neutral Belgium. By that deed and what Sir Edward Grey described as Germany's "infamous proposal" in regard to France, Germany made hesitant England her bitter foe.

While the preachers of peace may seem to the world to have accomplished nothing, and the Peace Conference to have been a monstrous fiasco, never before has the need of machinery for maintaining peace been so evident. And the incalculable disaster that has overtaken Europe will prove a mighty and drastic lesson, enforcing as words never can, the eternal principles proclaimed by the preachers of peace. Disarmament has begun on a mighty scale. The nations will soon be calling for peace. This frightful war can hardly fail to advance the peace cause by a hundred years or more. The fallacies of "peace through readiness of war," and "peace preserved by armaments" have exploded with disastrous effects.

Of Human Interest

Tolstoi's War Prophecy.

A remarkable prophecy of a vast European war made by the late Count Leo Tolstoi in the presence of his grandniece, the Countess Nastasia, and by her sent to the American press, is of much interest at this time. The countess at the Czar's request had asked her uncle for a message which she could carry Czar Nicholas, and which could later be sent to the Kaiser and the King of England; and in reply the famous author and reformer described a vision he had often beheld of a great war soon to devastate Europe. His description of the coming event was as follows:

"This is a revelation of events of a universal character, which must shortly come to pass. Their spiritual outlines are now before my eyes.

"I see floating upon the surface of the sea of human fate the huge silhouette of a nude woman. She is—with her beauty, her poise, her smile, her jewels—a super-Venus.

"Nations rush madly after her, each of them eager to attract her especially. But she, like an eternal courtesan, flirts with all. In all hair-ornaments of diamonds and rubies is engraved her name, 'Commercialism.'

"As alluring and bewitching as she seems, much destruction and agony follow in her wake. Her breath, reeking of sordid transactions, her voice of metallic character like gold, and her look of greed are so much poison to the nations who fall victims to her charms.

"And, behold, she has three gigantic arms with three torches of universal corruption in her hand.

"The first torch represents the flame of war, that the beautiful courtesan carries from city to city and country to country. Patriotism answers with flashes of honest flame, but the end is the roar of guns and musketry.

"The second torch bears the flame of bigotry and hypocrisy. It carries the lamps only in temples and on the altars of sacred institutions. It carries the seed of falsity and fanaticism. It kindles the minds that are still in cradles and follows them to their graves.

"The third torch is that of the law, that dangerous foundation of all unauthentic traditions, which first does its fatal work in the family, then sweeps through the larger worlds of literature, art and statesmanship.

"The great conflagration will start about 1912, set by the torch of the first arm in the countries of Southeastern Europe. It will result in a destructive calamity in 1913.

"In that year I see all Europe in flames and bleeding. I hear the lamentations of huge battlefields.

"But about the year 1915 a strange figure from the North—a new Napoleon—enters the stage of the bloody drama. He is a man of little militaristic training, a writer or a journalist, but in his grip most of Europe will remain till 1925.

"The end of the great calamity will mark a new political era for the Old World. There will be left no empires and kingdoms, but the world will form a federation of the United States of Nations. There will remain only four great giants—the Anglo-Saxons, the Latins, the Slavs and the Mongolians."

Doctor Wu As Matchmaker.

"Once I was an involuntary matchmaker," says Wu Ting Fang in a reminiscent chapter of his book, "America through the Spectacles of an Oriental Diplomat." "Some years ago, during my first mission in Washington, I was invited to attend the wedding of the daughter of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. When I entered the breakfast room, I saw the bridesmaids and a number of young men.

"Going up to one of the bridesmaids, whom I had previously met and who was the daughter of a Senator, I asked her when it would be her turn to become a bride. She modestly said that she did not know, as she had not yet had an offer. Turning to the group of young men who were in the room, I jocularly remarked to one of them, 'This is a beautiful lady. Would you not like to marry her?' He replied, 'I shall be most delighted to.' Then I said to the young lady, 'Will you accept his offer?' She seemed slightly embarrassed, and said something to the effect that as she did not know the gentleman, she could not give a definite answer.

"After a few days, I met the young lady at an 'At Home' party, when she scolded me for being so blunt with her before the young men. I told her I was actuated by the best of motives. A few months later I received an invitation from the young lady's parents, asking me to be present at the wedding of their daughter. I thought I would go and find out whether the bridegroom was the young man whom I had introduced to the young lady, and as soon as I entered the house, the mother of the bride, to my agreeable surprise, informed me that it was I who had first brought the young couple together, and both the bride and the bridegroom heartily thanked me for my good offices."

Edison On Sunday-school Teaching.

Mr. Thomas A. Edison recently opened up in a most suggestive way the possibilities in the field of unselfish service in the Sunday-school and the Junior Christian Endeavor society. He said:

"Teach a child of four that the moon is made of green cheese; and, though you give him a thorough scientific education afterwards, there will always be at the bottom of his mind a feeling that the moon is somehow possibly made of green cheese.

"See how religious beliefs implanted in childhood stay with the adult in spite of everything. Montessori has the right idea. It is necessary to take them young and to teach morality and character, to fix ideas in those plastic minds so that it will be impossible for them to think wrong or do wrong. What we want to do in this world is to eradicate the crooks, high and low, and to do that we must begin early and prevent them from growing crooked at the start."

You see, Edison's ordination is not so different from Hiram Bingham's—"I hereby ordain you to go [into the Sunday-school] and do all the good you can."

Ollie James Tells Lawyer Story.

The Green Bag credits Senator Ollie James with the following story of a young man in Louisville who recently hung up his "shingle" as attorney at law:

One afternoon a friend, on entering the young man's office, observed an alarm clock on the desk.

"That's a good idea," said the friend. "A man is very likely to oversleep these fine spring mornings."

The youthful attorney smiled sadly. "That alarm clock was not bought for the reason you mention," said he. "I merely keep it here to wake me when it is time to go home."

A Professor Story.

It is told of a learned professor, who was better at Greek than golf, that after a round on the links, in which he had foozled most of his shots, he turned to his caddie for advice as to improving his play. The reply of the ruthless caddie was: "Ye see, sir, it's easy to teach laddies Latin and Greek; but it needs a head for gowff."—Tit-bits.

Why He Married.

Rector (to yokel who is about to get married)—"But, Peter, can you really afford to keep a wife?"

Peter—"Well, zur, I can almost afford to keep myself, and it's a poor woman that can't help a bit."

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

"Granny's" Tribute.

The Rev. Mr. Lawrence had boarded for so long a time with the Granby family that when he was obliged to remove to a new field of labor, the family keenly felt his loss.

"The best pastor we've ever had in this town," declared Father Granby heartily. "I don't expect to see his equal again."

"Such good company," said Mother Granby; "and so sympathetic if the least thing went wrong."

"He was the easiest man to cook for I ever knew," contributed Aunt Ann. "He was always satisfied with what he had to eat, and he never grumbled."

"He had such a serene disposition," sighed Sister Laura. "He brought an atmosphere of peace whenever he came into the house."

"Granny" Granby, in her corner by the fireplace, shook her head dolefully as she added her tribute of affection.

"I'll miss him dretfully," she mourned. "He was the best hand at ketching moth-millers ever I did see."—The Youth's Companion.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

SECRETARY BRYAN A SUFFRAGIST.

William Jennings Bryan has come out for equal suffrage. In a formal statement issued recently, Mr. Bryan, for the first time, took a decided stand, and asserted that he would support the constitutional amendment this fall in Nebraska, his own state. He would ask no political right for himself, he declared, that he was not willing to grant his wife.

From no other person in the country, except President Wilson, could a statement of such significance come. It is more than the mere declaration of principle of a Secretary of State; it is the carefully weighed announcement of a man who for eighteen years has been the dominant figure in the Democratic Party, and who in 1912 dictated the nomination of Mr. Wilson himself.

The statement follows in full:

"The voters of Nebraska will, at the election next November, adopt or reject a proposed amendment extending suffrage to women on equal terms with men. As a citizen of that state it will be my duty to participate in the decision to be rendered at the polls. I have delayed expressing an opinion on this subject, partly because I have been seeking information, and partly because my time has been occupied with national questions upon which the entire country was acting, but now that the issue is presented in my state, I take my position. I shall support the amendment. I shall ask no political rights for myself that I am not willing to grant to my wife."

ARE WIVES DEPENDENTS?

What we may be coming to when woman suffrage is a little more widespread was amusingly illustrated in the U. S. House of Representatives during a recent debate. The proposition was pending to change the mileage system so as to allow a member of Congress to receive traveling expenses for himself and dependent members of his family. The following is taken from the Congressional Record:

"Mr. Bryan of Washington.—What does the word 'dependent' mean, anyway? We do not in our country recognize that a wife is dependent on her husband. Wives are not so considered. A member from the state of Washington could not bring his wife under that section of the law, certainly, because a wife is not a dependent of a husband out West. (Applause.) No man out there would dare tell 4,000,000 women voters that they are dependent on men. It would not work at all. It is not true."

"Mr. Alexander of Missouri.—Then, if we agree to this proposition, we are going to raise an issue between ourselves and the suffragettes?"

"Mr. Bryan.—Well, I will say to the gentleman that to call a wife a dependent of the husband would not work. There is a woman candidate for Congress out in one of the districts, and she is likely to bring her husband with her. I do not know. (Laughter.) Will he be dependent? (Laughter.) So I say this is so indefinite and so uncertain that I do not think we ought to adopt that kind of a provision."

It is pleasant to see prominent public men resenting the description of a wife as a dependent. Equal suffrage tends to develop the attitude of mind that recog- the work of the wife and mother as having solid value. When Molly Elliott Seawell first made her amazing assertion that a married woman would lose her right to maintenance if she got a vote, Chief Justice Sullivan, of Idaho, wrote to the Woman's Journal that no such result had followed in his state. He added (Woman's Journal, Nov. 12, 1910):

"In this Western country we do not consider the wife a 'dependent' or a 'kept woman,' nor is she such. The wives and mothers do their share of the breadwinning and maintenance of themselves and families, even though they do not go out and earn wages. The wife who remains at home and attends to her household duties and raises her family is not a dependent in the eyes of the people of our Western States."

"So long as half the population are debarred from national housekeeping, the work must remain half done," says Rose Henderson, probation officer of Montreal. "The function of government is no longer merely to legislate for naval grants, railway franchises and bonuses and guarantees to banks, nor yet laws to protect property, pigs, corn and bugs. The new function of government is humanitarian, to protect life before property; and since women are the life-givers and the principal educators and natural protectors of each new generation, it is but to be expected that they should see more clearly how best to protect that life and bring it to the highest state of efficiency. When she is given that modern, civilized weapon, the ballot, she will use it in defence of her home and children as her prehistoric ancestor used her club in defence of her cave and offspring from the beasts of the jungle."

MRS. CARSE MAKES APPEAL

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president of the board of the Woman's Temple, Chicago, erected as a memorial to Frances Willard, and founder of the temple, has issued an appeal to the national organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to unite in paying off a $600,000 mortgage on the Temple building in an effort to make it a lasting memorial to their former leader, Frances Willard. The organization is in arrears $27,500 which has been overdue since last April.

WOMAN GIVES MONEY TO GIVE BIBLE TO THE PEOPLE.

The will of the late Mrs. Morris K. Jesup leaves large sums ranging from $10,000 to $400,000 to thirty-five religious institutions and organizations. The bulk of the money was left for missionary and educational work. Syrian Protestant College received $400,000. Yale University and Union Theological Seminary received $300,000 each. Presbyterian Home and Foreign Missions, $150,000 each. Of special interest, aside from the large sum given to the world's work, is this simple request concerning the use of the money given to the Union Theological Seminary: "I give and bequeath to the Union Theological Seminary in the city of New York $300,000, to constitute a permanent fund, to be called 'The Morris K. Jesup Fund,' so much of the income as may be necessary to be applied to the maintenance of a chair for the teaching of the English Bible, pure and simple, not by way of criticism, but, taking it as it reads, to instruct students how to teach and preach it in the most simple and effectual way to reach the hearts of our people."

Women of 26 Countries to Make Demands For Peace

A copy of this appeal has been sent by the officers of the National American Woman Suffrage Association to the organized Suffragists of twenty-six countries.
—The Editor.

The cloud of a great international war darkens all Europe and the shadow of the conflict hangs over all the nations of the world, insuring disaster to all people and the turning back of civilization for a century to come.

During the past hundred years women have given their toil not only to motherhood and the cares of family life, but also to the building up of the great industries of every country. They have devoted thought and energy and have made great sacrifices to develop education and establish reforms for the betterment of humanity. Hundreds of thousands have sacrificed their lives to the life-giving vocation of motherhood.

Yet, without one thought of the sufferings and sacrifices of mothers who have reared sons, or of the tremendous industrial burdens that war will impose upon women, who will have to do their own work and the work of the men called to the field of battle; without consideration of the little children who will have to be taken from school or play for industrial toil thus wantonly imposed upon them by the government whose duty it is to protect and shield them, this curse of a mediaeval war is thrust upon those whose will and wish have not been consulted.

Is it that hundreds of thousands of their sons may go down to death before the terrible machinery of modern war that the nations call upon women to give their youth, their years of toil and their labor for a higher civilization? Have they reared sons only to become prey to the ambition of kings and exploiters?

The suffragists of the United States call upon the women of the world to arise in protest against this unspeakable wrong and to show war-crazed men that between the contending armies there stand thousands of women and children who are the innocent victims of men's unbridled ambitions; that under the heels of each advancing army are crushed the lives, the hopes, the happiness of countless women whose rights have been ignored, whose homes have been blighted and whose honor will be sacrificed if this unholy war does not cease and reason and justice take the place of hate, revenge and greed. This is not a national issue; it involves all humanity.

Let the women of every nation involved in war make their men understand that the highest patriotism lies in conserving life, wealth and energy; and that war means not conservation but destruction of all that is best in civilization.

Disciples Table Talk

Vacation School in Cleveland Church.

What to do with the children during the vacation season is being solved by the Broadway Church in Cleveland, Ohio. Under the direction of the pastor, F. D. Butchart, a vacation school was organized this summer. At once the school won favor in the community. Six trained teachers and many assistants were required to handle the average daily attendance of 200. Practically all the different nationalities of the community were represented and the total enrollment was over 500. Ten per cent of these children have also become members of the Sunday-school.

Springfield Poet Honored.

For several years the verse of Nicholas Vachel Lindsay has been appearing in the magazines and in books. The Chicago Herald, under its new management, is keen enough to perceive that Mr. Lindsay's muse needs a more popular medium for the proclamation of his message and within the last two weeks has turned over a column of the Herald's editorial page to the Illinois poet. Specimens of the Lindsay verse appear daily, the Herald claiming rights of first publication on all Mr. Lindsay writes. The column is headed "Rhymes from Sangamon County."

Indianapolis Church Has Free Clinic.

For the past six months the Hillside Church of Indianapolis has maintained a free clinic and medical dispensary in the basement of the church, treating in this time more than 150 men, women and children. Treatment is limited to diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat and persons admitted to treatment are of the poor class. A careful discrimination between the classes of patients has been made, and those in charge of the clinic assert that no one has attempted to abuse the plan of free treatments. The services of the physicians and nurses are free. Dr. A. A. Eikenberry has been placed in charge of all surgical work, and is assisted by Drs. James and Roy Egbert. The Christamore Settlement is assisting in the work and has sent Miss Della Bushaw, a trained nurse, to care for the patients. Miss Bushaw is assisted by volunteer nurses from the church, Mrs. James Dunbar, and Mrs. A. Hul-.

New Church Nearly Completed.

Work on the new church at Marion, Ill., is proceeding rapidly and the building will very soon be ready for occupancy. When completed this will be one of the most handsome and conveniently arranged church buildings in Marion.

Church Reorganizes.

At Battle Creek, Mich., the church of Christ has reorganized under the name Central Christian Church. This was a necessary step before beginning their new church building. A new and more favorable location has been secured and building operations will begin at once. Plans are under consideration for making a flat building out of the old structure. That this church is becoming more aggressive in its work is evidenced by its business-like reorganization which necessitated the election of new officers throughout; by the launching of building plans for an adequate structure: and further by the program of preaching which has been projected by the pastor, M. H. Gerrard.

Chicago Minister Goes to Indiana.

J. D. Hull has accepted a call to the Portland, Indiana, church. Some months ago Mr. Hull resigned his work as resident minister of the Metropolitan Church in Chicago. During his ministry the Metropolitan secured control of the People's Theater building and converted it into a church, with enlarged plans for institutional work.

Church Building a Gym.

In making plans for a new church edifice the Fairmont, Minn., church has provided the people of that city with a much needed social service. The community had no Y. M. C. A. and no gymnasium equipment of any kind. The new church will have an athletic department with full gymnasium equipment and will organize social features corresponding to the regular Y. M. C. A. Memberships will be sold on a basis to sustain the work. This venture is meeting the approval and support of the whole community.

Charles A. Finch Finishes Tour.

Chas. A. Finch, who at the beginning of the summer resigned the pastorate of the First Church at Topeka, Kansas, has just finished a month's swing around the Chautauqua circuit in the states of Missouri, Arkansas, and Oklahoma. The Redpath bureau was well pleased with the reception of Mr. Finch. Everywhere he was greeted with large and appreciative audiences. Mr. Finch was pastor of the First Church at Topeka for more than a dozen years. The church was very reluctant to accept his resignation and upon his return from his recent lecturing tour a large congregation turned out to hear him on Sunday morning.

F. D. Butchart, pastor of Broadway Church, Cleveland, which has conducted a successful vacation school during the summer.

The Blind Leading Well.

At Marion, Kansas, the Christian church is next to the largest in the town. The M. E. congregation, of which Ex-Gov. E. W. Hoch is the most prominent member, leads the Disciples by a small majority. The minister of the Disciples' church is I. A. Wilson, who lost his sight in his youth. Mr. Wilson was educated in the state school for the blind in Ohio and in 1895 was ordained to the ministry. For a number of years he traveled and lectured. For the past five years he has been leading the Marion church and under his leadership the church has made a steady growth.

Sunday-school Contest for Fall.

Preparations are being made for a lively Sunday-school contest between the First of Davenport and the Capitol Hill of Des Moines, Iowa. The contest is to begin October 1. Each of these schools has a large enrollment. It is hoped to bring the regular attendance up to 80 per cent of the enrollment by the enthusiasm of this contest. The Davenport school with an enrollment of a thousand names expects to maintain an average attendance of 800 during September in order to be fully ready for the contest. The average attendance at this school during the summer has been about 400.

Ellsworth Faris Comes to Chicago.

For the past year Ellsworth Faris has been teaching in the state university of Iowa, taking the place of Prof. E. D. Starbuck, who was away on a year's leave of absence. Prof. Starbuck has returned to his work and Mr. Faris has accepted a position in the University of Chicago in the department of psychology. He will also lecture twice a week during the year at the Art Institute of Chicago for the benefit of those interested in psychology. Mr. Faris has just passed successfully the final examination for the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Chicago. The number of Disciples now on the faculty at the University of Chicago is considerably larger than at any previous time in the history of the institution.

F. D. Farrell to Hannibal, Mo.

South Side Church, at Hannibal, Mo., has extended a call to F. D. Farrell of Shenandoah, Iowa, and he has accepted. Mr. Farrell is an alumnus of Hiram College and has done considerable graduate work in the University of Chicago. He has had sixteen years of experience in the ministry, having held several important pastorates in Iowa.

H. G. Connelly Closes Successful Ministry.

H. G. Connelly is beginning his ministry with the Central, at New Albany, Indiana, this week. He was for the past three years pastor of the Grand Avenue Church at Minneapolis, Minn. His ministry at Minneapolis was a fruitful one. There were 146 additions to the congregation, the Sunday-school was greatly increased in attendance and efficiency, and a fine building site secured. The Grand Avenue Church is now regarded as the most promising of the twin city churches. One of the most singificant features of Mr. Connelly's work in Minneapolis has been his ability to inspire young people to choose the Christian ministry. During the three years ten young men and women have decided to dedicate their lives to the Master's service. Six young men are already preaching, and still another has decided for the ministry. Three young women have volunteered for the foreign field. Four of the young men are students in the University of Minnesota. Two of the closing services of Mr. Connelly's ministry at the Grand Avenue Church were for the purpose of ordaining two of the young men, Burton Hoffman and Maurice Rossman. S. T. Willis, of the First, St. Paul, S. G. Fisher, of Portland Ave., assisted in these ordination services.

MEXICO FAVORS PROTESTANT MISSIONS

S. G. Inman is again at Piedras Negras, Coahuila, in Mexico after his long trip through Latin America, visiting our mission fields, and studying religious and social conditions. He reports that on his return to Mexico he finds a greater interest in Protestant missions than ever before. The recent action of the governor of Nueva Leon in closing the convents and stopping the confessional has called forth widespread approval in all parts of the country. This action will no doubt be followed by many other governors. An ex-mayor of Piedras Negras, who had never shown any interest in the religious work of the mission said to Mr. Inman, as he welcomed him home: "I see by the American press that the Protestant forces are planning a great campaign in Mexico. This delights me beyond expression. We are ready to receive you with open arms. Mexico has had enough of the Catholic Church, and her mixing in our affairs, plotting against our liberty and keeping the people in ignorance. Our new leaders will have no more of it. Come on with the preaching of your reform doctrine. You will be astounded at how the whole country is anxious to hear you." It will be remembered that General Carranza has been for a long time a firm friend of "The People's Institute" and of Mr. Inman personally, and when he was governor of Coahuila caused the legislature to vote a subsidy both for the institute and our school at Sabinas. Many other prominent members of the Constitutional party have promised their hearty support in the establishment of similar educational plants.

INDIANA HEADQUARTERS AT ATLANTA

Indiana will have a large delegation at Atlanta, the largest, probably, of any state north of the Ohio river. Many who are expecting to be at the convention have expressed a desire to have a common meeting place for all from this good state. After talking to many who are interested, and investigating the local conditions, a number of us have decided to make the Hotel Ansley our headquarters.

This hotel has many advantages. It is located in the heart of the city. It is large, commodious and absolutely fire proof. You will see the picture of this hotel, with full announcement on the first page of the "Indiana Worker" for September. The manager, Wm. R. Secker, is an Indiana man, having been in one of the largest hotels of Indianapolis until the first of January, this year. He will be glad to see Indiana people. You may be assured that you will receive a hearty welcome from him. Remember that, if you do not take rooms at this hotel, you are invited to make it a meeting place for all Indiana people. Let us develop the Indiana spirit and get the very most possible from our conventions.

I shall be glad to do anything I can in the way of helping you to secure rooms in this hotel, before and during the convention. On to Atlanta—then to the Hotel Ansley.

C. W. CAUBLE,
Secretary.

FROM THE GENERAL CONVENTION SECRETARY.

I am just home from five weeks spent in the northwest and on the Pacific Coast. I went in the interest of the general convention. I attended the state conventions of Minnesota, West Washington, Northern and Southern California, speaking at each of them on "The Origin and Purposes of the General Convention." I was pleased to find that the general convention is in favor wherever it is sympathetically presented. Its twofold purpose of joining the missionary societies in presenting the united missionary apportionment to all the churches and in seeking to secure equitable representation from the churches in the annual convention makes a strong appeal to the wisdom and good business sense of our people.

While attending the Southern California Convention, an informal conference was held with some of those who are to be the leaders in the entertainment of the convention of 1915. I feel sure that this conference will make it easy for the best possible preparations to be made for next year's convention.

So far as I can judge from my connection with this general convention work, it is rapidly growing in favor among our people and I am confident that if it is wisely directed it will soon prove its usefulness in building up the co-operative life of all our churches.

Every indication is that we are to have a large attendance at the Atlanta Convention and that many churches will take sufficient interest in this convention to select and send representatives. In the interest of good order and of efficiency, I sincerely trust that the churches will give earnest heed to the call being sent by the Attendance Committee for an Every-Church Convention. Within the near future a letter will be sent to each church enclosing representatives' certificates with request that the church select and send to the Atlanta Convention its quota of representatives as is provided for in the simple constitution of the general convention.

Corresponding Secretary.

FT. WORTH WORK PROSPERS.

A recent issue of the Record, of Ft. Worth, Texas, gives nearly a page to the story of the career of Magnolia Avenue Church, of which E. M. Waits is pastor. This work has had a remarkable growth, having been established in 1898. Thirty-nine men were present at their meeting of organization. The only assets were empty pocket-books and willing hearts. In 1910 it dedicated a great building at Fifth and Throckmorton and a decade later dedicated another property valued at $50,000 at Magnolia Avenue. The church is now free from debt, has a building that can accommodate an audience of 1,200 people, a model of utility and convenience, having thirty separate class-rooms with blackboards, annunciators and other equipment. The church has recently installed a handsome pipe organ of the latest model. The church has a large Endeavor society, a wide-awake Ladies' Aid, a Missionary society of eighty members and since 1909 has supported its living link missionary in China. It has also fine organizations of both junior and intermediate Endeavor societies. Its pastors have been Homer T. Wilson, 1898-

The Scavenger Curse

You Can't Stop it, Mr. Clergyman! Can You? Neither Can You, Mr. Editor! Think You Can?

Scavenger Books are tablets of infamy on the highway of life; they pervert minds and morals, and bring, ultimately, race degeneracy.

Literary Scavengers for the rewards of crooked, distorted fame breed moral pestilence and spiritual disease.

Scavenger Publishers prostitute capital and business for dollars to be envied by the dollarless; sear consciences, betray the home and outrage womanhood.

The Combined Forces of Decency Make This Appeal, as Laymen, for the United Effort of Press and Pulpit, Everywhere.

Greeting: Respectability and decency in the light of divine truth are synonymous; but when measured by our modern standards they are vastly different.

What is the difference? When is one respectable and not decent? When is one decent and not respectable? Can one be decent and respectable? Can one be respectable and decent?

You should answer these questions seriously and drive your answers with force straight to the hearts of all lovers of home and purity within the scope of your influence.

Read "The Eyes of the World"—published August 8th—and you will realize the need of your effort.

Harold Bell Wright has told this delightful romance so convincingly and has so clearly defined the underlying purpose of the story that it is stamped with the truthfulness of a chapter out of real life. The theme "the ministry of art and letters" is most opportune for the cause of more wholesome books.

The fight for decency in literature will triumph only through an aroused public conscience. Human law does not prohibit scavenger books nor does it provide adequate punishment for authors and publishers that count greatest in art that which in story and picture and music and play most effectively arouses the basest passions of which the human being is capable.

Murder has no place in the inventory of crime of Scavenger Publishers and Literary Scavengers. To destroy innocence, to kill virtue, to murder a soul, these are commonplaces in their insane philosophy.

They are not educated to the thought of taking a life—they are trained to consider its perversion. The heroes in their fiction do not kill men—they betray women. The heroines in their stories do not desire the death of their betrayers—they love them, and desert their husbands for them.

We are spending $100,000 in this campaign because the issue is above commercialism. It is a ministry—a part of our endeavor to make a life ministry of publishing.

Man never fought a harder fight or fought with better equipment than the fight we are making against the foes of decency with "The Eyes of the World."

When we began last March taking full pages in the Magazines, Scavenger Books, Scavenger Publishers and Literary Scavengers were playing to the gallery with the parquet holding its breath. Now the parquet is in righteous indignation and the gallery is slinking away in disgust.

The time is opportune for dealing a deadly blow to unclean literature.

We have the unanimous support of the bookseller, everywhere. Give us also the support of the press and pulpit, and decency will triumph over filth and vulgarity, lust and sensuality, vice and crime in literature and art and music and drama.

To the youth and manhood strength of the nation is due the combined and simultaneous effort of every lover of the race.

Harold Bell Wright's books are the germ of a new order of fiction. "That Printer of Udell's," "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Calling of Dan Matthews," "The Winning of Barbara Worth" and "Their Yesterdays" are an inheritance for the boys and girls of today who are the men and women of tomorrow.

"The Eyes of the World" is a ripping romance of 464 pages of wholesome action, plot, counterplot, mystery and love, sweet sentiment and strong passions. One Half Million copies were sold before publication—August 8th.

The church has a present membership of 750. The Sunday-school at Magnolia Avenue is modern, employing a paid director of religious education. A band of Boy Scouts have become famous for their work for the church. Although accomodations of this church seemed ample five years ago, it already has outgrown them, and plans are being made for some improvement and reconstruction that will give the church room commensurate with the great social, educational and spiritual work that it already has under way. Certain plans already have been submitted but were not thought quite equal to the emergency, and Sept. 1 of this year was set by the board for a thorough and decisive consideration of the matter.

Illinois Disciples' History Ready.

The committee on the History of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois wish to secure agents in the several counties of the State for the sale and wide distribution of the book. R. E. Henry, chairman of the committee, asks that those interested in the proposition please confer with the committee at the Decatur convention, September 7-10. Mr. Henry's address is Havana, Ill.

Christian University to Change Name.

There is a decided movement among the leading educators of the Disciples to eliminate the term university from the name of our colleges. The prevailing opinion is that we have entirely too many pseudo-universities among us. A statement in the Christian University Bulletin for August indicates that this institution is seeking a name more in keeping with the present scope of the school: "Christian University was founded in 1852. It was hoped at that time that the institution might become a university in fact as well as in name. That hope has never been realized, and it is no longer felt to be desirable to try to realize it. The name then becomes a misnomer, creating an unfavorable impression in educational circles. There is universal desire that it should be changed bringing it into harmony with present ideals for the scope of the institution. It is proposed to allow the name to stand for the original ideal and to adopt, by resolution of the Board of Trustees, a new name to designate the undergraduate, academic department which is the only part of the comprehensive plan existing in the minds of its founders that has as yet been realized. The Board of Trustees will be glad to have suggestions as to this name. Letters should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board of Trustees and should be received not later than December 1.

Rev. E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Ave., Ft. Worth, Tex., which church has made a fine record of achievement.

R. W. Abberley on Heartfelt Religion.

On a recent Sunday evening at Magnolia Avenue Church, at Los Angeles, Cal., R. W. Abberley took for his text, "Having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof." His sermon abounded in striking antithises such as the following:

"You cannot be a devout Christian and a tricky trader; a true worshipper and a bad neighbor; an exemplary church-member and a tyrannical employer. There is as much difference between the form of Godliness and the power of it, as there is between a counterfeit coin and genuine money. A mere form is no more true religion than a stuffed animal is a real animal. An empty profession with no heart religion is like a hollow tree which is the home of bats, owls and reptiles. A false heart is the habitation of devils. True religion, on the other hand, is the source of every virtue; it transforms the character, beautifies the life, and blesses the world."

Dallas Pastor Resigns.

For six years J. O. Shelburne has been the aggressive pastor of the Central church in Dallas, Texas. During that time the church has made splendid progress and Mr. Shelburne has become recognized as one of the most prominent religious leaders of the city. His many friends regret to learn that his condition of health will not permit him to continue as pastor of the Central where the magnitude of the work is such that very heavy duties fall on the pastor. Mr. Shelburne will accept the position of secretary and treasurer of the Dallas Sales and Salvage Company. However he states that it is not his intention to retire permanently from the ministry.

eign Society, dated Manila, August 18, reads as follows: "Because of America's peaceable intentions a splendid opportunity presents itself for Missions. Have arrived. All well."

These brethren certainly interpret the present world situation properly. Our churches never before had such an opportunity presented. America enjoys the fullest confidence of all the nations of Asia. While more than one-half of the world's population is in a state of war, America is at peace with all mankind. We are in a position to consistently preach the gospel of peace. It is time for us to be at our task with increased zeal. We should labor and pray for the reign of the Prince of Peace in all hearts. This is a time to cheer the hearts of the missionaries in the forefront of the battle.

F. M. RAINS,
Secretary.

FOREIGN SOCIETY NOTES.

Dr. C. L. Pickett, Laoag, P. I., reports twenty conversions during the month of May, and nearly 1,500 treatments at the hospital.

The new session of the Bible College, Manila, P. I., was opened June 15, by Prof. B. L. Kershner. Forty students were enrolled. One class begins as early as 5:45 a. m., each day. Some schools do not begin so early in this country.

A new press has been installed by the missionaries in Manila. During one month there were 825 new subscribers to our monthly which is published by the Mission.

B. L. Kershner and wife received a most hearty reception by all the city churches in Manila upon their return from their furlough in America.

A new chapel has been built at Los Banos, P. I. In May there were forty-one additions.

Let it be borne in mind that the books of the Foreign Society close for the current missionary year on September 30. All pledges should be paid and every church and Sunday-school should be represented by an offering.

Last week the Foreign Society received $2,000 as a direct gift from a friend in Texas.

September will be a busy month for Dr. Royal J. Dye. He speaks at Peoria, Ill.; the New England Convention, Haverhill, Mass., September 10-13; a group of six churches in Eagle Valley, Pa., September 15-21, Western Pennsylvania Convention, September 23, also a County Convention, Veedersburg, Ind., September 27.

During the first eighteen days of August there was a gain in the receipts from the churches, as churches, of $1,344, but there was a loss in the total receipts of $1,331. The gains from the churches on the year amount to $9,878.36.

A. MCLEAN,
President.

PROGRESS IN PENSIONS AND OFFERINGS.

The pension payments of the Board of Ministerial Relief now average almost as much each month as the quarterly payments of two years ago before the 20 per cent proposition went into effect.

The total receipts for the ten months of the current year to August 1, are $23,822. Of his amount $3,042 came from interest on the permanent fund, which now amounts to over $60,000, made up mostly of bequests and annuities.

The interest deducted from the total receipts leaves $20,780 that counts on the 20 per cent proposition. The receipts for August and September must bring this up to $30,000 to secure the $6,000 extra from our generous friend. Of course we cannot think of stopping short of this amount, but it is only by the faithful loyalty of all friends that the goal can be reached.

The church offerings received in July were almost twice those of one year ago, both in number and amount. This gain we attribute to the growing favor of the work and to the steady extension of the budget plan and the every-member canvass.

The pension roll now carries 107 names, including many of the most illustrious in our history. Several others will be added at the next meeting of the board. To justify the advance without reducing the payments, which after all the increases are still on a mere subsistence basis, three persons have recently volunteered to become living-links, by the payment of $100 per year. Many new contributors have joined the fellowship with smaller amounts.

BRITISH CHRISTIAN OPINION ON THE WAR.

BY SIR ROBERTSON NICOL

may overtake it. I say," Mr. Redmond went on, "that the government may tomorrow withdraw every one of her troops from Ireland. I say that the coasts of Ireland will be defended from foreignn invasion by our armed sons, and for this purpose armed Nationalists Catholics in the South will be only too glad to join arms with the armed Protestant Ulstermen in the North. Is it too much to hope that out of this situation there may spring a result which will be good, not merely to the empire, but good for the future welfare and integrity of the Irish people?" Amid the many ill omens which seemed to throng over and darken the house of commons it is with the utmost thankfulness that we welcome words like these. We can now say, "Great Britain and Ireland" without a sense of irony, without a sense of pain.

So far our people have shown an admirable temper. The jingo lyre is mute, and we hope it will continue to be mute. There are wretches who revel in the in the roar of the British lion, and love war—at a safe distance from themselves. It does not become us to fling about menaces in all directions. Jingoism is the offspring of the tavern, of which it reeks, and the offspring of the tavern is never strong. The work before us is strong work. The trial we are to meet will be a most testing trial. What we need is calm determination and devotion. Before the end we shall need the services in one capacity or another of the whole manhood of the country.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 20.

Memory Verses, 34-36.

Golden text.—Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me.—Matt. 25-45.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(31) But when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory: (32) and before him shall be gathered all the nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats: (33) and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. (34) Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundations of the world: (35) for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: (36) naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. (37) Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, and fed thee? or athirst, and gave thee drink? (38) And when saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? (39) And when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? (40) And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me. (41) Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand; Depart from me, ye cursed, into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels: (42) for I was hungry, and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; (43) I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not, (44) Then shall they also answer, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? (45) Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me. (46) And these shall go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life.

Verse by Verse.

BY C. C. BUCKNER.

v. 31. But when the Son of man shall come in his glory: See Matt. 24:30.

v. 32 And before him shall be gathered all the nations: The Jews and the Gentiles. And he shall separate them one from another as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats: The classification is based on righteousness. The good are separated from the bad.

v. 33. Sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left: Lovers of God are commonly spoken of in the Bible as sheep and lambs. Some one has said that a goat is "selfishness on legs." While it is true that sheep and goats will pasture together, yet when the folding time comes they separate.

v. 34. Then shall the King say: Christ is the King. Blessed of my Father: They are blessed because they have sought to be like their Father. Inherit: It has been suggested that the judgment will be automatic. It is but natural that those who have sought to be worthy children, shall inherit the holdings of their Father. Prepared for you from the foundation of the world: "The thought of God from the beginning looked toward those who by such conduct would inherit such a reward" (Horton).

v. 35. And ye gave me: "The birds of the air have their nests and the foxes have their holes, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." If we give all to Christ, Christ will give all to us. The words of this passage are usually applied to individuals but they were spoken to and concerning nations. Is this not particularly timely in these days of wars? Our so-called Christian nations have been building on their armies and navies.

v. 37. Then shall the righteous answer him saying: True worth is unconscious of its worth. Righteousness is humble. The feeding of the hungry, the giving of drink to the thirsty, the taking in of the stranger, the clothing of the naked, visiting of those who are sick or in prison, must not be done for show. When one does these things Christianly he is quite unaware of gaze of the world, or even, of Christ.

v. 40. Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me: The rewards of goodness come as surprises. And the value of a reward is doubled when it comes as a surprise.

v. 41. Depart from me, ye cursed: Their own course elects their punishment. Prepared for the devil and his angels: "Jewish eschatology assigned to Satan and his supporters special punishment, as in Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4" (Slater).

v. 44. Lord, when saw we thee, etc.: The selfish are so engrossed in consummation upon their own selfish desires that they are blinded to the spiritual realities. And these words of the Lord are for the special benefit of a people who had been excessively punctilious in their formal worship of God. They thought they, of all people, were "the righteous."

At the Heart of the Lesson.

WHERE IS HEAVEN?

"A minister preached one day about heaven, and his sermon was greatly enjoyed by his people. Next morning a wealthy member of the church met the pastor and spoke warmly of the discourse. 'That was a good sermon about heaven,' he said: 'but you didn't tell us where heaven is.' 'Oh,' said the minister, 'I can tell you now. Do you see yonder hilltop? In a cottage there is a member of our church. She is sick in one bed and her two children are sick in another bed. I have just come from her house. There is not a lump of coal, nor a stick of wood, nor a loaf of bread, nor any flour in that house. If you will go down town and buy some provisions and some coal, and send them to that house, and then go yourself to the house and read the Twenty-third psalm beside the woman's sick-bed and kneel and pray with her you will know where heaven is.'"

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 16.

Union Through Co-operation in Practical Service. 2 Cor. 6:1; Gal. 2:9-10; 1 Cor. 16:1-4.

What is Christian union? Is it not the joining of forces for some kind of service? Is there any service that is not practical? If we have in mind unity of belief, we have no interest in beliefs except in relation to the actions they influence. To relieve a mind of paralyzing doubt or to remove bitterness from a heart is practical service. The superintendent of a large factory said he never had to discharge men for incompetency but he did discharge a man now and then for failure to co-operate. The church that teaches a man the spirit of brotherhood and how to show it in daily work is rendering a practical service that is of the highest importance.

SUPPORTING THE COLLEGES.

Is it not about time for the churches of the United States to join their forces in supporting church colleges? Colleges must be equipped, endowed, supplied with students. It may never come, but one may be allowed to dream of the day when colleges will be placed where they are needed and will receive the support of churches in accordance with territorial divisions and not in accordance with denominational preferences.

GIVING POWER TO THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The Bible is excluded from the public school in many states. It is uncertain whether it will be restored. Even if it is, the church is not thereby relieved of obligation to teach the history of religion and to cultivate religious feelings in the young. For this service it needs buildings, literature, and teachers. A small town with three, or four, or five school buildings would be ridiculed by enlightened educators. The day will come when divisions in Sunday-school work will be the object of ridicule. The promoter of divisions is wise in opposing the introduction of sound pedagogical methods into the Sunday-school. Denominational bias will have to stand aside when the chief aim of instruction is the welfare of the children. Interest in the present crowds out interest in fights that began generations ago.

BEARING TESTIMONY.

The best men are needed to preach the gospel of good will. Only a few are endowed for such a service. The cry that young men are not entering the ministry should be met by the declaration that the churches should have a program that would captivate the imagination of the strongest men. Many communities have more preachers than they need. Men in the ministry feel that they ought to represent all good people when they speak. They dislike the idea of having to speak for one section of the people. The man with a vision now comes forward as the spokesman of all who love God. He would like to have some of the barriers raised by sectarianism removed.

COMMUNITY SERVICE.

That co-operation is better than antagonism is known by all intelligent persons who try to put down evils and encourage goodness. A bank fight may demoralize a town. Family feuds have cost many towns their leadership in their counties. Church fights cripple schools and business. On the other hand, private feuds and sectarian wars have been forgotten when some great community enterprise has called for the energies of all the people. The leader in a playgrounds movement may prove to be a greater force for Christian union than the professional advocate of union. Any man who unites the people of a community for a good work prepares the way for other kinds of union. The main thing is to see what ought to be done and to have the people unite in doing it.

Zech. 8:16; Eph. 4:22, 25, 29; 1 Pet. 2: 12; 3:15-16; 1 Cor. 14: 19; Jas. 3:17, 18; Rom. 15: 1-6.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this fall. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers. editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and. still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The New Spirit in Sunday School Work is Embodied in the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

THE recent appointment by President Hill M. Bell of a Religious Education Commission for the Disciples is indicative of an unrest with the conditions that have obtained in the Sunday Schools of the past. It is a source of satisfaction to the Disciples Publication Society that the Bethany System of Literature has been prepared on the basis of the highest ideals of religious education.

There is No Time to Lose!

On October 1 thousands of schools will abandon the old-time uniform lessons, and adopt the modern Graded Lesson System. Hundreds of schools will turn from hastily-prepared denominational materials, which have not given satisfaction, to the System prepared by the world's leading experts in religious education. The Disciples were fortunate in having part in this great coöperative task, and the Bethany Graded Lessons stand as the superb creation of this Christian union enterprise. This System embraces 132 texts, and contains fully one-third more help for teachers than any other series. October 1 will soon be here. Do not delay. Send today for returnable samples of the Bethany Graded Lessons.

God and War

WHERE IS GOD WHILE WAR RAGES? Emperor William assures his soldiers that God is with the German arms and armies and will give victory to the fatherland.

But victory for the Germans with God's help means that God is party to the unspeakable slaughter of their enemies—a notion of God which we who have once seen the face of Christ can no longer entertain. We cannot think that the divine Father is party to the widowing of Belgian womanhood and the orphaning of the children of France.

Neither can we think that God is on the side of Belgian steel and French fortress and British dreadnought against the Germans. The whole thought of a tribal God, a partizan God, is Hebraic and pagan, not Christian. God is not found in the clash of steel and the rush of armies and the bombarding of cities. God hates all that, just like right-reasoning men hate it. He loves his children. He plans life for them, not death; prosperity, not distress. He is not the cause of the tears and groans and sorrows of any people. It is his eternal passion to wipe away all tears from their eyes and to abolish pain and death.

War is sin. Like other sins it may be due either to a lack of higher ideals or to a lapse from higher ideals. Primitive war, ancient war, medieval war was largely due to a lack of higher ideals. But this war is admittedly a moral lapse. Every war from this time forward must be regarded as a moral lapse, a distinct fall of man from God's garden of civilization.

Where, then, is God that he should allow whole nations to lapse from the hard-won goal of social idealism back into barbarism?

Some say this failure of civilization is a token that there is no God at all. Civilization, progress, they say, is an illusion, and God is a delusion. The banks of the River Meuse are said to have overflowed with the bodies of dead and wounded Germans that fell into the stream.

Where, then, is your God of love?

The art treasures at Louvain were demolished by the German investment.

Where, then, is your God of beauty?

The solemn pledges of the Kaiser to preserve Belgian neutrality were torn into bits of meaningless paper and the whole of the brave little land is overrun with aliens.

Where, then, is your God of truth and honor?

These questions of the atheist and the cynic are not easy questions for faith. But they are not new questions for faith. They bring to us the old, old problems of sin and suffering, in the midst of which our every day life is lived—problems that call faith into existence. If it were not for problems like these there would be no faith, no need for faith; we would be walking by sight.

Faith can find God even while war rages. It finds him not in the tumult and shouting, not in the fierce and selfish passions of men—not in the earthquake or wind or fire, but in the still, small voice and the still, small, but mighty forces that work against war and that even use such a war as this to bring about a higher and securer peace for mankind.

It may fall out that this war is the cure of war. This is the first war that has been subjected to the criticism of a contemporary conscience against war. The Peace ideal has established itself in the souls of civilized men during the past fifty years. Dreams of international arbitration have begun to come down from the clouds. Ideals like these are bound to become more vivid, more commanding, not less so. The euphemisms of war are passing. It sounds like irony to speak of the "glory" of war. Its "romance" has lost much of its glamour. War is butchery, war is murder, war is hell.

Here is where God is—in those ideals that are interfusing human thinking, in the protest of the laboring classes against shooting down their comrades of the field and factory, in the vivifying of a vast body of public sentiment both in the neutral and the warring nations on behalf of mothers and wives and children of soldiers, and in the conscious taking into account of the effect upon future generations of a policy which sends its finest manhood forth to be killed.

In the humanitarian idealism that has spread far and will spread farther—there you will find God.

And you will find God in the new distinction that is coming to be consciously made between a national political entity and the people themselves. President Wilson was smiled at when he "declared war" on Huerta but professed friendship for the Mexican people. Yet that is precisely the distinction that obtains in the expressions of British and even French sentiment toward Germany. The German government with its arrogance, its selfish ambition, its lust for more space and more power, and its appeal to the saber to carry out its greedy purposes —this is one entity; and the German people from whom Goethe and Wagner and Kant and Eucken sprang, and of which every peasant and laborer is a part, this is another entity. The social entity, the human entity, is differentiating itself from the political entity and is coming to the front as the only entity that has any real rights. Human well-being is displacing the rights of autocrats and it is God that is bringing it to pass.

In the democratic processes that are reconstructing human society on the basis of social well-being and which are operating to fling every monarchical survival into the scrap heap—there you will find God.

God is not absent from the battlefield, for the Red Cross is there, and self sacrifice is there and patriotism is there, and where these are God is.

But God's greatest work is in the background of the battle, in the contrite hearts that intercede for a proud and sinning humanity, and lend themselves as redemptive carriers of his grace and peace to the world.

Getting Home From Europe

BY CLAUDIUS B. SPENCER.

Dr. Spencer is recognized by his fellowcraftsmen as not only one of the most companionable personalities, but one of the most skillful and graphic writing-men in the fraternity of religious editors. When we read in his paper—The Christian Advocate—that he had been in the war zone at the time of the outbreak, we knew that there would be a story to tell upon his arrival home. And sure enough, it came last week. It gives such a human interpretation of the hardships and embarrassment experienced by Americans abroad this summer that The Christian Century takes special satisfaction in giving the story to its readers.—THE EDITOR.

TENS of thousands of American tourists will for many a day to come have thrillers to tell of their experiences in Europe from that fateful Saturday, August 1, until the moment they actually put their feet on American soil. Those that befell me are only those common to the rest, and there are about seventy thousand of them. More than one hundred thousand tons of personal belongings, trunks, hand bags and suit cases are stacked up somewhere in European towns, and attached to every piece of luggage is not only a tag, but a tale. Whether the luggage is ever seen again or not, the story will remain perennial.

I had come up out of Spain and when I got to Geneva I had abandoned sightseeing altogether to hide away in a pension buried in roses and poppies, arbors, and an almost suffocation of rare flowers, to try and think my way up and out of the middle ages in which I had immersed myself beyond the Pyrenees. Saturday, August 1, came, and with it consternation. Austria had declared war. Russia was mobilizing. Telegrams announced that Germany had ordered the mobilizing of her vast army reserves beginning the next morning at 6 o'clock. Switzerland ordered the mobilization of her reserves, also to be completed within twenty-four hours.

A RUN ON THE BANKS.

There was an instantaneous disappearance of money. The banks closed. The government banks underwent a run, long lines reaching the streets. The government banks doled a few francs to depositors: but on securities, foreign money, travelers' checks, not one centime. There was the sensation of universal paralysis. And you better believe it was wise to get to Zurich and Constance by the first train. I had bought my ticket over in London, and a little silver jingled in my pocket, and with a luncheon from the pension I boarded the express for German Switzerland.

II.

Everywhere there was suspense, everywhere haste. The sabers of the soldiers rattled on the slats of the third class cars: crowds gathered at every station, handkerchiefs fluttered from mothers, wives, sweethearts, and were used for other purposes than to wave farewells. A German-born tourist, who had landed on his honeymoon from America just the Thursday before, had been caught in the German net, and was on his way to his regiment in Bavaria. Everything was crowded, stern, silent. The train was intermittent. Every man had his story, every soldier his kit, every person his poorly disguised fears. It was a long, solemn, depressing day.

At ten that Sunday night, I landed in Constance. The ancient city on the Lake of the Four Cantons is part in Switzerland, part in Germany. I had to run the gauntlet of the German frontier, as I shall not forget. The Hotel Insel, the Island Hotel, is a most picturesque spot in the silver lake, and looking on the Alps of Saint Gall. The hotel is an ancient Dominican monastery, spotless cloisters, decorated with huge historic frescoes fitting the great panels, the dining hall the scene of the trial of John Huss, ere he was burned at the stake. The delegates to the Peace Conference were already ready for the formal opening the next morning. I unpacked, and went to bed.

THE LAST TRAIN OUT.

I came down early to breakfast, only to get the whisper that Germany had declared war; that the last train out of that section would leave in a few minutes; that the Emperor would guarantee safe conduct along the whole frontier as far as Cologne. I heard that two of our company had just been arrested and were in prison for using a kodak. The baggage was already partly on the bus. It didn't take long to jam my belongings into my bags and get them in the pile.

All day and far into the night the train swept intermittently down the German frontier through the Black Forest out into Carlsruhe and the Rhine Valley. Everywhere the final mobilization of the reserves, everywhere soldiers, everywhere the Hohenzollern helmets and sabers, everywhere the horses in the box-cars and yards, everywhere measured haste, thoroughness and the feverish uncertainty; fresh news every moment, France declaring war, the German troops marching on Belgium, England on the brink of war, Russia swarming toward Austria, rumor treading on the heels of rumor, and everywhere, everywhere the troops piling into the cars, the men having faces of steel; the Rhine cities flags flying, children cheering, women weeping, tourists in panic, jamming into the already crowded cars, dragging women through the car windows, any way, any shape, to board that train. That, in general terms, was the story of the day.

III.

Reaching Constance Sunday night, I did not have a pfennig in German money—not one cent. During Sunday night, in the common disaster, all the delegates had held a hasty meeting and emptied into a common pot all their gold. Bishop Hendrix, Bishop Wilson and President Tipple set the example. In consequence, in the dim dawn, Dr. Frederick Lynch thrust in my hand a ticket to Cologne and three half marks (less than fifty cents) with which to get to London. I am in a greater debt to Bishop Hendrix than I can ever pay, for help on the way that day of suspense and its gloomy night, trying to get across the German frontier. For this was the final train, and no one would want to remain on German soil until this awful war is over. Like hundreds of men, I stood up half way from Switzerland to the Netherlands. Women first. The three half marks in that crowd that stampeded for the fruit counters did not last forever.

There will always abide the memory of the troops in motion on the horizon, their bayonets glistening in the sun, their steadiness, their magnificent physique, strong, intellectual faces, thousands of them college men who will shoot to hit, and every eye having the gleam of worship of the fatherland; there will always abide the memory of the sentries at every bridge and tunnel and culvert; the memory of the cities of the Rhine pouring out their battalions, their crowds of weeping women, their flags flying from the windows, the searchlights in the church steeples of Cologne, the sheen of the brilliant yellow light on the mass of Hohenzollern helmets in the stations—surely Lohengrin and the Norms had come to the German land and each had death in his saber and bayonet to wall about that German land.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

There was no sleep that night. There was uncertainty, massing on railroad platforms, repeated examination of luggage, tearing up of baedekers, a hundred inconveniences—some call them insults—and finally an electric tram from Cleve (seat of the Lohengrin legend) to the frontier and its disturbance and a walk and a hack to Nijmegen in the Netherlands, where a gentleman, Mr. Edgar T. Woodhead, Elmfield House, Bath Street, Huddersfield, generously advanced me, a stranger with no security that was good for any thing, enough to buy my ticket to Vlissingen, across the Channel to Folkestone and to the Victoria Station, London. It was a favor which I can never repay in material things. I pass over those days. What of suffering or suspense there was in common to thousands and may be dropped into oblivion.

IV.

I am sailing steerage to New York. A young fellow has just told me he is not anxious to climb up the stacks of berths in the forecastle of his berth, for a rat has just jumped out of his. Some ladies have just remarked on the rats and mice that have run over their berths. I now understand how the Bubonic plague and cholera are spread. There is a black, tangled, dark labyrinth of cables, pipes, machinery, braces, hatchets, and oh, that smell—in a choppy ocean at that. Thank fortune it is not undignified to—I will not write the word; many a gentle dame has shown it. The sound would indicate that a lot of folks have lost their last friend.

The captain has opened the rear part of the promenade deck, the after music room, a woman's rest room, the upholstered smoking room to the "steerage" throng and really until bed time it is now not uncomfortable. No one complains. I was due back on the Imperator—the best that floats. I am happy at these courtesies of the captain, and until midnight forget the fo'castle. In fact, I am sleeping on the deck under the

An Open Questionnaire on the Recent Action of California's Convention

In Which Every Reader of The Christian Century is Invited to Participate. Second Installment.

FIRST CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., was excommunicated from the state missionary convention of Northern California in July for receiving into its membership unimmersed Christian people who brought credentials from various Protestant evangelical churches such as Presbyterian, Methodist and the rest.

This is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the past fifty years, perhaps in their entire century of history. I wish with the most dispassionate purpose to secure a consensus of the opinion of our brotherhood, including both laymen and ministers. I have prepared this questionnaire for that purpose, and I will welcome from any reader of The Christian Century a frank expression on the issues involved. In order that the reader may have clearly before him the material facts of the situation let me state them, concisely, as I understand them:

BERKELEY'S PRACTICE AND POINT OF VIEW.

Berkeley church insists that it is loyal to every fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ and that the step in question is nothing at all but a further logical and fraternal application of both the principle of Christian unity and that of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

It affirms that these persons whom it receives into its fellowship are Christians, members of the Church of Christ; that Christ has already received them into his Church, which being so, a church of Christ has no choice save to receive them also. To refuse to receive them, the Berkeley church says, is essentially a sectarian act and a violation both of the will of Christ and the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The church holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience.

In the dismissal of an unimmersed member the church gives back the letter he brought with him, together with a letter of its own, commending the Christian character of the bearer and stating the fact as to his manner of being received into Berkeley church. The purpose of this is to avoid confusion or embarrassment to other churches of Disciples which might not wish to receive an unimmersed person into their membership.

The Berkeley church and its pastor, H. J. Loken, hold, as I have no reason to doubt, the generally accepted evangelical views of the Bible and the Divinity of Christ and are in all respects faithful to the missionary imperative of our Lord, even to the point of extraordinary generosity. I do not know Mr. Loken personally, but he is described as a preacher of unusual power, and a humble and gracious Christian man.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

THE QUESTIONS.

1. Do you hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people? If so, please state why.

2. If you disapprove of Berkeley's practice do you consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, or is it one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation?

3. What is your opinion as to the action of the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of the church and to excommunicate it from their missionary coöperation? Does the convention's action, in your opinion, constitute a violation of any fundamental principle held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity? Can you see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did?

4. If you disapprove of the action of the convention what do you suggest should be done by the brotherhood outside of California to induce the California brethren to remedy their error?

In answering the above questions it is not necessary to re-write the questions. They may be referred to by number. Replies may be as brief as is consistent with clearness. Following are some replies that have already been received:

REV. HOWARD T. CREE.

1. It seems to me the Berkeley church is practicing the principle of autonomy, which has always been granted as the right of each individual congregation.

2. It seems to me my answer to the first question also covers this on the ground of liberty conceded each local congregation.

3. I am of the opinion that the action of the convention in passing upon the orthodoxy of the church and excommunicating the same from its co-operation is unwarranted and violates the very principle of liberty among the Disciples of Christ. It is an ecclesiasticism for which there is no scriptural warrant and cannot but be productive of harm.

4. We are liable perhaps in passing upon the action of this convention to be guilty of the same fundamental error unless we are careful. I know of no law under which this case can be properly handled save the great law of Christian love and charity.

Augusta, Ga.

REV. Z. T. SWEENEY.

1. The Berkeley church is doing wrong, because it is receiving into fellowship persons who have not complied with the conditions imposed by our Lord. [Conditions of what? Certainly not conditions of membership in the Church of Christ, for Dr. Sweeney, like all Disciples, holds, without any reservation, that Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest are members of the Church of Christ. If they are already members they must have complied with the conditions of becoming members.—The Editor.]

2. It is a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples of Christ, because it has changed the constitutional requirements made by our Lord for citizenship in the kingdom of God. It has committed high treason against the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

3. In my opinion the California convention simply stated a fact which the apostle John also stated, I John 2-19—"They went out from us but they were not of us. For if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us."

The California brethren simply stated the fact that the Berkeley brethren had departed from the faith and they had a perfect right to act in harmony with that fact. The California brethren were acting in the capacity of voluntary workers for Christ having the right to prescribe the conditions upon which others could unite in Christian work with them.

I can see a world of difference between their action and ecclesiasticism.

4. I would suggest that it would be ecclestiasticism for any body outside of California to attempt to interfere with the acts of the California convention.

New York City.

REV. A. B. JONES.

Replying to your questions in the numerical order in which they are stated, I will say:

1. I do not.

2. I think this is a matter that each congregation should determine for itself.

3. I think the California convention did radically wrong in this act.

In my opinion the action of the convention is a violation of the principles held by the Disciples of Christ. I can see no difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did.

4. I think that all our other conventions should pursue the opposite course and leave the California brethren to repent at their leisure and change their policy.

Liberty, Mo.

REV. HENRY PEARCE ATKINS.

1. No.

2. I do not disapprove.

3. Altogether unwarranted. It does. I cannot.

4. From among the number who express their disapproval of the action of the convention select a committee of three who shall draft a letter to those churches whose representatives voted with the majority, urging them in fraternal spirit, for reasons set forth, to reconsider their action at their next convention. Call upon a hundred well known brethren to lend their names to this letter. A goodly array of names should be secured if the issue is confined to the action of the convention without reference to the position taken by the Berkeley church.

Birmingham, Ala.

MR. S. E. CARRELL.

I prefer to state my views in general, rather than in response to your questions.

I can see that this question as to the basis of church membership, as it relates to the acceptance of those coming from other churches, is one that sooner or later the Disciples must face. Whether the time has already come, is largely a matter of local conditions.

Generally speaking, I think the raising or not raising of the question is one of expediency merely, whether the proximate gain is sufficient to justify the inevitable losses from divisions of views. Every church must answer that question for itself. Personally, I doubt the wisdom of such action by individual churches, so long as the body of Disciples is obviously unready to commit itself to this advanced view.

Viewing it from the standpoint of principle, I think there can hardly be doubt that ultimately the Disciples must abandon the contention that only those baptized in the way they regard as most scriptural, are Christians. That smacks of dogmatism so repulsive to modern thought and reason that its eventual modification seems inevitable.

The term "close immersion" used by Brother Loken fits the case admirably, and the attack upon it by the Christian Evangelist in no wise weakens its force. Our Baptist friends take the same view of their method of communion as Disciples do of their form of baptism; and they have the same right to that view. But Disciples smile at "close" communion, if by that the idea is conveyed that those outside that church body are unworthy the fellowship of communion as Christians.

To be entirely frank, I do not have a great deal of patience with the discussion of this whole question, as I regard it as of minor importance compared with the great duty and opportunity of the Disciples, in the doing of things as to which nobody can raise question or belittle the issue. I think fifty years from now, the church will view all this turmoil much as it now does the ancient controversy as to the number of angels—or was it demons—that could dance on the point of a needle.

Iowa City, Ia.

MR. B. R. HIERONYMOUS.

1. No.

3. I believe the convention made a mistake.

4. The advisability of receiving unimmersed members of other churches should, I think, be considered in our religious papers by a number of our careful leaders, and also discussed in the congress of Disciples. Charity and patience with this question may work wonders. Remember that with the Lord a thousand years is as a day.

Springfield, Ill.

DR. HUGH G. WELPTON.

Recognizing the pure democracy of our movement it is more than inconsistent with our principles to exercise an ecclesiastical authority over the local church at Berkeley. I am sure there will be a day of reckoning, and when the question of fellowshiping other Christians now in the denominations around us is passed upon it will be by each individual church and without interference from any outside source whatsoever.

Des Moines, Ia.

REV. C. J. TANNAR.

I uphold the California convention in its recent action concerning the Berkeley church. To my mind this particular church and its pastor, Mr. Loken, have precipitated this action and have no one to blame for it except themselves.

I trust peace and harmony may soon come out of this unfortunate condition.

Central Church, Detroit.

MR. S. J. CLARKE.

1. Yes. If it is a part of the restoration movement as inaugurated by Campbell and others it should abide by the principles and practices as set forth by the fathers of the movement. That it is a radical departure from such principles and practices is unquestioned. By its action the Berkeley church has said that it did not agree with the fathers and has thus cut itself off from the fellowship of those in the movement to restore the church to apostolic practices.

2. I disapprove of Berkeley's practice and "consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples." In no sense can it be said to be "one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation." After the most careful study of the early church Campbell and his associates agreed that those who would become a part of the Lord's body—his church—should believe, repent, confess and be immersed, that Christian baptism was not sprinkling or pouring water on a person, but was the immersion of a penitent believer in water into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. They asked all who agreed with them to so express themselves and covenant with them in proclaiming those conclusions to the world, that they, the disciples of Christ, might all be one. When a local congregation refuses to abide by these principles and adopts a practice contrary to it, that congregation cuts itself off from all fellowship in the movement. Thus the Berkeley congregation cut itself off from the movement in "its radical departure from the principles" stated.

3. The California convention acted within its rights in refusing fellowship with a congregation departing from the faith. They did not excommunicate, but the Berkeley congregation cut itself off. No "fundamental principles held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity" were violated. The convention only reaffirmed our position as advocated for one hundred years as the only method by which Christian union can ever be brought about—the return to apostolic practice. There is a vast difference between ecclesiasticism, as the term is commonly used, and what the convention did. The convention claimed no power as a church in the making and enforcement of laws, but did claim the right as part of a great religious movement to virtually say to the Berkeley congregation: "You are not one of us, and have cut yourself off by advocating doctrines at varience with the movement for the union of all God's people through the method of a return to apostolic practices.

4. I approve of the action of the convention.

Chicago.

MR. W. L. HEDGES.

1. No.

2. It is certainly one of those things that come within the scope of Christian liberty, as well as the very spirit of our movement. We can not escape the logical result. Why cannot each local congregation settle this themselves?

3. It was a grave mistake. Yes, it is a violation of the fundamental principle always held very dear by the Disciples of Christ, and antagonistic to our plea for the unity of all God's children. It is ecclesiasticism.

4. Ignore it. Be patient and exercise the greatest charity towards our California brethren, trusting to time and the evolution of progress to correct this reactionary movement of the California convention.

Warrensburg, Mo.

PROF. F. E. LUMLEY.

I am frank to say that I have never been able to harmonize our use of the terms "Christian," "brother," etc., as applied to members of other churches with our custom of debarring them from thorough-going Christian fellowship. Nor have I ever found anyone who could harmonize these practices. Therefore, I naturally stand on the side of the larger liberty. I cannot see that any church is doing wrong in doing what it sincerely believes is the will of Christ. I think the action of the convention was as savage an ecclesiastical thrust as has ever occurred in any denomination.

On the contrary, I have heard that the Berkeley church made itself obnoxious by insisting that other churches follow their precedent. If this be true then it may have been entitled to some sort of retaliation. But I deplore this situation chiefly because it has created inharmony; it is out of step for the time being; it is—to use a common expression—a breaking of the rules of the game when everything pointed to the development of a more liberal spirit in the very near future. We are growing more tolerant every day. This thing is bound to come—and soon. Therefore, why tear a state convention into factions? And yet some must lead and possibly this step is more strategic that it seems to me. My position, in a word, is this: It was not Christian disloyalty for Berkeley to do as it did, but rather a social blunder. I do not consider it good social policy—so far as our people are concerned.

College of Missions, Indiapanolis.

REV. WALTER M. WHITE.

It is my understanding, Brother Morrison, that the action of the Santa Cruz convention was not based upon the practice of the Berkeley church in receiving into its fellowship unbaptized persons, but because of the persistent effort of the minister of the church, cordially sustained by the congregation, to propagate their peculiar teachings amongst the churches of "the brotherhood" throughout the state to such an extent as to disturb the peace and harmony of the same. This is my impression gained from the statements of those who are on the field and are thoroughly familiar with the whole situation. If this is true, your questionnaire will tend to further confuse matters than straighten them out. If you have not already done so look into it a little more thoroughly.

However, permit me to state frankly that it is my judgment that the most unwise action ever taken by any assembly amongst us, local or general, in our history, was the action of the Santa Cruz convention with reference to the Berkeley delegates. I likewise doubt seriously the wisdom of giving the matter too great prominence in our religious press.

I am quite sure that agitation will not be productive of conversion but, on the other hand I am fearful that it will widen the breach that needs sorely to be closed.

Brother Morrison, we need in this hour a Moses, to lead us together, not apart. Unless he is forthcoming I am exceedingly fearful of the future.

I am fearful that we, like our poor brethren of Europe, are caring more for conquest than for peace and the ultimate triumph of our God's purposes for his children.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

MR. HORACE G. MURPHY.

In order to make an intelligent reply to your third and fourth questions, I should have the record of the California convention, showing officially the exact ground upon which the action was taken with reference to the Berkeley church. That you do not give.

1. Were the brethren at Berkeley a congregation of Disciples, they would, in my opinion, be doing wrong in attempting to receive unimmersed people to membership in the Church of Christ. However, I take it that, while it may not have dawned upon those brethren, they are not a congregation of Disciples at all. The doctrines they promulgate seem identical with those of our Christian Connection brethren.

2. If the Berkeley church could be considered as belonging to the brotherhood known as Disciples, their practice of receiving unimmersed people as members would certainly be "a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples." No congregation assuming to act strictly in accord with the scriptural commands respecting church polity is free to assume that, in disregarding so clear a command as that of baptism, they are acting "naturally within the field of Christian liberty, conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation." Our authority, in essentials, comes alone from the Holy Scriptures, and not from any local congregation.

In your introduction, giving the position of the Berkeley church, you say, "It affirms that these persons (unimmersed members) whom it receives into its fellowship, are Christians, members of the Church of Christ; that Christ has already taken them into His church, which being so, a Church of Christ has no choice, save to receive them also." Such a position certainly does great violence to the "genius of our movement." We have never conceded the sectarian dogma that the local church may legislate in opposition to the Lord's plan of admitting members into the body of Christ. "Where the scriptures speak, we speak; where the scriptures are silent, we are silent."

You say the Berkeley brethren claim to hold "inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience." I fear these brethren have used too strong a term. If they really hold the principle of immersion "inviolate," they should not adopt a policy which tramples it under foot. If the right of the church to violate the scriptural plan be once admitted, where is the stopping place? Under Berkeley policy, a man may stand out in open rebellion against immersion, and, desiring membership with the Disciples, may first take membership with the Friends, where water baptism in any form is absolutely rejected, and then come across with his letter and be received, as a matter of right, to full membership as a Disciple of Christ. In case a sufficient number should do this, the local congregation may finally adopt a policy rejecting immersion, or water baptism of any kind, absolutely, thus substituting the will of the members of the Friends denomination in lieu of the will of God. Would such be in harmony with "the genius of our movement?" I commend the Berkeley brethren to a more careful study of the meaning of the word "inviolate."

3. I do not understand that the California convention assumed to judge the orthodoxy of the Berkeley brethren, or to excommunicate them from missionary cooperation. Maybe they have, but you have furnished no record showing it. However, I can not see why our Christian Connection brethren, and others, may not be permitted to contribute to our missionary enterprises, provided, only, that they do not attempt to exercise any ecclesiastical rights or authority. The management of our missionary enterprises, should, as a matter of business polity, be confined to those who are in substantial agreement as to the imperative authority of our Lord, wherever He has spoken.

4. I do not believe that the brethren elsewhere will be able to render any service to our California brethren in this matter.

Muncie, Ind.

MR. ABNER G. WEBB.

1. No, I do not.

2. It is a departure from the practice, but in my opinion a wise one.

3. This action seems entirely unwarranted and we ought to all pause and consider. It does not seem to me that actions of this kind ever result in any advantage to those who prevail. In fact my observation has led me to think it is about the most fatal thing that can be done by the prevailing party.

4. Probably nothing can be done further than protest. Apparently matters such as this have been so long immediately in front of us that this is about all we can see.

I would suggest that calm and deliberate consideration be given to larger plans and these discussions will melt away when the view of larger things comes to us.

Cleveland, Ohio.

REV. ROBT. E. HENRY.

1. I do not hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving those Christians in question. I do not think the practice will solve the problem of Christian Union, or that there is a crying need for the practice.

2. I consider the practice of Berkeley church a matter purely for the local congregation to determine.

3. I think the brethren constituting the Northern California Convention were absolutely wrong in excluding the representatives from Berkeley church. It is contrary to every principle of liberty held dear by the Disciples of Christ. I cannot see any difference between their action and the strictest sect of the Pharisees. Some folks take especial delight in manicuring their brethren's theology.

4. I think that the very principle of liberty that the California brethren so grossly forgot, forbids any other convention or body of Disciples from taking action against them or in favor of the Berkeley church. I gladly welcome this questionnaire and any other means of ascertaining what individual brethren think of the action, but I would have it remain individual.

Havana, Ill.

PRES. H. O. PRITCHARD.

1. I do not agree with the practice of the Berkeley Church in receiving unimmersed people into the membership. I do not believe it will solve the question of Christian union, but rather will it cause division and discord as it has done in California.

2. I believe that the action which the Berkeley church took lies wholly within the field of the local congregation and that it has the liberty to take whatever action it may choose to take as a local church.

3. For that reason I do not believe that any ecclesiastical body or any delegate convention has any right to pass judgment upon or to excommunicate from its body, representatives of a local church. Our people have ever made the local church the unit of government and for a hundred years stood against excommunication and ecclesiastical courts.

4. I have no suggestion to offer that I think would make matters better. I am profoundly sorry that such contention has arisen among us.

Eureka College.

JUDGE JAMES M. SANDUSKY.

1. I approve the act of the Berkeley church. It consistently receives into its own body, by letter, those whom it recognizes as Christians while members of other religious bodies, and this method is not inconsistent with a uniform practice of immersion in cases of primary obedience.

3. I disapprove the act of the Santa Cruz convention in excommunicating the Berkeley church. The matter in issue belonged to the vast domain where Christian liberty should obtain, and therefore should be left to each individual congregation to determine for itself; as large Christian bodies sincerely entertain different opinions in regard to it, charity would be a paramount virtue in its consideration.

But upon this issue this convention first assumed authority in effect to formulate a doctrinal statement to be binding upon individual Christian churches, and then further assumed authority as a court to apply it in excommunicating Berkeley church. If this act is to be followed, our preachers should cease preaching about Christian unity.

4. The resolution adopted by the Santa Cruz convention, excluding the Berkeley church delegates, determined for that convention its own personnel, but it is not binding upon any person or church anywhere, not even upon the next state convention of California.

The issue seems to be one to be met in the forum of open debate where it is to be hoped that nothing that is narrow shall finally prevail.

Liberty, Mo.

REV. PERRY J. RICE.

1. I do not hold that the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people. I am not sure that the practice is expedient at the present time. It is my judgment that our churches should not be in a hurry to introduce this innovation. There is much to be said on the question which, it seems to me, should be said before many churches can afford to do what the Berkeley church has done if, indeed, they ever can.

2. I have partially answered this question in the above. I may add, however, that I believe the question belongs within the field of Christian liberty, and that it is a question for local congregations to decide.

3. It is my opinion that the action of the California convention is absolutely subversive of the very genius and spirit of our movement. They have inevitably set up an authority outside the local congregation and have used it for the purpose of disfellowshiping a congregation. I can see no difference between its action and ecclesiasticism of the most pronounced type.

4. The only course left open to us as Disciples is to express in the most definite and positive way possible, and as often as may be necessary, our disapproval of the convention's action. We may do this by means of letters to individuals having a part in it: by publicity of our disapproval through the church papers and by continuing to have fellowship with the Berkeley church in every way possible. I should doubt the wisdom of any formal action with reference to it on the part of any of our gatherings at any time or place.

El Paso, Tex.

MR. JAMES M. PICKENS.

1. No. On the contrary, I believe that the Berkeley plan offers a wise and consistent solution of one of the greatest difficulties in the way of Christian union. If we recognize members of other churches as Christians, we cannot consistently refuse to receive them into the fellowship of our congregations. I believe staunchly in immersion as the only correct form of baptism, and I should oppose the practice of any other method by our churches. But I do not see how we can refuse to recognize as fellow Christians those who have entered other churches by what we may regard as technically faulty methods and yet whose lives exemplify the principles of Christianity. I have a simple faith that God will not turn away those who make an honest and sincere effort to obey, but whose obedience may not take the precise form that we understand to have been prescribed. A mistake in method is of slight account; the intention to obey is the essential thing. Jesus visited his strongest denunciation upon the Pharisees who were strict in the observance of forms but who utterly missed the spirit of religion.

I know that views similar to the above are held by a number of members of the congregation to which I belong. Wishing to avoid dissension, I seldom express such opinions; but in discussing the subject occasionally with intelligent and thoughtful Disciples among my acquaintance I have been surprised and gratified at the extent to which such views are held.

2. I regard the practice of the Berkeley church as a matter coming within the field of liberty of the local congregation.

3. The action of the California convention, in my opinion, is an unwarranted assumption of authority and a violation of a fundamental principle of the Disciple's movement. It is rank ecclesiasticism. Such a close corporation claiming a monopoly of the true faith should be liable to prosecution under the Sherman anti-trust law.

4. If the Berkeley church sends delegates to the general convention, I should favor their admission and recognition as a matter of course. Such recognition, if accorded would show to the California brethren that the action of their convention is not approved by the brotherhood generally. If we are not prepared to extend such recognition to the Berkeley congregation we might as well withdraw our plea for Christian union. It might be well for the Atlanta convention to pass resolutions defining its idea of congregational and ecclesiastical authority.

Vermont Ave. Church, Washington, D. C.

REV. WM. B. CLEMMER.

I am not in sympathy with the action of the California convention in the matter of the Berkeley church. That, I believe, is a matter that lies within the Christian liberty of each congregation. The creed of the Christian church is ideal as well as scriptural when stated as a fact, but subject to difficulties when pushed in explanation as to what it includes in the premises in our creed of custom. The Christian church as well as the whole Protestant Christian church is in a state of flux, and we need to approach all these vexing question on our knees with great humility and patience.

BROTHERHOOD MOVEMENT HALTS.

WHAT is to be done with the Brotherhood, the national organization of Disciple men? This is the question with which a meeting of men at Atlanta will be confronted. A crisis has been reached in its affairs. From the date of its origin at New Orleans in 1908 to the present a heavy budget of expenses has been financed mainly by Mr. R. A. Long of Kansas City.

The movement for a distinctly masculine organization has not, apparently, gripped the interest of churchmen deeply enough to elicit sufficient financial support for a national secretary and a central office. Mr. E. E. Elliott, the present secretary, it is understood, will give up his position shortly to accept a managerial position with the Christian Board of Publication in St. Louis. Judge J. N. Haymaker, of Wichita, president of the Brotherhood, will be glad to receive expressions of sentiment from Christian men everywhere concerning the future of this organization.

The problem of men and the Church is not a Disciples' problem alone. The Presbyterian and the Congregational Brotherhoods have recently yielded up their identity to the Adult Bible Class movement. It is possible that the conservative and, in the end, the most fruitful course for Disciple men to pursue is to do likewise.

A WHOLESOME DISCUSSION.

HOW much more wholesome and comfortable, as well as prophetic of ultimate solution, the free, open discussion now running in The Christian Century is than would be the smother-it-for-the-sake-of-peace program urged by some of our esteemed counsellors!

Does not this paper feel better to you, gentle and sensitive reader, with its three full pages of such finely-tempered and frank expressions of opinion as are found in the editor's Questionnaire than if its references to the Berkeley matter were spoken in tones of suppressed awe and portent, and with unctious exhortations about loving one another and letting "time" settle all our differences?

The Disciples love daylight and the open road. We love to talk with one another. We are not afraid of differences of opinion. We are going to find out, at last, that the peculiar delicacy inhering in this perennial question of practicing Christian union is altogether due to its having been so long suppressed. It has been discussed by small groups of us, in confidential whispers; occasionally in our history it has found voice in some academic congress or lectureship—we think now of Rev. J. A. Lord in his unfettered Missouri days, and of the late Rev. J. S. Lamar. Practical but thoughtful laymen whose minds were not corrupted by legalistic theology and who therefore discerned the true spirit and purpose of Jesus more clearly than many of their teachers discerned it, have always wondered, in a helpless sort of way, how it was that a movement for Christian unity could rest upon a sectarian basis.

But this large body of sentiment has never found a popular voice. Fear lest the peace of Zion be disturbed has kept inhibitions upon our hearts. The attitude of Mr. Lamar is approvingly recalled by Dr. J. H. Garrison in a recent article. He quotes Mr. Lamar as saying:

> I am not going to take this step [receiving unimmersed Christians into fellowship] until my brethren are ready to take it. I am sure most of them do not yet see it, and I propose to stay with my and hold this view as my person al opinion.

If there had been a newspaper medium through which Mr. Lamar could have secured as thorough a discussion of the question as we are enabled today to have, the Disciples would now be leagues ahead of their present attainment in Christian unity. But our journalism has always been afraid of the question and closed its columns to any discussion that looked toward thoroughness.

Mr. Lamar's attitude is typical and, in our judgment, with full honor to his memory, far from admirable. If a Christian believes that it is contrary to the will of Christ to practice sectarianism he cannot, in sound conscience, suppress that belief on the specious ground of its being a mere "personal opinion."

Doctor Garrison points out that Mr. Lamar changed his opinion on the step referred to before his death. That observation has an aspect which, perhaps, Doctor Garrison has not thought of. If instead of suppressing his "personal opinion" Mr. Lamar had expressed it, and sought with gentleness and love to put it into practice he would, in all likelihood, have found more and more beauty in it as the years went on and at his death a multitude, if not the whole body, of Disciples would have been standing with him in its advocacy.

We are today under the handicap of Mr. Lamar's silence. It is due the future of this Disciples' movement for Christian unity that we of today speak out the conviction that is in us. The Christian Century has not in many a day found so much satisfaction as in lending itself as a medium for the expression of this long repressed public opinion.

AND NOW IT IS CLOSE COMMUNION!

WHO will keep tab on the innovations appearing these days among Disciples of Christ?—not merely innovations in church methods, but radical innovations, involving and jeopardizing the fundamental principles of their entire movement for Christian unity.

Here are the creeds adopted by the Phillips Bible Institute in Ohio and by the Brite College of the Bible in Texas—an absolute surrender of a basic Disciple principle.

Here is the action of the California convention in excommunicating a church from fellowship in its missionary work —something wholly new.

And now comes an article in a well-known Disciple newspaper—the leading article—featured on the first page—with the author's picture—and referred to by the editor, complimentarily, as "unique"—where there is a defense of and plea for close communion. The article is entitled, "A Protected Table" and carries the sub-title, "An Appreciation of Baptist Consistency." The author expresses the hope that his article may "remove prejudice" which, he feels, now exists among Disciples on account of their misconception of the Baptist position. He says:

> It is easy to dra wa picture of that willful, selfish isolation of Baptists in communion, gathered around a Baptist table from which many admitted Christians are sternly and uncompromisingly debarred. The scene may be viewed from afar with all the commiseration of wounded sympathies and outraged susceptibilities. It is not pleasant thus to be separated—and perhaps it may be painful to Baptists themselves. But what must be the complications of a table where no standard is erected, no particular faith demonstrated and no test required?—where the unbaptized and the unbeliever alike may partake at their own discretion, and where the authority of Christ and the apostolicity of his holy church are imperiled for the sake of sentiment? To a Baptist, a table so spread can have no meaning.
> In the light of New Testament teaching, the Lord's table is for the Lord's people—for those who have professed their faith in the act of loyal obedience, in the designated act by which their faith is portrayed, and the answer of the new-born soul is given to the grace of God—in the act of baptism, wherein they put on Christ.

Only the baptized—by which he means, of course, the immersed—have any place at the Lord's table:

> The restriction made by Baptists is not caused by anything Baptists are, or have done, but by a failure, either of faith or practice, on the part of other Christians. It is everywhere admitted that to baptized, penitent believers, saved by he grace of God through faith in Christ Jesus, was committed the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. In the strict attention paid to these qualifications, Baptists are consistent. Their practice has tended to uniformity of faith and order.

Interestingly enough this Disciple minister from Tennessee finds in the reactionary branch of the Disciples of Christ in England the model for us all to pattern after:

Let the "Disciples of Christ" answer whether their brethren in England, who are restricted communionists, are not the more loyal to the word of God in the witness they bear at the Lord's table.

One's instinctive resentment at the hospitality accorded this doctrine in a prominent organ of our people is softened somewhat when one reflects on how consistently logical it is. Close communion and close membership go together.

There is not a single reason nor the shadow of a reason why a congregation that arrogates to itself the right to debar from its membership any whom Christ has received into his Church should not also exercise the right of debarring such from the Communion table.

Sectarianism at the table is no worse than sectarianism at the church door—nor quite so bad.

The Communion is more sacred than the church roll. To admit to the holy of holies those who are denied a place in the outer court is flagrantly inconsistent.

But this comment is an aside. We were talking of innovations, and only wished to enlist others in helping us keep tab on them.

DO THIS, AND ALSO THE OTHER.

THE Jacksonville Times-Union is advocating the erection of a monument to the fidelity of the slaves. It says: "The men of the South went out with confidence, leaving the defenseless ones they loved under the protection of their loyal slaves, and during the four years of strife and over the whole extent of the confederacy not one Negro was unfaithful to his trust. A few, as the federal armies approached, ran away to freedom, but there is no record of one act of violence or one word of insult toward the wives and children of their masters. One who thinks of this wonderful record must see in it reason for pride for both races. Good will is never one-sided. The Negroes could not have shown such unswerving loyalty to those who had oppressed and maltreated them."

Very well. Let the monument be erected. But let them who build it be careful to avoid what we fear is the real implication of their structure, namely that it is to slavery we are indebted for all the good that ever was in the Negro. Let us remember that with all his faults the Negro has shown some admirable qualities and a quite notable development in his fifty years of freedom. It may be too soon to erect a monument to the progress of the freedman, but not till this is done need there be any great eagerness to memorialize his fidelity as a slave.

GETTING USED TO IT.

IT MUST seem ludicrous to our Christian neighbors to observe how seriously we Disciples of Christ take the proposal to practice Christian unity with others who are no less Christians than ourselves!

"What kind of people can you Disciples be," exclaimed a Presbyterian friend, "to be making such a wry face over that California church for nothing more than receiving into its membership those whom you yourselves believe Christ has received into his Church? Is your church something more exclusive, more aristocratic—I do not want to say narrower—than the Church of Christ?"

Of course it was difficult to make him see the historical side of it all—how a long time ago a sort of sectarian "kink" had been put into the Disciples' movement for Christian unity; how we have all along been shy about discussing the contradiction between our message and our practice; how we have even shied at thinking about it; until now in these non-sectarian twentieth century days we simply cannot endure to be narrower than the Church of Christ whose name alone we are willing to wear; and how at last, timidly and with trembling steps, some among us have really ventured to do what Thomas Campbell did a century ago and what Christ, our Lord, prayed that all his followers might always do.

Our friend could not, of course, feel the historical, inward, human side of it as vividly as a Disciple can feel it, but he quit smiling and said, thoughtfully, "Well, what you want is to talk it out in open meeting. When your people get used to it they will not take it so seriously."

And we thought: Yes, the not doing it is the solemn part of it; the actual doing of it is so Christian and so natural that when we have discussed it openly and frankly for awhile we will wonder how we ever could have made such a bugaboo of such a simple Christian duty.

NEVER FEAR!

SERIOUS concern is expressed in some of our correspondence lest the Berkeley affair be brought up at the Atlanta convention. Fears on this point are quite unnecessary. Suggestions of some such action which appear in response to the questionnaire now running in The Christian Century are to be taken as either facetious or as merely a strong way of expressing protest.

It is interesting that the gravest expressions of concern on this point have come from good brethren more or less closely connected with the Christian Board of Publication whose manager committed the Christian Evangelist to a policy that logically calls for the Atlanta convention as well as every state convention to do precisely what they did in California.

But the influence of the Christian Evangelist—if its manager should persist in his policy, which is extremely unlikely—will be wholly neutralized by that of the Christian Standard, which paper is just as strongly and clear-headedly set against the Atlanta convention making an ecclesiasticism of itself as The Christian Century is. If the brethren who have expressed their concern will see to it that the Christian Evangelist is kept straight before we go to Atlanta there need be no fear of any embarrassing complications.

COLLEGE, NOT UNIVERSITY.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the change of title of Christian University at Canton, Mo., to Canton College gives evidence of the earnest desire of the trustees and constituency of that excellent educational institution to square their claims with facts. The older name has always offended our editorial pen when it was compelled to indite a reference to the school, but henceforth it will be a delight to inscribe the convenient and euphonious title, "Canton College."

This change of name is in line with the recommendations made by the Men and Millions Movement for the improvement of the ideals and standards of all Disciple colleges.

Some years ago Butler, in Indianapolis, discarded the high sounding "University" and has prospered never so well as a college. Of course its self-respect and the self-respect of its student body and alumni have been appreciably enhanced by the change. It is understood that Transylvania University in Lexington, Ky., is considering a similar change, if indeed it has not already made it.

Every person familiar with the connotation of the two words will congratulate any school now existing among the Disciples that frankly abandons the more ambitious title and takes its place on the solid and dignified level of a college.

In general use, as well as in academic circles, the term "university" applies to an institution amply enough endowed to provide advanced graduate and research courses. There are but few real universities in this country, and for an institution of college rank to wear the name constantly suggests flamboyance or charlatanism to the informed outsider. No college dealing as seriously and as successfully with its educational tasks as every one of the Disciples colleges does, can afford to give warrant in the public mind for any such suspicion.

Do You Know Your Bible?

THERE was never a time when so much real interest was manifested in Bible study as today. Much of the modern sutdy, so-called, is shallow and unsatisfactory, it is true, but the very fact that countless courses of Scripture study are being offered, some of them being advertised in secular newspapers, is an evidence of a widespread desire to become acquainted with the teachings of

"The Book"—The Bible

The contest method of exploiting churches and Sunday schools has not always been wisely used. Too often religion is swallowed up of zeal for big reports and the mere winning of the contest. But, it must be confessed, the love of contest, of competition, is strong in human nature, and when properly controlled and directed it may be used to yield most substantial and worth-while results in knowledge and character.

"The Conquest" Plan

Now, the question is, Can the contest idea be utilized in giving to our Sunday schools a more thorough, a more vital, knowledge of the Bible and religious truth? Instead of mere number-getting, can the contest be made to serve the purpose of character-building? "The Conquest," the wide-awake weekly published by the Disciples Publication Society, for adult and young people's classes, thinks it can. The plan which this paper has formulated for its "Bible Knowledge Contest" is given herewith.

One Hundred Questions

on the Bible will be furnished "The Conquest" by ten leading Disciple ministers and teachers. Among these question-makers will be: Rev. Peter Ainslie, Prof. H. L. Willett, Rev. Finis Idleman, Rev. John R. Ewers, Rev. W. S. Athearn, Rev. Edgar D. Jones, Rev. John E. Pounds, Rev. P. J. Rice, Rev. H. H. Peters, Rev. H. T. Cree and others. These One Hundred Questions will be published in "The Conquest," from week to week, in instalments. Every issue will contain contest material. The contest will begin early in the autumn quarter.

A Word About the Questions

They will not be catch questions, meant to trip up the contestants; nor will they be questions without vital significance. They will, on the contrary, be fundamental, significant. They will be such questions as, when answered, will give a better understanding of the great religious truths and facts taught and exemplified in our Book of Religion.

Twenty-Five Prizes

For Individuals

Five Disciple leaders of authority in Bible scholarship will serve as judges in the contest. At the close of the competition they will award twenty-five prizes to the contestants sending in the most nearly correct lists of answers to the One Hundred Questions.

The First Prize will be a beautiful set of the works of Harold Bell Wright, bound in full leather, with gilt top, a veritable edition de luxe. The set includes the following books: That Printer of Udell's, The Shepherd of the Hills, The Calling of Dan Matthews, The Winning of Barbara Worth, Their Yesterdays, and the new book just from the press, The Eyes of the World. This splendid prize has been donated to the contest by the publishers, The Book Supply Company, Chicago.

The Second Prize will be a fine American Revised Bible, divinity circuit, leather lined, silk sewed, a book of which the winner will certainly be proud. This is the donation of Thos. Nelson & Sons, New York.

The Third Prize, Ladies' Solid Gold Chatelaine, or Men's Gold Christian Endeavor Charm. Donated by the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

TWENTY-TWO OTHER PRIZES, TO BE ANNOUNCED LATER!

Three Prizes for Schools

In addition to the prizes to be given to individual winners, Three Splendid Sunday School Banners will be awarded the three schools which send in the largest number of correct—or nearly correct lists of answers. These Banners have been donated by The Practical Sunday School Supplies Company, Chicago; W. H. Dietz, dealer in Sunday school supplies, Chicago; Meigs Publishing Company, publishers of and dealers in Sunday school supplies.

YOUR SCHOOL—YOUR CLASS—YOU—SHOULD PARTICIPATE IN THIS BIBLE KNOWLEDGE CONTEST!

This is going to be the most elaborate competition of its kind ever undertaken by a Sunday school publication. It will build up your school in numbers and interest, in Bible knowledge and Christian character. Tell your superintendent, your teacher, your class, your pastor, about the Bible knowledge contest, and tell them that you MUST have "The Conquest" in the school during the time the contest is running. Fill out the following coupon, and send at once to The Conquest, 700-714 E. Fortieth St., Chicago.

Cardinals Elect A New Pope

On the sixth ballot for the succession of Pope Pius X, His Eminence Giacomo Della Chiesa, archbishop of Bologna, was selected as the 259th ruler in the papal chair. Particulars of the election are unknown, and will remain so. Whatever reports were sent out as to other candidates and their respective votes are purely conjectural. What human motives led to the elevation of the cardinal archbishop of Bologna, whose name had not hitherto figured as a papal candidate above those who seemed more favored, is equally hidden. It is another illustration that in the selection of a pope it is the unexpected that always happens. It may be of interest, as a pure speculation, to strive to determine why a man who had been only recently created a cardinal, enjoying this prerogative since May of this year, should have been chosen in preference to others whose names have occupied attention as likely to succeed the recently deceased pontiff. The policy of the papacy swings back and forth like a pendulum. It is rare that any pope follows the footsteps of his predecessor. No two men could have been more unlike than Leo XIII and Pius X. The aim of both was the welfare of the church, but the means chosen were far apart. Now that so many of the desires of Pius X were made part of the church it may have seemed fitting that a departure from his policy was needed. This was the more urgent in view of the fact that the new incumbent must be conversant with the science of diplomacy.

til December, 1907, when he was sent to the very important see of Bologna as its archbishop. There can be no doubt of his administrative ability. In a city none too friendly he won admiration and respect. In May of this year Pope Pius X created him a cardinal. It is interesting to learn of the choice of name made by the newly elected pope. It was natural that it should have been Benedict. First because the greatest of that name, Benedict XIV, Prospero Lambertini, was a native of Bologna, as well as its archbishop. For the last seven years the incumbent of the archbishopric lived in the very house occupied by his eminent predecessor. Secondly, because, as the fourteenth Benedict was, of all the popes, the most learned canonist, the fifteenth of that name is an adept of that same science, and it shall be incumbent on him to put into execution the revision of the canon law of the church, which is now almost ready for promulgation.

WAR AFFECTS CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The war now raging in Europe touches the Catholic Church very closely. When it is ended many questions will come up for settlement. It will then be needful to have a pope who is no stranger to European politics. It will require a master hand to safeguard the interests of the church. This thought must have been in the minds of the fifty-six cardinals who sat in the conclave. There may have been others equally fitted, but there were none more available than Cardinal della Chiesa. The dominant figure of the conclave that selected Pius X, Cardinal Rampolla, had only recently passed away. Had he lived his choice seemed a certainty. But in his place was one who had served under the great master, one whom he had trained. At Madrid Mgr. della Chiesa had been the secretary of Rampolla. When the great cardinal was made secretary of state for Leo XIII, Mgr. della Chiesa was placed under him. Mgr. della Chiesa from the position of "minutanti," really a confidential messenger, mounted to the position of "substitutus" or acting secretary.

THE NEW POPE A DIPLOMAT.

There can be no question of his fitness to meet diplomatic emergencies. With the change of administration of Leo XIII it was but natural the new secretary, Merry del Val, should make his own selections. The confidence that Mgr. della Chiesa had begotten is shown in the fact that he was selected to be the papal nuncio at Madrid. For reasons of his own he refused the appointment. He continued in the secretariate of state un-

"The Presbyterian" of London Suspends.

The Presbyterian, the weekly organ of the Presbyterian Church in England, announces its suspension of publication for the present. This is owing to two conditions; one of which is that the sources of revenue have been largely cut off on account of business paralysis due to war conditions, and the other is the increased cost of paper and the stoppage of import of raw materials used in the output of the paper. The directors therefore feel that it is better to suspend the issue of the paper, and thereby husband their resources until normal conditions are resumed throughout the country. The editorial and other departments of the paper are heavy with the sorrow that has come upon the people in this ruinous war. The moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England, Dr. James R. Gilles, issues a message to the Church in which he declares taht all that could be done for peace, consistently with honor, had been done, and all had failed. Pleas for neutrality are out of date. The only herald of peace must be the sword drawn in a religious cause. He calls for vigorous self-denial in the use of all things that pertain to the maintenance of life; a practical sympathy for all those on whom the burden of suffering will fall the most heavily, and urges young men to respond to the appeal of active service. His final recommendation is daily intercession at the family altar and meetings for prayer in all the churches. With regard to Germany he announces this beautiful Christian sentiment: "Let us studiously refrain from everything that might tend to embitter and perpetuate the present unnatural alienation. Abusive epithets applied to their ruler, the imputation of sordid and unworthy motives of a high-minded people, these are signs of weakness and not of strength in ourselves. Let us fight them, since fight we must—confident in God and in our righteous cause; but let us fight them, so that, when the war is over, we may be free to say: We never were your enemies; we hated to draw the sword against you; we only wished you well. You are our brothers born, our natural allies. Let us join hands once more, and work together for the cause of freedom and progress."

Bishop McIntyre Passes On.

The Methodist Church and the Christian world hear with grief the news of the death of Bishop Robert McIntyre, which occurred at Wesley Hospital, Chicago, last week. Bishop McIntyre was only 62 years of age. He was born in Scotland of humblest parents, his father being a weaver who, while the son was six years of age, came to this country. Here Robert McIntyre learned and followed the trade of bricklayer, working on the walls of the Tremont Hotel, Chicago, after the great fire, and in due course, laying brick also on the old Lindell Hotel, St. Louis. As a lad, he had the Scotch trait of cross-questioning ideas, and a Scotchman's appetite for solid books. He carried the new physicists, Huxley and Tyndal, in his jeans to his work with trowel and mortal, and in the sort of debating club into which boarding-houses sometimes seem organized, could hold his own against all comers who attacked his agnostic creed. It chanced that one evening the young man entered the First Methodist Church, South, in St. Louis and there he found the joy of salvation. This was in 1877 and the young man was then a traveling book agent. The next year he entered the Illinois Conference. His first charge was Easton, and they still tell how when a church was needed, the young bricklayer with his own hands put the bricks in the wall. That trowel hung in Bishop McIntyre's study all the rest of his life; nor did he ever forget the toilers in whose ranks he always felt himself to belong; rather he pointed to this trowel and his card of membership in the bricklayers' union as symbols of his real life.

After serving the churches at Marshall, Charleston and Urbana, he was appointed to Grace Church, Chicago, the most responsible Methodist pulpit in the West. This shocked him. But he found that at bottom all human hearts are human.

Congregations at Grace Church were so large, special street cars were massed to carry away the people. When Dr. McIntyre concluded his Grace pastorate, he was taken to Denver, where at Trinity, he had the largest congregations of any Methodist preacher in the world. His popularity as a lyceum lecturer was scarcely surpassed. From Denver Dr. McIntyre went to St. James Church, Chicago, where a like triumph attended him; and from St. James, to First Church, Los Angeles, where a vast structure was immediately all too small. He was made a bishop in 1908 and his official residence at the time of his death was Oklahoma City.

Church and Labor.

Many are the signs of increasing friendliness towards the Church on the part of leaders in labor organizations in the United States. A like welcome approachment is reported in England. Leaders there are said to be showing a "strong tendency to recognize in the personality and teaching of Jesus the only hope for the full and final success of the endeavor to uplift the laboring classes of the world." "Labor day" in England comes in the spring (May) instead of the fall (September) as here. This year it is described as marking the beginning of a week of prayer and preaching, the meetings being addressed by leaders of the labor movement. There was participation in the meetings by an Anglican bishop. There were warm expressions of interest and approval from such distinguished churchmen as the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of London. The latter is reported as saying that in England the labor movement is avowedly and definitely religious, and he urges that the Church be so changed to meet it. One of the settlements in London has organized an association known as the Fellowship of Followers, of which any person may become a member regardless of church connections or of the lack of them, who will sign a declaration consisting of the words of Christ, "If any man will come after me, let him take up his cross and follow me."

Women Pray for Peace.

Brushing aside the barriers of sect, caste, and race, 10,000 women of Denver gathered in the auditorium two weeks ago and knelt in prayer for prompt termination of the war in Europe. One of the chief speakers was Mrs. E. P. Costigan, president of the Woman's Club. They bemoaned the wholesale sacrifice of life.

Dr. Jowett Reported Ill.

The distinguished pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, Dr. J. Henry Jowett, has been making a tour of the East and has suffered a break down in health of some moment. It is hoped that with cancelling engagements made for public appearances in England and complete rest he will be able to resume his work in the metropolis in the fall.

Laymen of Presbyterian Assembly.

Dr. Charles Stelzle has been analyzing the membership of the late Presbyterian General Assembly as to the occupations and places of residence of the delegates. There were 459 laymen in the assembly and they are classified as follows: Farmers, 91; merchants, 40; business men, 24; lawyers, 20; doctors, 16; bankers, 13; clerks, 11; ranchmen, 11; retired, 11; manufacturers, 8; real estate dealers, 8; agents, 7; teachers, 6; lumbermen, 6; publishers, 4; postmen, 4; salesmen, 4; editors, 4; grocers, 4; carpenters, 4; professors, 3; insurance, 3; machinists, 3; barbers, 3; printers, 3; secretaries, 3; bookkeepers, 3. There were two of each of the following: Druggists, dentists, capitalists, railroad men, inspectors, civil service, undertakers, nurserymen. Eighty-two give no occupations but in nearly every case these are business men in cities.

Mission Work and the War.

The Continent contains a vigorous article with the title, "Giving to Missions Must Not Decline." It is timely and needed. There is reason to fear that the disorganization and interruption of social religious and commercial life which is suffered by the peoples across the sea and the inescapable reflex influence upon us in America, will very seriously be felt in foreign and other mission work. We read: "A stress of burden must be shouldered by the church which it has never borne before. The stress begins with this: The Church must this time keep up its mission giving unfalteringly, no matter how its temporal prosperity falls. If incomes go down, the utmost cut of economy must be applied to what Christians spend on themselves before they think of abating what they give to the cause of making this world what Christ wants." The condition of the missions of the churches in Europe will be marked by unprecedented embarrassments.

Missionary Co-operation in India

BY GEORGE W. BROWN.

THE most important development in co-operative work in India has taken place recently, in the transfer of a certain amount of territory from the Methodist Mission to the Presbyterian Mission in North India, and vice versa. This involved a transfer of a number of Indian Christians from one mission to another. It happens that in that area there are a great many people becoming Christians. What we know as a mass movement is in progress there. The work of these two missions overlapped to a certain extent, and neither mission was able fully to take care of the converts in both areas, so that by limiting the territory worked by each mission they were enabled to work territory more thoroughly, and in this way secure better results.

THE LANGUAGE SCHOOL.

But there are other matters in which the missions are co-operating very successfully. I may mention among these the language school. The most successful language school at present in operation is the one for teaching Hindi and Urdu. This is located in Lucknow, though we cannot say as yet that this will be the permanent location of the school. It is managed by a joint committee, representing a large number of missions that patronize the school. The teachers are missionaries of different missions. The school is open to all missions in this part of India on equal terms. At present there are fifty-nine students in the schools. Three of them are of our mission. A school has also been opened for the teaching of Bengali in Calcutta. This is also managed along the line of joint control, and its principal is a member of the English Baptist Mission. This school is having a very successful opening year. On the West Coast there is a school for the teaching of Marathi. Like the others this also is under the control of several missions. Large plans were laid for a language school in South India, the home of which was to be in Bangalore. The prospectus was drawn up and the missions agreed to co-operate; several languages were to be taught in this school. The gentleman who was to be principal at that time went home on furlough, and the matter was held in abeyance for some time; as yet the school is not in proper working order, but I believe that it will be shortly, and that its work also will be a success.

In such matters as Bible translation and the carrying on of literature societies, the missions of India have always co-operated. In practically all the languages there are joint committees with representatives of different missions on them which have in charge the work of translation and revision of the Bible. I may mention that I am a member of the committee which is revising the Hindi Old Testament at this time. The Christian literature which is issued is mostly published by the different tract and book societies which work in different parts of India. They are managed by joint committees representing different missions, and contributions from missionaries of any denomination whatsoever are accepted.

Another matter in which missions co-operate is the publication of hymn books. In our own area there is a movement on foot just now to publish a hymn book in Hindi and perhaps in Urdu also, which will suit the needs of a large number of Indian Christians. Joint committees have been appointed to look into this matter, but as yet the book has not been prepared. We believe, however, that in a short time such a book will be issued. Such books are being issued in other languages and several missions loyally co-operate in the publication and use of them.

CO-OPERATION AS TO TEACHERS.

There has been for some years a number of missionary associations in different parts of India in which missionaries have been co-operating in different matters, such as rules for the salary, regulation and discipline of Indian workers. This is especially important in connection with the matter of teachers. Committees are at work drawing up more or less uniform scales of pay for teachers, discussing the terms on which they may be employed, the terms on which they may be taken from one mission to another, and all such relative matters. As a rule the missions are displaying a very friendly spirit in all these matters. The time was when such things created trouble and missions, at least some missions, manifested no particular amount of compunction in taking a worker whom they desired from another mission which might perhaps be very poorly able to spare him. However, this matter is being remedied and missions are co-operating very loyally along such lines as this.

Another matter in which missions are co-operating is education work. This is being done along several lines. In the

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

A Visit to Pope Pius X

Disclosing the Simple and Democratic Personality of the Late Pontiff

IT is not often that the passing of a Pope of the Roman Catholic Church is met with such universal expressions of esteem as have followed the death of Pius X. He ranked lower than his predecessor in intellectual gifts and administrative ability. Leo XIII was a scholar, a diplomat, and a man of the world; his struggle for the temporal power that was so surely slipping away from his church, though happily unavailing, showed ability of no mean order.

Pius X was by origin, by training, and by character, an entirely different man from the ambitious and aristocratic Leo; he was the son of a Venetian peasant, one of ten children, and of the warmest family attachments; he had known that struggle with poverty, which helped him to sympathy with the poor and needy, and was most generous in his charities; he loved the common people, and was beloved by them. He had always lived in a Roman Catholic country, and knew little of the outside world; he was not notable as a scholar, and had neither taste nor experience for politics or diplomacy. His interest was not in national or international problems but in the church in which he was born, and which he represented; and so, substantially, his reforms were for what he considered the well being of his church, and were mainly concerned with its theology and liturgy.

REFORM OF CHURCH MUSIC.

One of his earliest reforms was his encyclical in regard to church music, and it has much in it that is of interest to all churches. He maintained that the function of true church music was to stimulate devotion, and not to provide entertainment and artistic satisfaction. When he was elected in 1913, he found many Catholic choirs using operatic music for hymns and part of the mass. The popular Sextet from "Lucia" was not infrequently heard at the most sacred part of the service. While he recommended the Gregorian chants as the basis of music for the Catholic service, yet he also authorized the use of modern compositions, in so far as they contributed to the spirit of uplift and devotion.

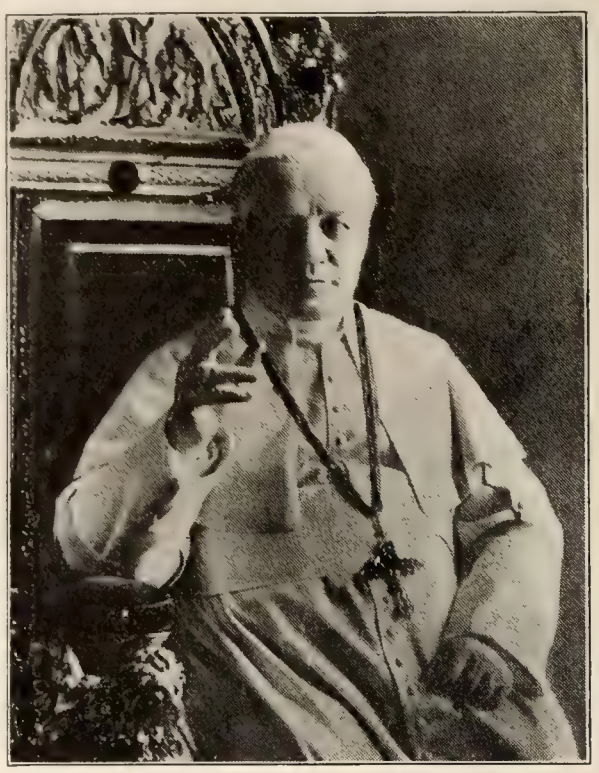
He set his face like flint against what was called Modernism in his church, and took severe measures against priests, professors, or students who were sympathetic with it.

STRONGLY AGAINST MODERNISM.

With this conservative type of mind, it was inevitable that he should array himself against many modern social movements. He pronounced against Socialism. He was an uncompromising opponent of woman suffrage, maintaining that woman was not man's equal, and therefore was not qualified to enjoy equal rights with him,—and he quoted passages from the Bible which (in his opinion) justified his position.

Yet in spite of a conservatism that sometimes approached medievalism in ecclesiastical matters, the benign personality of Pius X, his simplicity, his sincerity, and his spiritual faith, has endeared him to the world. He was endowed with a handsome and stately personality, and his face is said to have resembled that of Phillips Brooks. His love of peace is well known, and an added touch of pathos is joined to his death, by the fact that his last illness began with the great war in Europe. His physicians are quoted as saying that grief over the situation brought on the final crisis, and so overwhelmed him that he was unable to rally from the shock at his advanced age. A dispatch quotes him as saying just before the end:

"Now I believe that the Almighty, in his inexhaustible goodness, wishes to spare me the horrors of this dreadful war."



The Late Pope Pius X.

HOMESICK IN THE VATICAN.

His homesick longing for his own people was so great, that a few years ago, at his request, his two sisters left Venice, and took up their residence in rooms adjoining the Vatican, so as to be near him. His lack of self-seeking is shown in the fact that he died poor, and left only a pension of sixty dollars a month to each of these devoted women.

His democratic simplicity made him of easy access to any one. When a small party of us spent a week in Rome four years ago, we had no more idea of seeing the Pope than of being presented to the King of England at the Court of St. James. But a short time after we arrived, without expectation or solicitation on our part, we were told that we could attend the Pope's audience on the following Tuesday, if we so desired. Nothing was required of us but that we should meet our conductor at the Vatican at an appointed hour, should be dressed in black or white, and should have a veil to match, to throw over the head when the hat was removed.

WAITING FOR THE POPE.

We found him waiting for us at the private entrance to the palace, and he lead us, past a group of Swiss Guards in their gay uniforms, up the splendid stairway, and along broad corridors, to an anterooom, where more than one hundred persons were awaiting the signal to enter the papal audience chamber. Many of the crowd seemed to be tourists, as we were, and wore black street costumes; a few women were richly dressed—one young girl was in white silk or satin, with a white veil, and looked like a lovely bride. There were a number of priests and members of religious orders in their distinctive garbs. Many had crucifixes and rosaries, which (to them) would be valuable, because of the papal blessing. Attendants took charge of our hats, parasols, and any packages, and we adjusted our veils on our heads.

While we were waiting, we made the acquaintance of our conductor whom we had not seen before. He was a young Irish-American from Boston, and was a student at the Jesuit University in Rome; he had already been there nine years, and it would take him two more to finish his course. He belonged to the French Missionary order of La La Pette, and when he was asked to what mission field he was going, answered quite simply, "I do not know; I go where I am sent."

THE POPE'S VACATION!

He was of delightful manners and appearance, and spoke with evident pleasure of going soon on his vacation, to work in the grape harvest in Northern Italy. Some one (not very well posted) asked if the Pope took a vacation, and the young priest said, with a shade of sadness, "Oh, no! The Holy Father never leaves the Vatican."

He was delighted to find a lady from Boston, and while he was asking her some questions about his old home, the signal was given to pass into the audience chamber. It was a magnificent room, hung in rich red damask, with a few priceless pictures on the walls, with the papal throne at the far end; along the sides, were chairs where we sat. The only touch of splendor in the ceremony was the rich uniforms of the Guards of Honor, and the elegant attire of the gentlemen in waiting.

I had always pictured a papal reception, with the Pontiff seated on his throne, and every one going up and kneeling as they were presented to him; but Pius X came quietly in the door at the upper end, and walked slowly all around the room, giving his hand, with the pastoral ring on it, to each one—leaving it to them whether they would kiss it or not. He was dressed in a long white woolen tunic, with short white cape and sash, and red sandals—and was a beautiful and benignant figure. I only heard him speak a few times—to some of the Brethren, and to a little boy, whose mother had brought him with her.

THE PAPAL BENEDICTION.

When he had passed all around, he paused at the door, and extending his arms, said some words in Latin—the papal benediction; then he passed out as quietly as he had entered, and his attendants followed, with much more state—and the audience was over.

When one thinks of the difficulty, the expense, and the coaching it requires to be presented at any European Court, the democratic simplicity of such a function as this could not fail to make a pleasant impression on an American mind. But the pleasantest impression of all was the gentle and winning personality of the Pope; and I am sure that all who were present felt that, no matter what were the errors of the Church of Rome, both in teaching and practice, Pius X was a humble and devout follower of Jesus Christ. I. W. H.

Amateur Business Genius.

Ruth came home from her first visit to Sunday-school carrying a small sack of candy.

"Why, Ruth, where did you get the candy?" asked the family who had gathered to hear her experiences.

Ruth looked up in surprise.

"I bought it with the nickel you gave me," she said; the minister met me at the door and got me in for nothing.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Science's Enormous Strides.

Doctor: "What? Troubled with sleeplessness? Eat something before going to bed." Patient: "Why, doctor, you once told me never to eat anything before going to bed." Doctor (with dignity): "Pooh, pooh! That was last January. Science has made enormous strides since then."

Of Human Interest

Scientist Speaks for Spiritual Things.

In an essay recently published, John Burroughs, philosopher, scientist, nature-writer and poet, says some things which might well make the present day "scientific point of view" think again:

"In this age of science we have heaped up great intellectual riches of the purely scientific kind," says Mr. Burroughs. "Our mental coffers are fairly bursting with our stores of the knowledge of material things. But what will it profit us if we gain the whole world and lose our own souls? Must our finer spiritual faculties, whence come our love, our reverence, our humility, and our appreciation of the beauty of the world, atrophy? 'Where there is no vision the people perish'—perish for want of a clear perception of the higher values of life. Where there is no vision, no intuitive perception of the great fundamental truths of the spiritual world, science will not save us. In such a case our civilization is like an engine running without a headlight."

Two Colonels on Woman Suffrage.

COLONEL WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

"As man and woman are cotenants of the earth and must work out their destiny together, the presumption is on the side of equality of treatment in all that pertains to their joint life and its opportunities. The burden of proof is on those who claim for one an advantage over the other in determining the conditions under which both shall live. This claim has not been established inthe matter of suffrage. been established in the matter of suffrage. woman suffrage appear to me to be invalid, while the arguments advanced in support of the proposition are, in my judgment, convincing."

COLONEL HENRY WATTERSON.

"No man who loves and reveres woman—especially no man who loves and reveres his own women—can, without foreboding, look upon this crusade, and all that it implies, of degradation to womanhood, of destruction to all domestic and moral organism, of desecration to everything we hold dear in the wife, the mother, and the home."

The Vanity of Fame.

Two gentlemen, a lawyer and his friend,—so the New York Sun relates,—were recently motoring through Greenfield, Indiana, the birthplace of James Whitcomb Riley. They stopped for luncheon, and after the meal inquired of the hotel clerk:

"Where is the Riley house?"

"I don't know any hotel by that name," he replied, "although there may be some such boarding house here."

"I mean the James Whitcomb Riley house," said the lawyer, thinking that the clerk had misunderstood him.

"I don't know him; you may be able to find his name in the city directory."

"I guess he's moved," said the lawyer.

"Probably," the hotel keeper commented. "Some of them renters don't stay long in a place."

Half a century ago, when the fame of Whittier, the Quaker poet, was yet young, a somewhat similar incident occurred in Amesbury, where he lived. A traveler, with a few hours to spare and a soul for poetry, strolled into a shop on the main street and asked for "the Whittier house." The obliging clerk shook his head.

"There's plenty of Whitchers in town," he said, using the local pronunciation of the name, "but there don't none of 'em keep a hotel. Somebody's told you wrong."

"No, no!" explained the visitor. "I'm not looking for a hotel; I want to find the house Whittier lived in."

"Which Whitcher?" inquired the clerk.

"Which Whittier?" exploded the traveler, who was of a peppery disposition. "The Whittier! I don't care whether the rest of the tribe live in Ballyhack or Amesbury!"

"They don't live in Ballyhack, and most of 'em do live in Amesbury, and I can direct you to any Whitcher house you want to find," declared the aggrieved clerk. "All is, don't fly off the handle. Just tell me which, and I'll tell you where. But if you won't so much as tell a fellow which Whitcher you want, how's he to tell which house your Whitcher lives in?"

"I want," said the traveler, "John Greenleaf Whittier, the poet."

Moving Pictures Censored.

What is going on in the moving picture censorship office, in Chicago, may be inferred by a glance at the following "Rejections" and "Cutouts" reported by the committee. This is one day's work.

REJECTIONS.

"Was She Right in Forgiving?" Permit refused because picture shows how an artist takes undue advantage of his model, and has a background of immorality in it.

"Her Yesterday." Permit refused because picture is based on the story of a girl who after leading an immoral life, renounces it, but continues to live same life with another man.

"A New Exhibition." Permit refused because picture portrays the life of freaks at a circus sideshow in its extreme vulgarity and suggestiveness.

CUTOUTS.

"The Fatal Accident." Holdup of couple in carriage.

"The Soul of Honor." Man committing suicide with gun.

"The Ambassador's Envoy." Cutting telephone wires; opening windows with jimmy; all scenes showing woman gagged and bound until she throws chair over; lighting fuse and blowing safe open.

"A Presentment." Burglars breaking window and entering house.

"Betrothed." Kidnaping Girl; shorten scene of taking girl into woods.

"A Knight." Stabbing man and woman; killing men; shorten scene showing dead body to a flash.

"The Blind Man's Dog." Stealing money and dog from blind man; beating dog.

"Brewery Town Romance." Shorten all saloon scenes to a flash.

"Blotted Out." Spy firing shot at general.

Only the Butter.

Mr. Crisscross: "Pass me the butter, please." Miss Featherbone: "With all my heart." Mr. Crisscross: "Only the butter, please."—Puck.

Disciples Table Talk

Efficiency Week in Kansas Church.

The church at Greensburg, Kansas, has invited the Disciple ministers from all the neighboring county seat towns to come to Greensburg and tell them how to make their church more efficient. A week is set apart for the visit of these pastors. Such concentration of counsel ought to give any local church an impetus which would at once make for greater efficiency.

From Pacific to Atlantic.

Bad news travels quickly. A recent issue of the Boston (Mass.) Transcript gives a history of the Berkeley church and condemns the convention which refused to receive delegates from this church. The article in the Transcript begins with this comment: "Another chapter—and one not very encouraging to the cause of church unity has occurred in the attempt to secure a more inclusive Christian attitude among the churches of the Disciples of Christ."

Another United Church.

O. C. Bolman, of Pekin, Ill., writes that he has lead in the organization of a church in South Pekin, similar to the community church which Wm. J. Lockhart recently organized in the suburbs of Des Moines, Iowa. The church is called the "United Church of South Pekin." Several of the different Protestant religious bodies are represented in the membership. There are now forty-seven members in the organization, forty-two being charter members. A determined effort is being made to keep this church from becoming denominational. The present minister is a Disciple and the Sunday-school superintendent is a Methodist. The church at its organization adopted a covenant setting forth important ideals. Continued effort will be made by those interested to preserve the spirit of Christian unity.

Christian Union Churches.

There are scattered over the country a growing number of union churches. O. J. McMullen has just resigned the pastorate of such a church at Blue Ridge, Ind. H. S. Smith of Newark, O., has been called to the Blue Ridge pastorate. Such news items as these are of frequent occurrence in the newspapers of the country. Recently a committee of Disciple ministers was appointed at one of the annual gatherings to get into touch with these union churches and the men who minister to them.

President Pritchard Visiting Churches.

It is the plan of H. O. Pritchard, president of Eureka College, to visit all the leading churches in Illinois for the purpose of presenting the interests of Eureka College and Christian education in general. Mr. Pritchard has been in the position of president of Eureka College for only one year, but he is already achieving success and winning the support of the churches.

Mother Church Entertains.

Last week the Valparaiso church entertained the annual meeting of the churches in Porter county, Ind. The sessions were held in a large tent at the Valparaiso University park. There are more than 2,000 Disciples in Porter county which has justified them in preparing an elaborate program. Grant K. Lewis, of the American Society, Myron Settle, director of religious education at Gary, Ind., Gary L. Cook, Indiana State S. S. secretary, and Chas. R. Scoville were among the leading speakers on the program.

Tennessee State Convention Approaching.

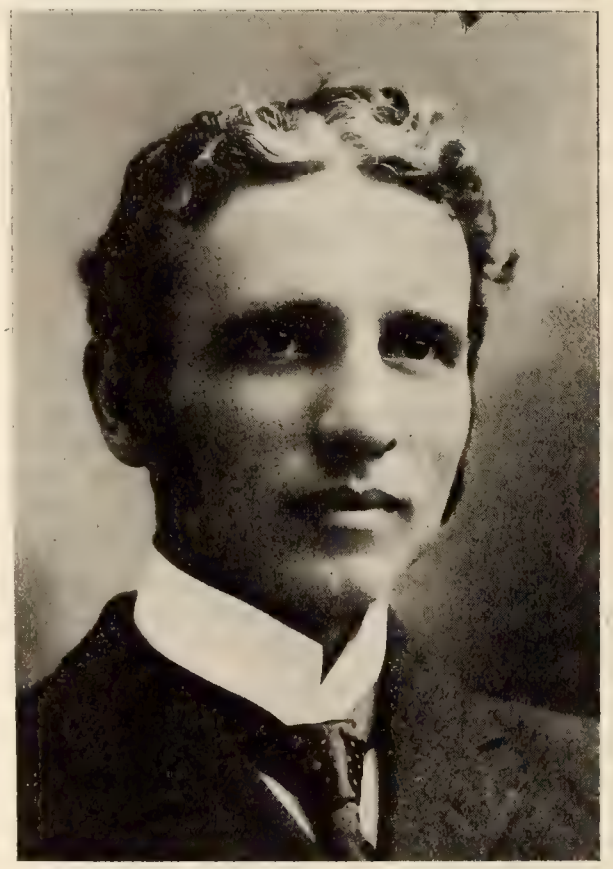
The annual convention of the Churches of Christ in Tennessee will be held at Rockwood, September 21-24. All who are interested in this great southern field should attend. An excellent program has been prepared, and profitable sessions are assured. If you are planning to attend the convention, it will simplify matters if you will send your name to W. P. Shamhart, who is pastor at Rockwood.

Renewing Friendships in Illinois.

For a number of years B. S. Ferrall has been the successful pastor of Jefferson St. Church in Buffalo, N. Y. During August Mr. Ferrall visited Watseka, where he was pastor eleven years ago. On August 30 he preached for C. G. Kindred at Englewood in Chicago. Mr. Ferrall reports great pleasure in meeting old friends in Illinois.

"Nothing Doing on Sunday."

At Anthony, Kans., the Disciples two years ago dedicated the finest church building in the town. The other churches already had good buildings. Now comes the editor of the Anthony Republican in a criticism which has more than local significance. The criticism follows: "Having put the Sunday ball games out of business the churches have decided to take a little vacation. The Baptist church will have no preaching for two weeks. The Christian Church will have no evening services until further notice. The Congregational church will not resume services until the last Sunday of the month. The Methodist Church is the only one doing business at the old stand. It seems that it is a poor idea to break up Sunday ball and the church services all at one time and leave the dear people without excitement of any kind."



Rev. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, who gave one of the chief addresses at the Illinois Convention.

A Significant Farewell Service.

One of the symptoms of the present day tendency toward Christian unity is seen in the fact that the churches of local communities are discovering more occasions to get together in union assemblies than heretofore. L. O. Lehman, pastor at Gibson City, Ill., recently resigned. The other ministers of the town took it upon themselves to arrange a farewell service in the city park. The service was so largely attended that the park could hardly accommodate the people. Mr. Lehman's farewell address was a plea for the growth of community ideals and the increase of the spirit of unity among Christian people.

Kansas Church Quits.

Country churches are having their difficulties as well as the downtown city churches. The editor of a country newspaper at Towanda, Kans., bewails the fact that interest in the churches is waning in his town. It seems that the Christian Church of Towanda has decided to quit, and this has moved the editor to say that the congregation does not half try to maintain a pastor and that the closing of the church is a loss to religion and a reflection on the citizenship of the community.

Church and Gardening.

Now the church is going into gardening. An industrial club has been organized in the church at Sedalia, Mo., with the object of promoting poultry raising, cooking, and gardening. More than an acre of ground was given to the club and 1,500 tomato plants were set out. Each night the members of the club report for work. The ripe tomatoes will be canned by the women in the basement of the church and the products will be sold for the benefit of the church.

New Program at Oskaloosa.

At Oskaloosa, Iowa, the church has been struggling for a number of years to maintain the traditional type of mid-week prayer-meeting. The leaders in the church have decided to try a different character of meeting this fall and winter. The meetings will be opened with a short devotional period after which there will be a lecture, a prepared discussion or conference. A well thought out program of meetings will be followed.

Worth While Lecture On Mexico.

Jasper T. Moses gave a stereopticon lecture on "Picturesque Mexico and Her Peoples" in the Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, August 23. Although it was a rainy Sunday there was a large audience present. The lecture proved very instructive. Mr. Moses is so thoroughly acquainted with Mexico and presents his subject in such a direct and authoritative way that one cannot fail to be both entertained and instructed. It will be remembered that Mr. Moses spent several years in Mexico studying conditions and leading in our missionary and educational work conducted by the C. W. B. M. There is no one among the Disciples now in the United States better qualified to speak on Mexico. Recently Mr. Moses lectured at Battle Creek, Mich., on the "Social and Political Conditions in Mexico."

W. W. Sniff Visits Old Pastorate.

W. W. Sniff, pastor of the First Church at New Castle, Pa., and formerly pastor of the Paris, Ill., church for six years, recently spent a week in Paris and vicinity. He preached Sunday morning, August 23, in Paris, and in the afternoon and evening for two country churches where he had held meetings during his ministry in Paris. Large congregations heard Mr. Sniff and many were the expressions of appreciation. He has been away from Paris two years, during which H. H. Peters has been pastor of the church. Mr. Sniff reports great pleasure in his work in New Castle.

New Secretary for California.

"The third time" has proven to be "the charm" with F. M. Rogers, pastor First church at Long Beach, Cal. During his pastorate at that church the state board of Southern California has three times called him to the position of superintendent of missions. The third time was only a few weeks ago and he has accepted. Mr. Rogers will be superintendent of missions, secretary of a board of commissioners to start a new college of the Disciples in southern California, and secretary of the '1915 Committee," that will arrange for the entertainment of the National Convention to meet in Los Angeles next year. The following is from the Daily Telegram of Long Beach: "The new members of the First Christian church and the citizens of Long Beach generally will regret to have Mr. Rogers retire from the local pastorate. He has not only been active in the work of his own congregation, but an important factor in the life of the city. The church of which he has been pastor has come to rank among the leading churches of the city, now numbering 1,175 in its membership, and during the six years of the present pastorate 950 have been added, more than 800 of these having been received at regular services. Through his splendid leadership the church was recently relieved of a $15,000 indebtedness, and is now about ready to undertake the erection of a more commodious structure to meet its growing needs. During Mr. Rogers' six years' pastorate the congregation has expended for special work nearly $60,000, and for missions and benevolences about $20,000. The congregation is second in strength among the Christian churches of Southern California, and is regarded as one of the best missionary churches in the communion."

Hard Times in Cincinnati.

Last week a man told the janitor of Central Church in Cincinnati that he desired to get into the church to repair the telephone. Instead of repairing the telephone he stole the silver communion plates. All residents of Cincinnati who have gold, silver, brass, or other precious metals should beware.

Maxwell Hall's Resignation.

As reported in the Christian Century some weeks ago Maxwell Hall has resigned at the First Church, Portland, Oregon. The daily papers of Portland have taken Mr. Hall's side in the difficulties he has had with the official board. Mr. Hall's position on the question of amusements seems to have offended some of the pleasure-loving deacons. The members of the congregation voted to retain Mr. Hall, but he has decided to return east.

Church Dedication at Cayuga, Indiana.

H. H. Peters of Paris, Illinois, dedicated the new house of worship at Cayuga, Indiana, Sunday, August 30. The congregation numbers about seventy-five, but supports a minister all the time. P. W. Walthall is the pastor. The church was in reality a remodeled one, but so thoroughly has the work been done that the building could not be told from a new one. It cost about $3,500. The community had contributed quite liberally considering conditions, but there was $1,600 to raise on dedication day. It did not look encouraging to the congregation, but when the last service was closed Sunday night the people were surprised to learn that the amount of pledges during the day was $1,850. This assures the church financially. The pastor is capable and has genuine leadership and the congregation is enthusiastic in the work. Mr. Peters spoke three times and the people expressed their pleasure in the messages. Dr. H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College, supplied the pulpit in Paris during the absence of Mr. Peters.

An Enterprising Rural Church.

Organized Christianity in America today seems to be weakest at the two extremes of community life—namely, the congested districts of the great city and the rural community. The success of a country church brings encouragement to all who are interested in the problems of rural life. The church at Grape Grove, Ohio, is distinctively a rural church. Spencer M. Smith, believing in the possibilities of the rural church, accepted the call of this congregation a few years ago, moved at once into the community, identified his life with that of his people, and now the church is in a flourishing condition. During the month of August Wm. J. Wright of Franklin, Indiana, assisted by H. W. Goodpaster, of Greenview, Ill., helped Mr. Smith in special revival service. Eighteen were added to the church membership. All the missonary enterprises of the Disciples are remembered by this church. A new parsonage has been built for the pastor and his family. The star of this church is in the ascendant.

A One-Sided Debate.

Down at Atkins, Ark., a debate has just taken place between J. Will Henley of Uvalde, Tex., representing the Christian church and W. C. Austin of Paden, Okla., representing the Freewill Baptists. Here is the proposition which Mr. Henley affirmed: "The church of which I, J. Will Henley, am a member, known by me and by my brethren as the Church of Christ, is scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice." Mr. Austin affirmed an identical proposition as to the Freewill Baptist church. No one is reported to have taken the negative of either one of these propositions. The debaters must have had their own way about it.

Mexico Now a Land of Greater Opportunities.

A letter received from S. G. Inman at Piedras Negras, Coah, Mexico, tells of the increasing opportunities for Protestant missions in that land of perpetual revolution. Mr. Inman says: "Everywhere there are indications of the great opportunities open to the Evangelicals in the new era the country is entering. I have just finished reading an edition of 'E Democrate' which is published simultaneously here, in Monterrey and San Louis Potosi. One article is headed, 'The Revolution versus the Catholic Clergy, —The religious woman should help the first, and throttle the influence of the second.' In a report of the triumphal entry of Sr. Carranza into Mexico, it mentions as almost as prominent as the "Vivas" for Carranza the "Mueras" for the clergy. One banner carried in the procession was "The Clergy says darkness, the revolution says light;" another "The revolution will not treat with the clericals." Coronel Gregoric Osuna, a strong Protestant, who has often spoken in our Peoples Institute, and helped us in many ways, is spoken of as one of the most prominent advisers of Sr. Carranza. The press dispatches are signed by a member of our church in Monterrey.

All of this means greater openings for the gospel, if we are quick to take the advantage with a statesmanlike policy. In our own mission we need four men of large vision and training to immediately begin on the language, so they can be ready to enter positions of great responsibility in a few months when political conditions will be settled enough to open with constructive work in the interior. Well equipped men, looking for one of the richest fields of service anywhere on the globe, should write Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, the president of our board stars, and it's perfectly glorious.

By Claudius B. Spencer.

I was asked to draft a little resolution thanking the captain for his courtesies. A few of this steerage throng signed it. The first was the president of one of the great corporations of the United States; the next, a capitalist from San Francisco; England newspaper men, editor and proprietor; the next, a professor in Chicago University, known in two hemispheres; the next, the regent of a state university; the next, a capitalist from SanFrancisco; the next, a famous editor; the next, a Doctor of laws; the next, a capitalist who had spent thousands on his European tour automobiling in Italy and luxuriating at Nice and Monte Carlo—now glad to get steerage. A lady signs, whose son is a senior in Yale, of gentle and perfect refinement, who has been abroad for a year, with her daughter in Switzerland and who can't get back to the college. A jurist, a professor in Lehigh, distinguished surgeons, a professor in Michigan University, the daughter of a governor—these facts leak out, as I give them the chance to sign the paper of thanks. Was it ever like this before?

"CAMP FIRES OF EXPERIENCE."

There has been a series of "camp-fires" as it were of experience. One tells of hearing a thud behind him in Bremen—he thinks it is a spy shot on the spot. Another was himself taken for a Russian spy and roughly handled. One tells of going into Lincoln's Inn Courts and seeing the barristers with gown and periwig, drilling and getting ready to offer their lives for England. A lady was stopped as a spy, and by her side a soldier fired into a second story window and a spy falls to the pavement. Another, a merchant, who has spent a king's ransom in touring in his auto, tells of being reduced to want. Another of starving, another of the violent partings of families, another of the enthusiasm in Austria, where the people went mad with joy over the crushing of Servia, another of the scenes in the Hotel Savoy, London, where thousands of stranded Americans told their tragedies. I have given only a few every-day samples.

THE BIG QUESTION.

But the outstanding theme is THE WAR. There is a regular parliament on the awful conflagration. Austrian, German professor, German officer, American, Englishman, participate. Why? of the armies, their training, size, composition? What of national reserve? What of the dark future? How long will the conflagration burn? Will Germany whip the whole world? Does the Kaiser dream he is another Napoleon? What will the Slav do when the black cloud lifts? What is the effect of war on the blood of nations?

Twice cruisers sail up, one emerging like a spectre from the darkness, scrutinizing us with a powerful searchlight, banking all its own lights, the black hull vanish, the other, the Essex, coming near enough to understand.

Certainly there has been enough to keep the thinking machinery in action. And the interchange of opinion, of reading and of experience, on the part of German scholars, journalists, professors, commercial geniuses, has been a good school for one who in the nature of things must do more than record battles and disasters. And across the rope barrier that separates the cabin passengers from the steerage are the British ambassador, Bishop Hamilton, and others, though we are proud of our steerage roll. One rich man who, with his valet, is here in steerage, sums it all: "We will appreciate our blessings the more for this steerage experience—particularly our women who are seeing a phase of life quite new to them. They will understand others hereafter and appreciate, because they understand their own blessings."

Who will not agree with that?

at 404 R. A. Long Building during September. He is ready to serve the churches especially in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Arkansas, Iowa, Oklahoma, Texas, and Colorado.

It will be remembered the month of July showed a good gain in receipts for foreign missions. At this time all the indications point to another gain for August. The greatest test of the year comes in September. Let it not be forgotten that the books close September 30. Send to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A. E. Cory reached Cincinnati, August 26, from Russia. He came through exciting scenes in Europe. He and Mrs. Cory and Mrs. Morrison are in good health. He is ready to gather in a few millions in the Men and Millions Movement. He will be heard from later.

A. McLean,
President.

AUGUST AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The receipts for August were even better than we expected. The hot weather and the reports of wars did not turn our people from the missionaries and their constant needs.

The total receipts for the month amounted to $56,230, a gain of $3,328. The churches, as churches, show a gain for August of $2,549. There was also a gain of sixty-three contributing churches. The Sunday-schools and Endeavor societies reveal a small loss each, but the miscellaneous receipts come up with a gain of $3,250.

There has been a gain in the receipts nine months out of eleven during the year. We congratulate the brotherhood! The total receipts to September had amounted to $331,008, a gain of $15,537. It is gratifying to report a gain also of 146 contributing churches. The receipts from the churches, as churches, reveal a gain of $11,084, and the gain in regular receipts is $14,983.

SEPTEMBER A TESTING MONTH.

All the friends will be severely tested during this month. Last year we received about $118,000, or nearly one-fourth of our total receipts for the year, during the month of September. We beseech every friend to rally to the task before us during the month and see that no backward step is taken. We must depend upon the following:

1. That large number of churches that have sent part of what they expect to pay

Secretary A. E. Cory, who has just returned from war-stricken Russia.

2. That still larger number of churches that have sent no offering which have been in the habit of giving in past years.

3. The Sunday-schools that have sent no offerings as yet. Hundreds of these have taken a Children's Day offering but have not sent it to the society. These offerings should be sent forward. The children gave their money for this work.

4. The large number of personal friends who have made pledges but who have not yet met them. These amount to several thousand dollars.

5. We are depending upon a few special friends for annuity gifts before the books close September 30.

Send all offerings to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Box 844, Cincinnati, Ohio.

HELPING HELPLESS MOTHERS.

No feature of the great work being done by the National Benevolent Association in its institutions is more profitable or productive of more genuine satisfaction than the care of the widowed mother with her children. And this is doubly true when that mother is intelligently devoted to her little ones. The Association believes that no other institution can fully take the place of a home in which there is thought and affection and character. And, so, it not only seeks constantly to place in Christian families the homeless little children committed to its care, but it endeavors always to prevent the breaking of family ties, to keep the mother and her children together and to so assist them that they may later re-establish the home is the constant purpose of our institutions that receive the mother with her children.

Employment is given the mother and she is encouraged from the beginning by the fact that she has her children about her and that she is not struggling alone in the world. Her children are well cared for and the strong arm of the church is assisting them and her. Brotherhood is a fact. Fellowship is a blessed reality. Her task is not now a hopeless one. There is light about her and there is a prospect ahead. Education and special training are now possible for her children. She is in the house of her friends. New avenues have opened up before her and her children.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

(Methodist.)

This is the title of a volume by Charles Clayton Morrison, published by Disciples Publication Society, Chicago, Ill., at $1.25 net. The author of this book is a minister in the Disciples Church and editor of The Christian Century. He exposes the fallacy of Alexander Campbell's argument for substituting immerse for baptize in translating the New Testament, also, by making clear the meaning and purpose of baptism he refutes all arguments for regarding its validity as dependent upon any specific mode of using water as its seal and symbol. He protests against immersionists re-baptizing Christians who would join their churches from other communions. He earnestly insists upon a reform which has already begun. He says, "With the deepening sense of fellowship and fundamental unity among the Christian denominations, characteristic of our times, there has grown up among Baptists and Disciples a vigorous body of sentiment in protest against the practice of imposing re-baptism upon Christian people who seek admittance to the local churches of these immersionist communions." Dr. Morrison clearly points out the fact that exclusive immersion is a barrier to that larger Christian fellowship to which Baptists and Disciples are called. He says: "The finer spirits in these immersion practicing bodies recoil at the implications of re-baptism." "In our day many of the more progressive and generous-minded Disciples of Christ are sensitively aware of the inhibition that rests upon their plea for Christian unity so long as they contradict it in their own practice."

The book is good reading from first to last. There is not a saner discussion of the meaning of baptism than it presents.

THE JOURNAL AND MESSENGER.

(Baptist.)

The Meaning of Baptism. By Charles Clayton Morrison. Chicago: Disciples Publication Society. Price, $1.25.

According to the view of the author, the Christian world has always been wrong in its conception of baptism; he is the first and only true expositor of its significance; and he devotes 222 pages duodecimo to telling us what he thinks it means, or rather what it does not mean. He has a hard time of it. He plows and cross plows; mows and cross mows; cuts and slathers, striking right and left. What he declares in one paragraph he denies in another, and repeats the process over and over. Baptism is an immersion, but it matters not how it is performed. It is not an immersion, but it is a baptism. Jesus submitted to immersion, but he did not mean that any of his followers should imitate him in it. John baptized, but he claimed no divine authority for his conduct. He simply practiced it. The object of John was to introduce men into his society. It was a sort of freemasonry. "For men whose consciences were quickened into repentance by John's preaching, the baptism was simply the act of joining his movement." When the voice of the desert preacher "sounded through the wilderness of the Jordan and echoed in the towns of Galilee, it requires but little effort on our part to realize how this voice must have struck thrill and awe through the soul of Jesus. Eagerly he would listen to the reports of John's preaching brought by travelers from the south who passed through Nazareth." . . . "Constrained by John's great fame as a preacher of righteousness and the organizer of a premessianic movement, Jesus went to Bethabara himself." John's baptism "allied the candidate with a communal life in which would be found forgiveness and righteousness." "It was into this communal life that Jesus wished to enter." "The essential nature of baptism is plainly not a physical act, nor an independent sacrament with its meaning in itself, as in the case of the Lord's Supper. The meaning of baptism is found in the Church, to which it points and for which it exists." The earlier baptism had been "an induction into John, or John's community; the latter was an induction into Christ, or the community of Christ's followers." "The Church into which the candidate is baptized, is a definite social organism, a freemasonry of spiritual life whose members either actually, or ideally participate in the baptismal act." Was it so in the case of Saul, at Damascus, of the Ethiopian on the way to Gaza, of Lydia and her household, and of the jailer at Philippi? Were these baptized into a church whose members "participated in the baptismal act?"

But we have not time nor space to follow the intricate windings of the author's argument. He is trying to find a way for the joining together of all Christian bodies, and he has to run his thread by a very crooked way. He must go back and forth a great many times before the seam is completed, and then it is likely to rip, because of the raw edges of the various fabrics. He is constantly sewing patches of "new" cloth upon old garments, and is prone to make the hole larger rather than smaller. The thing won't work. We take space for more and longer quotations to show the imaginative character of the book. It may create a ripple among the "Disciples," and it may not.

first place, a great number of the schools carried on by missionaries are aided by grants from the government. There is also a more or less uniform code of rules made by the government, to which such schools are expected to conform. It is found that in dealings of this sort, government is more or less apt to interfere with the workings of the school, and in some cases to make acts, or to enforce acts, in such a way as to be a detriment to the success of the school. This matter has been taken up by the missions and in most of the provinces of India there has been formed an educational union of the missions carrying on educational work to deal with such questions, and make our representations to the government concerning matters affecting their common welfare, and in every way to advance the interests of missionary Christian education.

There is also more or less co-operation in the matter of higher education. In recent years several colleges in Calcutta have united, and also in Madras, making one central Christian college in each of these important centers. In the city of Bangalore a large union theological seminary has been put up which is managed by all the important missions at work in that area. Theological instruction is given in English, and the faculty represent several of the missions at work in South India. Serampore College has recently been reorganized by the Englist Baptists. Their faculty, too, represents several missions. The Baptists made a very generous offer to the other missions of India to come in and participate in the management of the school, especially in the theological department. This to a certain extent has been availed of, and probably will be more availed of as time goes on. There is quite a respectable number of students in the theological department at the present time, representing several different missions.

One matter in which the missions of India have co-operated for a long time is that concerning the position of fields and the overlapping of territory. Among the more important missions in India at least the practice has been followed of having but a single mission at work in a given area. This does not apply to the larger cities, but does apply to the village areas. In consequence of this there are areas of hundreds and even thousands of square miles where only a single mission or denomination is carrying on religious work. This is a very great help to the missions carrying on work under such circumstances. This principle is not generally violated, although several denominations, the most important of which is the Anglican Episcopal, do not in principle recognize the validity of any such agreement. However, most of the missions are living up to this agreement, and it is only some of the smaller and newer and independent missions which are guilty of violating the general principle of mission comity. Of course, questions concerning the division of mission territory and the overlapping of work are frequently arising in this connection. To meet such difficulties some years ago a series of courts or boards of arbitration were organized. These have done, not a very great deal of work, but their very presence has been most useful, and since this organization there have not been many serious complaints in regard to mission comity. The secretary of the central court is the Rev. J. Chandler of Madura.

One of the results and perhaps the most important result of the visit of Doctor Mott to India, has been the organization of a series of mission councils in different parts of India. There are eight mission councils in the eight chief provinces or districts of India, each of them having representatives from all the mission bodies at work in the area, and also representatives from all the most important native churches. At the head there is a national missionary organization, which for the present at least, has its headquarters in Calcutta. These councils are participated in by practically all the missions in India. There are two or three, or perhaps more, of the smaller and insignificant mission bodies, which refuse to co-operate with these councils. But they are very few indeed, and every important mission is actively engaged in co-operating with these councils. Their organization is so recent that as yet they have not done anything of very great importance, although they are at work on several matters which we hope will result in ultimate good to mission work. At the head of the National Missionary Representative Councils is the Anglican Metropolitan of Calcutta, so you may understand that these councils are in favor in ecclesiastical and religious circles. Unfortunately no report has been published so far. In fact, the National Council is only just organized and will have its first full meeting this year. These are the most important matters in which missions are co-operating.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 16.

Union Through Co-operation in Practical Service. 2 Cor. 6:1; Gal. 2:9-10; 1 Cor. 16:1-4.

What is Christian union? Is it not the joining of forces for some kind of service? Is there any service that is not practical? If we have in mind unity of belief, we have no interest in beliefs except in relation to the actions they influence. To relieve a mind of paralyzing doubt or to remove bitterness from a heart is practical service. The superintendent of a large factory said he never had to discharge men for incompetency but he did discharge a man now and then for failure to co-operate. The church that teaches a man the spirit of brotherhood and how to show it in daily work is rendering a practical service that is of the highest importance.

SUPPORTING THE COLLEGES.

Is it not about time for the churches of the United States to join their forces in supporting church colleges? Colleges must be equipped, endowed, supplied with students. It may never come, but one may be allowed to dream of the day when colleges will be placed where they are needed and will receive the support of churches in accordance with territorial divisions and not in accordance with denominational preferences.

GIVING POWER TO THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The Bible is excluded from the public school in many states. It is uncertain whether it will be restored. Even if it is, the church is not thereby relieved of obligation to teach the history of religion and to cultivate religious feelings in the young. For this service it needs buildings, literature, and teachers. A small town with three, or four, or five school buildings would be ridiculed by enlightened educators. The day will come when divisions in Sunday-school work will be the object of ridicule. The promoter of divisions is wise in opposing the introduction of sound pedagogical methods into the Sunday-school. Denominational bias will have to stand aside when the chief aim of instruction is the welfare of the children. Interest in the present crowds out interest in fights that began generations ago.

BEARING TESTIMONY.

The best men are needed to preach the gospel of good will. Only a few are endowed for such a service. The cry that young men are not entering the ministry should be met by the declaration that the churches should have a program that would captivate the imagination of the strongest men. Many communities have more preachers than they need. Men in the ministry feel that they ought to represent all good people when they speak. They dislike the idea of having to speak for one section of the people. The man with a vision now comes forward as the spokesman of all who love God. He would like to have some of the barriers raised by sectarianism removed.

COMMUNITY SERVICE.

That co-operation is better than antagonism is known by all intelligent persons who try to put down evils and encourage goodness. A bank fight may demoralize a town. Family feuds have cost many towns their leadership in their counties. Church fights cripple schools and business. On the other hand, private feuds and sectarian wars have been forgotten when some great community enterprise has called for the energies of all the people. The leader in a playgrounds movement may prove to be a greater force for Christian union than the professional advocate of union. Any man who unites the people of a community for a good work prepares the way for other kinds of union. The main thing is to see what ought to be done and to have the people unite in doing it.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this fall. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

The Church and the War

WHAT IS THERE FOR CHRIST'S CHURCHMEN TO DO AS THEY BEHOLD CHRISTENDOM AT WAR?

Certainly followers of the Prince of Peace cannot look with approval nor even with tolerance upon this relapse of Christian society into barbarism.

But at the present moment there appears no open door of opportunity for the Church to enter and calm the raging passions of the nations.

Yet the Church need not—must not—be inactive and complacent. There are some things it clearly ought to do.

The Church, sitting at its Master's feet, ought to make a re-examination of the message it has been delivering to the world. It is a solemn hour for the Church. The nations at war all bear the name "Christian." They are all followers of Christ who are now flying at one another's throats.

Every cannon and rifle and bomb is aimed to kill "some brother for whom Christ died." There is no Jew nor Greek, says their holy book, barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free, but all are one in Christ Jesus. The unity of all his followers—how thin and gauzy a fabric it proves to be when racial or national selfishness tears at it!

The Church, smitten in its conscience with the sight of its own sons slaying one another, cannot help asking whether it has taught and trained these sons aright. Has it fallen into the sad error of putting secondary things into the place where only first things ought to be? Has it made its forms—its creeds, its organization, its ritual—a matter of intense conscience while it left the divine-human substance of Christ's gospel to mere sentiment?

The ideals of human brotherhood and universal peace and the Kingdom of God, the moral qualities of meekness and forgiveness and non-retaliation and redemptive love—have these structural realities of that moral order which Christ unveiled been taken in dead earnest by his Church?

If they had been taken in dead earnest by his Church would a world dominated by that Church for more than sixteen centuries fall now so far short of attaining them?

This is one thing the Church can do: in humility it can bring its message back to the lap of the Master and ask him if it is the same message he gave at the beginning.

Another thing the Church can do, and, if its conscience is sound, it will do: it will make confession of its own sin in violating Christian brotherhood by creating and maintaining a sectarian order in place of the unity of the spirit. How can the Church blame a carnal state for going to war when within its own fold there has been and is yet strife, faction, ex-communication, division, rivalry, misrepresentation, and even hatred?

Once the Church resorted to brute weapons—the screw, the spike, the flame—to punish its heretics. Now the weapons are more refined, but no less carnal. Who will tell the inner story of the tragedy of Professor Briggs and Professor Swing and Pastor Jatho—great-souled men whom the Church branded as heretics and turned out of the fold?

How can a Church that ex-communicates a congregation because it practices brotherhood with certain Christians who have not been immersed in water!—how can a Church whose spirit is measured by such an act count at all in the task of bringing in the brotherhood of man?

A religious newspaper man whose task it was to read the "exchanges" declared that "the provincialism, the sectarianism, the dogmatism, the narrowness, the lovelessness, the unhumanness of nine-tenths of the religious papers" made him heartsick and was making him cynical.

We Disciples have an outstanding instance of this thing for which deep confession to God ought publicly to be made in our churches and our conventions. The seeds of suspicion and hatred have been sown broadcast among us. We are clannish but not loving.

The demon of heresy-hunting is driving the spirit of brotherhood out of our hearts. Ten years ago it was one man who was set up as the object of hatred. The roll has greatly enlarged since then.

How can the Disciples of Christ help abolish war when they fight one another?

And how can a divided Church make a united world?

And the Church can intercede with God for peace and justice. More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of. If ever the Church's intercession had logic and human reason in it there is logic and human reason in the cry of Christendom on behalf of womanhood and childhood and the brotherhood of man.

It is the Church's business to exercise the function of priesthood on behalf of civilization. We are told that the cathedrals and chapels of Europe are filled as never before with grief-stricken and awe-stricken men and women. In their extremity whom can they appeal to but to God?

We of the American Church have been asked by our Christian President to make Sunday, October 4, a day of prayer for peace. It should be the greatest day for the religious life of America that we have experienced in this generation. The vast popular emotion which the war has generated is pregnant with unsuspected divine meaning.

It depends upon the Church whether this universal sense of shock, of awe, of human helplessness, of sorrow, of guilt, that the war has produced, shall set religion back or set it leagues forward. All the machinery brought into action on "Go-to-Church-Sunday" should be brought into action, into perhaps less boisterous action, for the day of prayer for peace.

God is ready to stretch forth his arm in far-spreading blessing to mankind if we will but prepare our hearts by prayer.

Fleeing from Alsace

BY FRANKLIN HESS.

Just now the interest of all the world is centered in the daily reports from the scene of war. But in America the interest is divided between these reports and the stories of the Yankee refugees who were in Europe at the outbreak of hostilities. The following account gives details and sidelights which makes it a peculiarly interesting narrative.—THE EDITOR.

FIFTEEN years ago at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, the "City of Paris," one of the swiftest boats of the ocean at that time, stole out of Southampton, daring to elude any Spanish man-of-war, on her last trip to her home port, New York. Today we are going out of Southampton on that same boat, which, having served through the war, was re-christened the "Philadelphia." How eager we all are to get home and away from this awful conflict. Never did a boat carry so distinguished a steerage.

It seems only a few short days ago that we landed in Normandy at midnight and started direct for Paris. The early purples and crimsons of morning revealed such a beautiful land full of verdure and flowers—red and yellow poppies, golden wheat all draped in thin winding mists.

REVIEW OF THE ARMY.

I wish I might give some idea of the review of the army, or that part that we saw at Paris. A sane, safe and impressive celebration of their great national day of freedom from tyranny, the 14th of July. We started at five in the morning for Longchamps, the great field of review in Bois de Bologne. At six we had secured our seats in the Tribune and watched the arrival of the French populace At seven the various regiments began to arrive and take up their positions. Precisely at eight the great cannon announced the arrival of Monsieur Raymond Poincare, president of the Republic, in the carriage of state drawn by four black horses. After he had passed back and forth across the field before the long lines of attentive soldiers with kindly salutations, the soldiers, in turn passed before the Tribune. This grand spectacle no one can ever describe. Although we had had nothing to eat we were wholly insensible to the fact and were thrilled through and through as regiment after regiment, infantry, cavalry and artillery passed before us—and the music—I never before realized how satisfying, inspiring and enduring those great national pieces were. Each regimental band in turn took it's position before us during the passing of its regiment. Each played the same music, the whole populace lightly singing the words. But above all and over all, there was a great sense of peace, of love and affection for country and fellowman. As the day was unclouded, so was there no thought of war, no desire for war, no hatred of fellowmen. I never saw a more rational or inspiring celebration of a great national day than occurred on the 14th of last July.

PRESENTATION OF COLORS.

After the review there came the presentation of colors by the president to the new regiments, two crosses of the Legion of Honor and various medals—"Even though you may never have a chance to engage in battle . . . "—the words of the president to the new regiments. How little one thought on that day of the possibility of conflict—not a whisper.

One beautiful day in July we found ourselves in Alsace, back to the valley and village that my father came from some sixty-six years ago because of other troublesome times. Never was grass so green, forest trees so smoky blue or a valley so peaceful in all the world. The bells of the Vosges in the valleys and wild pansies on the high breast of the Champs de Fue (Field of fire) above the clouds whispered only of peace.

WHISPERINGS OF UNREST.

As we lingered in the peaceful valley we began to hear whisperings of unrest. Austria was making demands of Servia, but surely nothing could happen to disturb so tranquil a scene where every family was a lover of peace. The rumblings were succeeded by denials and the report that the German emperor had himself decided against war. "Oh, a good emperor if that is true"—the words of an Alsatian who never before in his life had spoken a word of commendation in favor of the emperor. And, indeed, it was the sentiment of all Alsace. Five years ago, in writing from Alsace, I stated that the Alsatians would prefer to remain German rather than be reunited with France at the price of war. That sentiment of peace is just as strong today, and had the German emperor declared for peace, all Alsace would have heartily exclaimed "A good emperor." and Alsace would have been fastened to German fatherland by ties not easily broken.

One of the most beautiful motor trips that we took was across the frontier into France. Having relatives living in the old chateau de la Gouvernelle, at Ramberville, France, we began early one morning the steep climb to the frontier. After an hour, sometimes on second and sometimes on third, we reached the top, passed the German custom house and began the descent into a level country with larger fields that looked like home. We were soon at the French custom house where my cousin, who was well known and known to be a true Alsatian, was sympathetically received and items of news were exchanged.

We were beginning to feel the impending sorrow of the coming war and at the dinner table that day our conversation could not turn away from it. Here were those of the same family, some who must serve under the French flag and others who would be compelled to march under the black eagle of Germany against them or be shot. Never have I been so convinced that all war is born in superstition, ignorance and hatred. The good, beneficent Father of us all never gave to any potentate the message of war.

PORTENTS OF THE COMING WAR.

Returning in the evening we passed the outposts, and stopped again to exchange news with the French soldiers and then with the German. The one thing that impressed me most of all was the calmness, the deep thoughtfulness of the French soldiers and the feverish flush of the German. The opposite has always been the picture presented, but in this great conflict, at least, it has been reversed.

A Scene in Alsace.

Villages of Rothan and Shirmeck (where recent battles between French and German soldiers occurred) in the valley. Donon Mountain in the distance on top of which is Temple to Mercury, built by Julius Caesar.

An afternoon later, having returned to the little village of Wilderbach where we were staying, one of the men who had been sent to the bank for money for the pay roll came into the office white-faced and announced that just after he had received his money the Reishbank had declined to pay out furthur sums, that he had been ordered to take the automobile home and not return with it. We still were unable to believe that war could be a possibility and we continued to plan many pleasant excursions, believing that the embargo against automobiles would be lifted and that it was only for the purpose of keeping the roads clear while the troops were moving down from Strassburg closer to the frontier.

The following day we started for a little excursion, an hour's walk over a pass of the mountain to the home of Oberlin. Madam Herzog, wife of the present minister, to whom we had a letter, was very gracious and showed many of the things intimately related to the great preacher of the Presbytery. Returning in the evening we found that the mail had been stopped in the morning, trees had been felled across certain roads and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon the telephone and telegraph service had been cut off. Now we would know nothing of what was happening, receive no letters from home and be able to send none.

OFF TO THE FRONT.

Already the Germans were beginning to arrest supposed French sympathizers and hurry them away no one knows where. It surely was time for us to go. It was a very silent meal that we sat down to that evening. Uncle Philip was absent-mindedly mixing the salad and continued to do so until reminded. He had been through the conflict 40 years before. Then out of the stillness came the announcement "Kriegszustand!" A swift-traveling messenger had delivered a sealed dispatch to the mayor of the village commanding certain young men, the youngest soldiers of the village, to report forthwith prepared for war. The parting is not easy when you go to fight for your country—it is very, very bitter when you are forced to take up arms against those you love. As yet our three cousins had not been called, but their turn must surely come and on the second day after the general order of mobilization they too must go or forfeit their lives. We now felt sure that the general order to mobilize was coming.

In Germany there is a law that all strangers must be reported by the people with whom they are staying to the police twenty-four hours after their arrival. Our relatives had not done this. They had done this only when visited by Frenchmen. To report us now would incur a penalty for delay—to not report us might result in something more serious for us if we were stopped in going out of Germany. The report was sent in and early next morning a messenger was back in the village with written orders covering our departure. It was well that we were going and we would go straight to Paris, so we thought.

A CHANGED ITINERARY.

Arriving in Strassburg, our point of departure for Paris, we found everything in tumult and confusion. The frontiers were all closed. Could we go to Paris? "Nein! Nein!" Then to Luxemburg? "Nein! Nein!" To Brussels? "Nein! Nein!" The officer thundered and waved his arms at us in final dismissal, as if the best thing for us to do would be to jump into the Rhine. The Swiss frontier was also closed and we could go neither forward nor backward, and worse than all else, we had but little gold and could not get more. Paper money, letters of credit, etc., did not count. Finally I made another try—could we go to Cologne? I knew that there must be an American consul there, and there also I had friends unless they had fled. "Yes, we could go, but we had better go quickly, taking the next train which left in a few minutes." We waited for no further invitation, but purchasing our tickets and a couple of ham sandwiches, boarded the train for Cologne, wondering what it had in store for us. Fortunately, and quite by accident, we got seats. Many had to stand all of the seven hours' journey.

At one time I had planned a trip up the Rhine with my wife, but we had missed out and I had determined that I would not make the trip until she could accompany me. But here was the German Emperor forcing me to go down the Rhine. It is a beautiful trip and a beautiful country. Soldiers were everywhere, at every bridge and at every curve ready to defend or to blow up with dynamite as necessity might be.

The Valley of the Rock.

Home and scene of the life work of Jean Frederic Oberlin. At the base of the mountain in the far distance is located the church of Oberlin, and his grave is in the cemetery surrounding the church. The village in the foreground is Saint Blaize where a German flag was captured by the French in a recent battle.

ARRIVAL IN COLOGNE.

We arrived in Cologne more than an hour late and I determined that my first endeavor would be to get something in the way of a substantial meal; for the night promised to be a hard one. This was not difficult for while there were thousands excitedly fighting to get away they were not thinking of eating. We soon found ourselves seated before some of William's fatted calf which we ate with great relish after a long and hungry day.

Yes, we would be permitted to go to Holland and I bought tickets for Rosendaal which is the turning point for Brussels and Paris. If we only could reach Brussels! I had gold enough to get me there and there I had friends. I found that the night train had not yet departed but was packed to the limit and unapproachable. Picking out a bright uniform and tendering some compensation, a way was made through the crowd and finally we found standing room in a baggage car. I shall never forget the struggling crowds, all dazed and confused, the mountains of baggage which will never reach its destination, nor will I ever forget that night across the frontier. Would we ever get across? Would we finally be stopped? At last we learn that general mobilization had been ordered and hear that war has been declared with France. Two cars of our already overcrowded train are ordered removed by the military authorities for use by the soldiers and the crush is redoubled so that we do not know where to place our feet. We are glad to know, however, that we can proceed even in this manner and are eagerly waiting to know that we have crossed the line. Just before the line is reached we are again stopped—a military officer enters and roars "Passports!" No more than one out of ten has a passport, except his foreign face, but this is sufficient. The officer is looking only for German soldiers taking French leave. We are inspected and all seems satisfactory. We start, and then comes in fierce, harsh tones "Halt! Halt!" and the train comes to a sudden stop. An officer has seen something through the window that excites his suspicion. He boards the train and brings out a German soldier who has tried to escape his country in time of war. There is no question what his fate will be at break of day. As we finally pass on we see the condemned man surrounded by an armed guard. Two days later we read in a London paper that seventeen were shot at Muhlhousen for the same offense—simply trying to cross the line in time of war.

A NAP ON THE CHAIR.

We leave the train at Rosendaal and get an hour's nap at four in the morning on some dining-room chairs, the only sleep that we shall get in over fifty hours. Soon the train is ready for Brussels which we reach about 9 o'clock Sunday morning, August 2.

Here, to our surprise, everything is confusion: troops are gathered and departing everywhere. Belgium is mobilizing. They are seizing horses, taxicabs and automobiles to rush troops and supplies to the German frontier. It is

The Servant of the Spirit

An Interpretation of the Romance of Preaching.

BY C. SYLVESTER HORNE.

This article contains the substance of one of the Lyman Beecher lectures delivered at Yale by Charles Sylvester Horne a few months ago. To deliver these lectures he came to America, and was starting on his return journey when, three days after the conclusion of this series of addresses, he died in Toronto. The lectures are soon to be published by the Fleming H. Revell Co. under the title "The Romance of Preaching." Our readers will need no comment on the interest and worth of this article.—THE EDITOR.

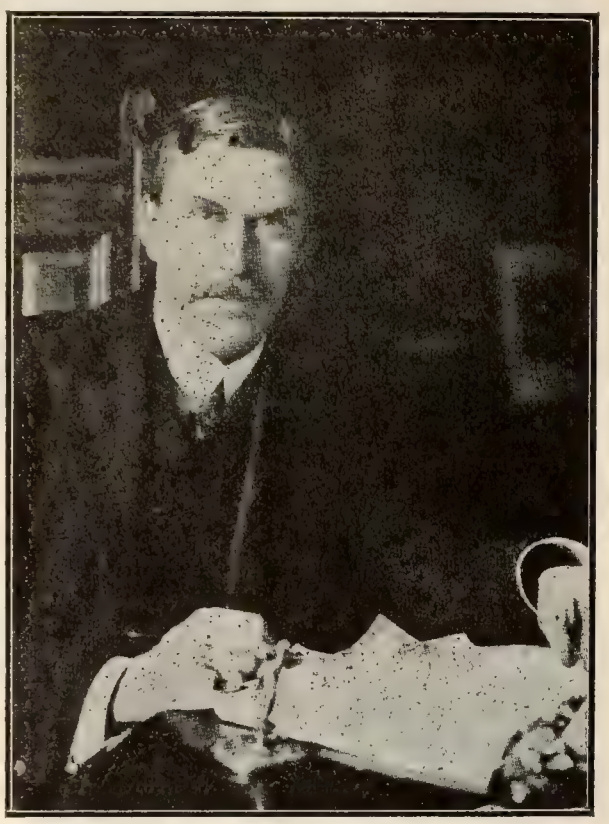
SOME trades and professions, it is clear, will die out as the kingdom of God comes to its own. But for every voice that carries inspiration to its fellows: for every soul that has some authentic word from the Eternal wherewith to guide and bless mankind, there will always be a welcome. No changes of the future can cancel the commission of the preacher. He does not hold that commission from any society. He is the servant of the Spirit. He is not the creation of a state, or a municipality. Societies may organize and reorganize themselves as they will. They may make and unmake their officials. Some commonwealths have chosen to break with the tradition of kingship. Some have tried every form of military dictatorship and civil despotism; they have experimented with oligarchies, autocracies, and aristocracies. At times they have tried every form of government in swift succession. Possibly it is a wise thing that we should not cast our forms of national life in so rigid a mould. But in any case nobody would be bold enough to predict that this or that office in the commonwealth is final and permanent; and may not be modified if society so decides. You remember Mr. William Watson's fine lines:

"The seasons change, the winds they shift and veer;
The grass of yesteryear
Is dead; the birds depart, the groves decay;
Empires dissolve, and peoples disappear:
Song passes not away.
Captains and conquerors leave a little dust
And Kings a dubious legend of their reign:
The swords of Cæsar they are less than rust:
The Poet doth remain."

THE PREACHER THE MASTER OF SOCIETY.

Suppose Watson had said, the prophet rather than the poet? For the prophet is of older and nobler lineage, and his order includes all the children of inspiration whether they have kindled the soul of the world by speech or song. And I repeat, as society cannot commission a man to be a poet, even so it is beyond the authority of any state however powerful to create the prophet; aye, or to make his message false or barren, no matter how governors may growl, and throned iniquities fulminate. No human authority can credit or discredit his words. His credentials are of superior authenticity. Let me state the position I propose to occupy in these lectures once for all, and at its highest. The preacher, who is the messenger of God, is the real master of society: not elected by society to be its ruler, but elect of God to form its ideals and through them to guide and rule its life. Show me the man who, in the midst of a community however secularized in manners, can compel it to think with him, can kindle its enthusiasm, revive its faith, cleanse its passions, purify its ambitions, and give steadfastness to its will, and I will show you the real master of society, no matter what party may nominally hold the reins of government, no matter what figurehead may occupy the ostensible place of authority.

Nor is the office of the preacher in the smallest danger of lapsing for lack of candidates. Our embarrassment arises from riches not from poverty. Today everybody will preach to us and at us, whatever qualifications for the function they may have or lack. Never was this old world sown so thick with pulpits.



REV. C. SYLVESTER HORNE.

Never was heard in it such superabundance of gospels. Who that has ever read a modern newspaper will affirm again that the dogmatist is dead! Creeds jostle one another in the market-place and in the drawing-room; and their often harsh and hoarse prophets and prophetesses announce salvation and denounce judgment quite in the orthodox style. Hot-gospellers today are a prolific race; and some of the beliefs for which they woo and win converts speak volumes for the credulity of mankind.

THE HOST OF REFORMERS.

It is astonishing what eagerness there is in our time to enter into competition with the conventional and orthodox pulpit, and to usurp its functions in dealing with the big human problems. Now it is the dramatist who is not content until he has converted the stage into a pulpit; now it is the journalist seeking to charm the public ear with some message that he believes to be vital to the common well-being; now it is the Socialist agitator, on his soap-box rostrum at the street-corner, making capital out of the inconsistencies and hypocrisies of society, quite in the old prophet strain; now it is the novelist marshalling the forces of experience and imagination, and training all his guns on some citadel of real or fancied wrong; now it is the statesman converting the platform of political expediency into the pulpit of eternal principle; now it is the poet, or the prose essayist, setting our highest and wisest dreams of good to music and lifting up the eyes of fallible human nature to the hills whence cometh its strength. It must sometimes appear to us that humanity is a long-suffering, much-lectured creature, and that not we of the churches only but journalists, artists, politicians, novelists, playwrights conceive their fellow-men and women as sitting in pews, patient and defenseless, at the mercy of every would-be exhorter who has discovered that they are not so good as they should be.

THE HONOR OF THE CALLING.

Thomas Carlyle in his day expressed pity for humanity whose ears were thus besieged by armies of strident voices, in consequence of which he, Thomas, lifted up his voice and shouted louder than all the rest. I confess to you I enjoy a quiet smile whenever the pessimists suggest that the vocation of the preacher is in danger of becoming obsolete. But I agree that God's order of preaching friars is a far wealthier society than some of us have recognized. America today will not forget to blazon upon the roll of her great nineteenth century preachers of righteousness the name of Abraham Lincoln as well as of Henry Ward Beecher; and Englishmen who are justly proud of Robert Hall and Thomas Binney, Dale and Spurgeon, cannot forget to number also among her national prophets Thomas Carlyle, John Ruskin and John Bright.

PREACHERS OUTSIDE THE PULPIT.

And why not? It is no business of ours to belittle our calling. We hold no brief for any narrow and exclusive theory of preaching. Inspiration is not conditioned by a white tie or a Geneva gown. I am glad to have listened to truths as noble and as Christian on the floor of parliament as have ever been uttered under the dome of St. Paul's. The Gettysburg speech was the message of a prophet of God, even if it was not divided into three heads and an application. No, we who call ourselves preachers enjoy no monopoly of the greatest of all arts, nor are we interested in establishing one. The spirit breatheth where it listeth. Nobody doubts that Amos was of us, though so far as I know he did not, as we say, preach regularly twice a Sunday. Ploughmen and herdsmen, carpenters, fishermen, tax-collectors and tent-makers, sons of German miners, Huntingdonshire farmers, and Kentucky backwoodsmen, each in his time and order, have received the divine efflatus, and, therewith, the spiritual and moral leadership of mankind.

History, it is true, gives little space to this aspect of the progress of the race. Its canvas is crowded with uniforms of kings and warriors and courtiers. The romance which the historian sees and describes to us is the romance symbolized by the banners, the martial music, and all the seductive pageantry of war. But

In Which Every Reader of The Christian Century is Invited to Participate. Third Installment.

FIRST CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., was excommunicated from the state missionary convention of Northern California in July for receiving into its membership unimmersed Christian people who brought credentials from various Protestant evangelical churches such as Presbyterian, Methodist and the rest.

This is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the past fifty years, perhaps in their entire century of history. I wish with the most dispassionate purpose to secure a consensus of the opinion of our brotherhood, including both laymen and ministers. I have prepared this questionnaire for that purpose, and I will welcome from any reader of The Christian Century a frank expression on the issues involved. In order that the reader may have clearly before him the material facts of the situation let me state them, concisely, as I understand them:

BERKELEY'S PRACTICE AND POINT OF VIEW.

Berkeley church insists that it is loyal to every fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ and that the step in question is nothing at all but a further logical and fraternal application of both the principle of Christian unity and that of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

It affirms that these persons whom it receives into its fellowship are Christians, members of the Church of Christ; that Christ has already received them into his Church, which being so, a church of Christ has no choice save to receive them also. To refuse to receive them, the Berkeley church says, is essentially a sectarian act and a violation both of the will of Christ and the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The church holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience.

In the dismissal of an unimmersed member the church gives back the letter he brought with him, together with a letter of its own, commending the Christian character of the bearer and stating the fact as to his manner of being received into Berkeley church. The purpose of this is to avoid confusion or embarrassment to other churches of Disciples which might not wish to receive an unimmersed person into their membership.

The Berkeley church and its pastor, H. J. Loken, hold, as I have no reason to doubt, the generally accepted evangelical views of the Bible and the Divinity of Christ and are in all respects faithful to the missionary imperative of our Lord, even to the point of extraordinary generosity. I do not know Mr. Loken personally, but he is described as a preacher of unusual power, and a humble and gracious Christian man.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

REV. H. D. C. MACLACHLAN.

1. I do not think that Berkeley Church is doing wrong in receiving unimmersed members of other denominations. On the contrary I think that they are doing right. This is the only logical position for our brotherhood to adopt, if it means to be truly irenic and Protestant.

2. As I do not disapprove of Berkeley's practice it follows that I cannot regard it as a departure from the essential principles of the Disciples. This is not only one of those things that lie within the field of Christian liberty but is a forward step demanded of us by the genius of our movement.

3. It is my opinion that the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of this church and excommunicating it from their missionary co-operation, is striking a blow "at the liberty with which Christ makes His people free." It violates the principles of congregationalism, so inseparable a part of our movement, and one which was very clearly asserted by the brethren at the national convention in Louisville. If this is not ecclesiasticism, and unconstitutional ecclesiasticism at that, I should like to know what is.

4. I believe that three things should be done:—

(a) Every preacher who disapproves of the action of the convention should immediately preach a sermon on "Christian Liberty," illustrating his thesis with reference to the California convention situation. This could be done even by those who were not themselves following the lead of the Berkeley church.

(b) Congregations who disapprove of the action of the California convention should make formal protest to the officers of the convention, publishing such protests in those of our papers that will admit them.

(c) The matter should be brought up in a formal manner, with plenty of time for debate, at the Atlanta convention.

Richmond, Va.

MR. J. K. BALLOU.

1. The Berkeley Church did not do wrong in receiving Christians whom Christ has himself received. All brotherly people do actually fellowship them informally; the churches have been afraid to fellowship them as a church but they do so as individuals! To my way of thinking it is clearly wrong to disfellowship them. Whom Christ receives let us not in our sectarian bigotry cast out!

2. The fundamental position of the Disciples has been congregational autonomy. We have had no ecclesiastical court till the "Christian Church Corporation" of northern California appointed itself one. If the Berkeley church desires to be Christian in its fellowship, who are we that we demand that it be sectarian?

3. The Northern California convention simply reflects the all too common denominational consciousness of the Disciples. They were swayed by outside influences from Saint Louis, which influence is not unlike the influence of the most ecclesiastical bodies known, and has been perpetually exerted in the interest of a great denomination with large financial backing. The moral aspects seem to have been a minus quantity altogether. The California convention demands of the Berkeley church that it think and act as the majority think and act, which is the essence of credal authority and sectarianism.

4. The brotherhood should admonish the California brethren that it does not approve of their un-Christian and sectarian act.

Coalinga, Calif.

REV. FRANK C. RANSDELL.

1. Personally I do not think the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving unimmersed people into the fellowship of the congregation. I do not find any scriptural ground for debarring them from our congregations. We do not add to the church. The Lord adds to the church (Acts 2:47.) That means to the body of Christ. No one congregation is the whole body of Christ. It is just as well to allow them to fellowship with us as for us to go to their congregations and fellowship with them. What is the difference?

2. I think that this is one of the things that lies within the field of liberty of the congregation.

3. I can see no difference between what the California convention did and ecclesiasticism. In fact, I consider this on a par with what some of the ecumenical councils have done in the history of the Church when they were called to excommunicate certain "heretics."

4. I think that anything that we might do would make the situation worse. It is a grave question.

Personally I believe in immersion and practice it in my church, but I think the practice of Berkeley church an advance step toword Christian unity for which our dear Lord prayed and for which the Disciples have worked for a century.

Hemlock, O.

REV. J. LESLIE LOBINGIER.

1. No. It is the privilege of every congregation to decide such a question for itself. And it is better that people interpret Christ's will according to the dictates of their own consciences, whether right or wrong, than to have other men's interpretations forced upon them.

2. I believe the practice of the Berkeley church is the logical outcome of the Disciples' plea, and should be adopted when it can be done harmoniously, and when there seems to be real reason for it. I do not favor the hasty or general advocacy of this plan, for it would be manifestly unwise to do so in the name of union if opposition to it were sufficiently great to produce marked discussion as a result.

THE QUESTIONS.

1. Do you hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people? If so, please state why.

2. If you disapprove of Berkeley's practice do you consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, or is it one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation?

3. What is your opinion as to the action of the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of the church and to excommunicate it from their missionary cooperation? Does the convention's action, in your opinion, constitute a violation of any fundamental principle held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity? Can you see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did?

4. If you disapprove of the action of the convention what do you suggest should be done by the brotherhood outside of California to induce the California brethren to remedy their error?

In answering the above questions it is not necessary to re-write the questions. They may be referred to by number. Replies may be as brief as is consistent with clearness.

3. The action of the Northern California convention seems to me to have been a violation of the principle of Christian liberty. It is one of the discouraging facts of recent Disciple history. That convention went beyond its rights, making of itself an ecclesiastical court. To do this is fundamentally at variance with the very genius of the Disciples.

4. Have patience. And have faith too that time will bring a more dispassionate view, and will make it easier to distinguish between our opinion of a congregation's practice, and our right to sit as an ecclesiastical court upon that congregation.

Santa Monica, Calif.

REV. FRANK W. ALLEN.

I am entirely out of sympathy with the action of the convention. In answer to your questions I think the Berkeley church is right in the practice which it has adopted. I am of the opinion that the California convention has taken a position entirely out of harmony with the ideals of the Disciples' movement. I think all the influences that can be brought to bear for the creation of public opinion on this question should be brought.

First Church, Springfield, Ill.

REV. CLAUDE E. HILL.

1. The Berkeley church is not doing wrong in receiving unbaptized persons into its fellowship if the Berkeley church believes that baptism is not essential to Church membership. By baptism I mean, of course, immersion. Disciples never mean anything else when this term is used.

[Disciples of Christ do not hold that immersion is essential to Church membership. It is impossible to believe that our esteemed brother, the writer of this paragraph, holds that Methodist, Presbyterians and the rest, who have not been immersed, are not members of the Church of Christ. If he does, it is he and not the Berkeley church that is out of harmony with the Disciples of Christ. —THE EDITOR.]

2. I do consider this a grave departure from the essential principles of the Disciples. We make a plea for union and offer a union program. The Berkeley church has laid aside that program, adopted one of division, and the first fruits appear in a division of the forces of the church making the departure. If such a course were not prohibited by plain teaching of the scriptures, it would seem that purely as a matter of expediency churches would avoid it. It means economic waste. The fact that this and any other question of faith and practice does lie wholly within the field of Christian liberty, does not make this departure any less a departure from the plea and principles of our people. Such a course of action, if followed by any considerable number of churches, would breed confusion everywhere, divide our people, invalidate our message and make us the laughing stock of the religious world. And it is the purest childishness to say that the blame for such a condition would rest on those who refused to depart from that position which has given meaning and power to our message and brought us to our present position of influence in the world. My views are exactly opposite those who endorse the action of the Berkeley church. I believe that by making baptism a prerequisite to church membership; or to better state the matter, by following the New Testament plan on the question of membership, by adherence to the practice of the New Testament, we have made and not lost. We have been consistent with our whole attitude in respect to union on the basis of the restoration of the apostolic Church. The church at Berkeley cannot consistently admit the unbaptized to membership, and practice immersion exclusively. A church has no right to be a respecter of persons. The practice of receiving the unimmersed into membership will be given up, or it will be simply a matter of time until sprinkling, pouring and immersion will be practiced. A Methodist, Presbyterian, or Congregational church is far more consistent and just as scriptural on the question of baptism as the Berkeley church.

3. Even a religious organization has a right to preserve its own life. In my opinion the California convention did right in registering its conviction that the action of the Berkeley church had separated it from our people. The church put itself out. The convention only declared and made effective what had already transpired. Congregational and Methodist churches believe in the Divinity of Christ and are active in the missionary enterprise. But you would hardly say they are entitled to sit in our conventions and help form our policies! If I had written the California resolution, it would have been modified and changed, but the convention, in my judgment, acted within its rights. While we are not an ecclesiasticism, in the usual meaning of the word, yet we have a right to determine who is eligible to sit in our conventions and participate in our deliberations. We would be in a sorry plight to admit to the contrary.

4. Absolutely nothing. If anything is done, let the Berkeley church do it.

Valparaiso, Ind.

REV. GEORGE B. VAN ARSDALL.

It would be of interest and might throw light upon the matter to have the exact wording of the action of the California convention at hand. But in the absence of that I base my answer upon your statement of that action:

1. I hold that the Berkeley church is doing right in receiving these people into their membership on the terms and with the understanding which obtains in their action.

2. Answered in No. 1.

3. I regard the action of the California convention as fundamentally wrong—a violation of the practice and spirit of the Disciples' history and essentially ecclesiasticism.

4. Any wise Christian thing to help our California brethren to a more Christlike attitude toward those who do not agree with them in every detail of Christian faith and practice.

I might write much more, but it would be only to present my reasons for these views and if you are getting the opinions of a great many, there will be little room for arguments.

Central Church, Denver, Colo.

MR. J. C. M'ARTHUR.

1. I hold that the Berkeley church did right.

2. I hold that it is a grave and fundamental departure, but what we have held in the past does not make it right now, neither are we bound down by laws made by uninspired men like Alexander Campbell and his co-laborers.

3. I believe the convention did right for it made a standard whereby we can excommunicate a church or man at a moment's time, and take it out of our editors' hands and relieve them of self appointed duties.

Salina, Kans.

DR. B. B. BAGBY.

1. In answer to question number one, as an elder in the West Point Christian Church I say positively, no.

2. Narrow minded and showing more of the spirit of sectarianism then of Christ. No. No.

3. Adopt resolution in the Atlanta convention condemning the action of the California convention. The crisis has got to come, so let it come. Every church any where near me has the same problem to face at this time or will in the near future.

West Point, Va.

MR. J. H. FILLMORE.

I prefer to attempt an answer to your questions concerning the action of the California convention against the Berkeley church by a statement: I believe that the attitude of the Berkeley Christian Church toward baptism is the only consistent position for our churches to take, otherwise we stand before the Christian world as affirming our belief in the dogma that salvation is for those whose bodies have been immersed in water, when the facts of Christian experience teach us that the large majority of saved people have not been immersed. How do I know? "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Cincinnati, Ohio.

REV. W. T. MOORE.

I will not attempt to answer your questions in detail, as I am decidedly opposed to settling church difficulties by journalism. In my opinion, you are pursuing exactly the course that will widen the breach and make a reconciliation impossible. If our journals would attend strictly to their own business and let our churches manage their own affairs, without parading these affairs before the public, it would be much better for all concerned. Besides, I would regard it as an impertinence to express publicly my opinion as regards the question at issue between the Berkeley church and the other churches of California, since I have not been asked to do so by either party to the controversy. Furthermore, I am not accustomed to decide cases without hearing and examining carefully the evidence on both sides and this I have not done with respect to the case under consideration, and consequently I am opposed to any ex cathedra deliverance on the subject, and especially in the public manner you suggest. I do not question your sincerity in what you are proposing, but I must protest against the use of our journals in propagating division among the Disciples. The only important divisions that have ever been consummated among us were actually brought about by illicit journalism. I am tired of this thing, and it is surely not in harmony with the avowed principles of Christian union which you profess to hold.

In view of all the facts of the case you refer to, it is, in my opinion, best to leave the whole matter in the hands of those who are immediately concerned, unless there is a mutual agreement to ask the assistance of outside parties. Until this is done it is doubtless better for all of us to attend strictly to our own business.

Pentwater, Mich.

MR. T. F. SANFORD.

I am a reader of The Christian Century and I like it very much and I am glad of the opportunity to try and answer the question concerning the action of the California convention.

1 and 2. I heartily approve of Berkeley's practice in receiving these Christian people and do not consider the church has departed from the essential principles of the Disciples.

3 and 4. I believe the action of the California convention is wrong in excommunicating Berkeley church from their missionary cooperation. I believe this action will do great harm to our program for unity. I am not prepared to say or suggest what should be be done by the brotherhood outside of California, but I sincerely hope something will be done to induce the California brethren to remedy their error? I believe with the Berkeley church in practicing and teaching only immersion. Its open membership plan does not deal with the form of baptism but with Christian fellowship. This I heartily agree and believe in,. May God help more of our churches to pattern after Berkeley church is my prayer.

Everett, Mass.

MR. O. A. HAWKINS.

1. I promptly and unhesitatingly answer, No!

2. I do not see the slightest evidence of disloyalty to the fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ in the action of said church, as noted, and which was condemned by the convention. To my mind the real leader of "our" movement was Thomas Campbell and his reasoning and suggestions, as expressed in his appeal to his Presbyterian brethren in Pennsylvania, has the Master's approval.

3. I cannot see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did. As the brotherhood generally has always conceded that each congregation is a separate entity, as far as internal government is concerned, the action of the convention is a gross violation of this principle.

4. I would suggest that the strong, influential men of the brotherhood, who think as you do, make an earnest appeal to those brethren in California who are responsible for the action of the convention and urge them to recede from their position; this might be followed up at the national meeting in Atlanta, by yet further personal appeals if opportunity is offered. By all means we must hope for favorable expression along this line, at Atlanta, or we have no right to take part in the counsels of those trying to bring about Christian unity.

Richmond, Va.

REV. IRVING S. CHENOWETH.

1. I do not consider the action of the Berkeley church wrong, in the sense of breaking a divine law or commitment of a sin, yet I do think it unwise for one congregation to violate a practice so universal in the communion of which it is a member.

2. I do not consider the action "a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples," and while I approve a more Christian attitude toward members of other churches who unite with us, I do not believe this is being accomplished by such action on the part of isolated congregations.

3. We are certainly narrowing and belittling the spirit of our movement when we think it gives a convention such power as the Northern California convention has exercised. It is the ecclesiasticism feared so much by these same people who exercised it. From my distance I do not approve Berkeley's action but to excommunicate the church I hold is un-Christian and disloyal to the spirit of our movement.

4. Can we do anything more than disapprove? I am sorry but I can see nothing else.

Philadelphia.

REV. E. E. MOORMAN.

1. Yes, it is my conviction that Christian union will remain unattainable so long as there is a diversity of practice in administering baptism. Our churches should therefore insist on the scriptural form. [We fear Mr. Moorman overlooked the fact that Berkeley church insists upon the scriptural form.—The Editor.]

2. It is conceivable that a local congregation might violate both the genius of our movement and its liberty of action. I think that the Berkeley church has departed from a fundamental principle of the Disciples.

3. The action of the California convention is certainly a violation of the genius of our movement. It is something which, if allowed to stand unchallenged, will bring us back into ecclesiastical bondage. The action was narrow minded, without vision, bigoted and absolutely contrary to all Christian liberty. A little thought only is necessary to see where it might lead.

4. Full discussion and out-spoken disapproval.

Indianapolis.

MR. SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

In answer to your questionnaire as to whether Berkeley church should receive as members of its congregation persons who have been baptized but not immersed, I can only say in a pleasant way that if I had power to speak for all churches I would receive into complete membership, with all that it implies, any person who would state that in his own conscience he desired to be accepted as a member of the family of God's children. It would not make any difference to me whether he had been immersed or sprinkled, or, as in the case of the Quakers, not baptized literally at all. My answer in this way seems to cover an affirmative reply in the Berkeley case; however, when we come down to a concrete example, we find that human prejudices are so very strong that it leads to unhappiness and irritation to go against them. Therefore, until the Christian Church can find itself taking a higher ground, with more consideration for the spirit than the letter, I do not see that anything but confusion is to be gained by opening the doors of membership to those who have not been immersed. I say this with regret, for personally I look upon a rule of this kind as ecclesiastical interference with the private right of conscience.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

MR. J. MACK MILLS.

The sinner must be convicted of sin before he can be either converted or condemned. The Disciples of Christ or Christian church must be convicted of ecclesiasticism before it can be either converted or condemned.

The trial has been in progress for some time in California but the verdict was not rendered until the California State Convention cast its vote in the Berkeley matter. Now we stand convicted—our ecclesiasticism is apparent. Conversion or the sentence of condemnation must, and, as I believe, surely will, follow. In either event the Lord will be praised but conversion will be most commendable.

The coming national convention should borrow an ecclesiastical branding iron from some denominational neighbor long enough to apply it to the California convention—extra hot—and then repudiate it in good, strong terms.

Ft. Collins, Colo.

REV. WM. J. WRIGHT.

1. "He can't be wrong whose life is in the right." So sang Whittier. So say I, for my Master's test is, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

2. The Berkeley church has departed from the generally approved, historic practice of the Disciples. Thomas Campbell doubtless would have fully approved the action. Not so his son. To Alexander Campbell doubtless the conduct of the Berkeley church would have been an intolerable innovation; and Alexander, not Thomas Campbell, determined and fixed the principles of the Disciple movement. It may be contended that he erred grievously and that our regular order is wrong and un-Christian. Be that as it may, Berkeley is out of alignment with our movement. Perhaps it would be profitable if we all should get out! But to receive into our full membership the unimmersed is a radical departure from an apparently fixed principle of the Disciples.

3. The garment is of one cloth. The Jews cast out of their synagogues those who confessed Jesus as Lord; Rome excommunicated all who walked with Luther in a "more excellent way;" the Church of England disfellowshipped John Wesley and his little bands of Methodists; the Presbyterians considered Thomas Campbell a heretic because he permitted others than those of his own sect to sit with him at the table of the Lord; Baptists would exclude Alexander Campbell because he asserted the superiority of the gospel over the law; Baptists in Virginia acting under the Dover decree, excluded from their fellowship all the Reformers—Disciples; and the Northern California convention excluded the delegates of the Berkeley church. It was not contended that the delegates were evil persons, or that they themselves were not regularly immersed. The only contention was that they came from a church in which were some persons who had not been immersed. Fraternal delegates from the Presbyterian, Methodist and other churches probably were given all the rights of delegates, though never immersed. Regularly immersed delegates were rejected. A hypocrite regularly immersed might stay; a saint not so immersed might be cast out. I doubt that such action is acceptable to him who said, "He who is not against us is for us." Hence I as fully approve the action of the convention as I do the conduct of those Jews who cast the Christians out of the synagogues. And no more.

4. What can we do? This we can do: Wait! Wait till the children of those who remained in the convention build tombs for the martyrs whom their fathers cast out. That will complete the circle of history which we are slowly repeating. Meantime, "Go! Teach!" for it is needed! "Preach the Word;" keep sweet; be patient. That is all. The heretic of today has almost uniformly been the orthodox of the morrow. And so at length will the Church come to the position of St. John, and the only heretic be he who denies the Father and the Son. In that good time, neither immersion will avail anything, nor un-immersion, but a new creation!

REV. BURRIS A. JENKINS.

In reply to your recent questions I would say that if I had been in the California convention myself I should have voted against the excommunication or unseating of the Berkeley church. I do not consider that our conventions have any jurisdiction in the matters of the local church. With us the individual church is absolutely autonomous. Any departure from this arrangement is a violation of the genius of our movement and my opinion is it will not prevail in our state and national conventions.

As to how to undo the work of the California convention I do not see any way. There is no ecclesiasticism among us that can take a rap at an assumed ecclesiasticism anywhere else.

Kansas City, Mo.

MR. WALTER E. COFFIN.

1. No.

2. The Berkeley church is following the leading of the Spirit of Wisdom spoken of in Ephesians 1:17.

3. The California convention forgot the lesson taught in Mark 9:38-40.

4. Refer them to Ephesians 4:1, 2, and 3.

It seems to me that the California convention has the right to exclude churches and individuals from its membership when in its judgment there is good and sufficient reason for such exclusion, but the action of the majority in this instance is justly subject to criticism. I would not deny its right to adopt a very narrow platform such as the action taken seems to indicate it has adopted but this course can have only one effect, that of greatly reducing its membership and its influence.

Des Moines, Ia.

REV. CHARLES A. STEVENS.

1. Not wrong; but possibly not expedient. Local conditions would determine. Conversion of all conservatives cannot be awaited. Some never will change. Expediency would dictate changing with a minimum of rupture and dissension.

2. Before the act can be called a "grave and fundamental departure," there is need of a definition of "the essential principles of the Disciples." Disciples have made considerable change in fifty years or more. Christian union recognizes as Christians many who are not members of any Disciples church. Why not admit them, if local conditions are favorable?

3. This was a sad mistake. The Hyde Park case is in point. The General Convention did not so treat this church.

4. What can be done? Exhort others not to repeat the action. Be patient, be kind, teach. These changes, like casting out some demons, are wrought only by "fasting and prayer." Then, all strive to grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in due season the Spirit of Jesus will mature the fruit of unbiased and loving brotherhood.

Edinburg, Ill.

REV. W. B. HARTER.

1. No.

If our missionary work is voluntary cooperation, and I think it is, I do not see that the state convention can have any power to disfellowship any congregation of any kind, whatever

Unless the state missionary society has a clause somewhere defining what a Christian church is it has acted ecclesiastically without any right whatever.

NIETZSCHE AND THE GERMAN IDEAL.

DR. G. STANLEY HALL, the well-known psychologist, analyzes the spirit of militant Germany and traces to the philosopher Nietzsche much of the strength of the war impulse upon which the nation is now acting. Doctor Hall is a frank friend of the German people but remarks that the Germany of culture and of industry is as totally different a personality from the Germany of war as Jekyll was from Hyde. Doctor Hall's analysis of the existing situation and its antecedents is as valuable as it is interesting.

"Ever since the last war the sentiment that France is superficial, corrupt and degenerate, is a nation to be despised and sometime reduced to a third or fourth-class power, has been growing very strong in Germany. Her army wishes to penetrate to Paris, destroy shipping and naval bases on the north and west coasts, to cripple her navy, and to impose a war indemnity beside which the billion dollar indemnity of Bismarck will seem small and will mean almost vassalage. The German war personality is Nietzsche's, based on a philosophy which has taken a deeper hold on the German mind than any other ever has since Hegel. Nietzsche worshipped power. His ethics was 'Do, be, get everything you have the strength to get. Pity is a vice. Evolution means the survival of the fittest and the destruction of the unfit. Christianity with its sympathy for the poor in spirit means decadence, was a disease. The world belongs to those who have the might to get it, and treaties, peace pacts, arbitration are mere points of strategy to mislead other nations, and when the grim reality of war comes they all vanish and are forgotten. Indeed sympathy with the weak, the suffering, and the power of pathos are themselves weaknesses, and might is the ultimate proof of right. The world belongs to those who can get it, and those who have broken through to this supermorals have the world that believes in the old-fashioned virtues at their mercy.'"

The burden of responsibility for the existence of the power-lust of Germany should not, however, be shouldered upon any single thinker like Nietzsche or statesman like Bismarck. These men were quite as truly products of a social temper as they were creators of it. But it helps us to see how radically anti-Christian the German military spirit is when we read the brutish philosophy of its most outstanding interpreter.

DOCTOR GARRISON'S REBUKE.

AS SEVERE a rebuke as has been administered to the Northern California convention for its exclusion of Berkeley church from fellowship in its missionary work comes from the pen of Dr. J. H. Garrison. Writing in his personal department in the Christian Evangelist his words carry also a searching rebuke to that paper itself for its manager's approval of a procedure that broke "the ties of brotherhood which bind our churches into a common fellowship." His language is judicious and not ungracious, but all the more searching on that account. He mentions no names, nor time, nor place, but the context of his statements leaves no doubt as to their current application. He says:

These discussions of some of our unsolved problems are inevitable and are all right at the proper time and place, if conducted in the right spirit, but it should be understood universally that our national conventions [and presumably our state conventions also.—Editor Christian Century] are held for a different purpose, and are not to be disturbed by such discussions. Another fact to be remembered is that most of these unsolved problems require time for their peaceful solution. "The thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns." Aye, they are deepened and clarified, as well. We must be patient, therefore, remembering what some of us seem to have forgotten, that it is vastly more important to preserve unbroken the ties of brotherhood which bind our churches into a common fellowship, than to settle at once some disputed question about which brethren may conscientiously differ. We are not commanded to think alike on every question, but we are required to "love one another" and to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

The essence of the California convention's action is its sin against brotherhood. It was not patient. No one seems to have suggested that the decision be held over until next day, to give a chance for prayer and for the Spirit of God to guide the minds of the delegates.

If the spirit of Doctor Garrison's article had prevailed in the convention, if the convention had gone to its knees and asked divine guidance to do the Christlike thing, does anybody imagine that it would have been possible for it to "break the tie of brotherhood" or to settle by excommunication a "question about which brethren may conscientiously differ?"

THE USELESS CANAL.

THE Panama Canal, which we worked so hard to finish ahead of time, is finished now and useless. There will come a time, no doubt, when it will be of use; but the world's dream of four hundred years has come true, and behold, a canal for which the world is not ready. The New York Nation well says:

"Last Saturday the Panama Canal, the greatest engineering achievement in the world, was thrown open for traffic, and—there is no foreign traffic. Could anything be more sardonic? Just when the most notable enterprise of peace nears completion, the war comes on to paralyze ocean transportation. The one is an enormous constructive task finished; the other bids fair to be the greatest destructive action of humanity of which there is any record. The amount of capital which will be destroyed in Europe alone, if this war lasts a few months, would build several such canals. Of course, so far as ocean transportation is concerned, this is a passing condition, while the Panama waterway is presumably there for all time, and it will profit by the trade revival and the regeneration of American shipping whenever they come. But it is doubtful if any one happening could throw into clearer relief the essentially wasteful and destructive character of the war abroad than Col. Goethals' notice to the world that the greatest American conquest of peace is ready to serve those who are so busily cutting one another's throats."

LABOR SUNDAY OBSERVED.

PROBABLY 100,000 church people in America observed Labor Sunday, Sept. 6. An increasing number of churches of Disciples have been observing the day each year. Press notices indicate that this year their leading ministers everywhere took occasion to direct the attention of their congregations to the religious aspect of the labor problem.

A SUPERFLUOUS SECT

THE Universalist movement in America started as a protest against what was assumed to be a harsh and cruel orthodoxy. That there was some ground for the protest no thoughtful student of the homiletic literature of the period can deny. Universalism began with a fair field and a great opportunity, but it is a lost cause. At the recent convention of the Young People's Christian Union, Rev. Frederick A. Bisbee thus addressed the Universalists present:

It is with shame that we face the fact that our church is not growing. And why is it? Why are we not doing our part in the world's redemption through church extension? What right have we to hoard the bread of life, which we have like misers or scatter it like spendthrifts when there is a single soul starving?

We have suffered our ministry to be depleted, we have sat indifferently by while our educational institutions one by one were taken from us; we have even failed in a crisis to save our theological schools; we have even neglested the teaching of church loyalty and self-respect until our people have taken us at our word and go anywhere—or nowhere, with no appreciation of spiritual values—until they need their consolation in time of death! We have been heedless to the call of missions until we wanted help ourselves. We have destroyed denominational consciousness and set our churches in lonely and deadly independence of each other.

God is love, and God can save to the uttermost. The Universalists believe it and so do all Christians; but sin is a very real and terrible fact; and the old theology, harsh as it was, could never be accused of indifference to moral distinctions.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

The old old-time puritan picture of hell may have been too lurid, and the God which it postulated cannot have seemed very loving; but even that was better than a religion that was lacking in deep horror of sin and fear of its inevitable consequences.

Universalism has not done its share in saving the world, and has produced less than its share of great men and of movements potent for good. Whatever good it may have done hitherto, there is no great interest now at stake in the perpetuity of the Universalist denomination. It would seem to be, as matters now stand, a superfluous sect.

AUTUMN.

NOW is the dream-time of the year;
And the soft west wind
Gently woos to sleep
The leaves, swift-falling, gold, and red, and sere;
And the wild flowers,
Born of summer hours,
Prepare for slumber, knowing winter near.

Now is the dream-time of the year;
And the sad, sad heart
Dreams of summer days,
And of tender hours, now vanished, and more dear;
And the heart cries out
For the hopes that lie
By the wayside dead, and drops for each a tear.

T. C. C.

LET AMERICA KEEP OUT OF IT.

IT WOULD not be difficult for the United States to become involved in the war. On the contrary, it would be so easy that it will require our utmost self-control to avoid doing so. There will be irritating incidents. Many things will happen at which America could easily take offense. We have greater need of national self-control than ever before in our history as a nation. The world needs our neutrality far more than either side needs our partisanship. There will be voices calling us to arms. There will be yellow journalism crying out that America's honor is at stake. Heed them not. The world has need that we should maintain peace in this continent—not for our own sake only but for the world's sake.

Let America be calm. Let her trust God and keep serene. Let her keep her powder dry and keep it where she will not easily be tempted to ignite it. Let America keep out of it.

"THE WORLD HAS PASSED AWAY."

"Our world has passed away,
In wantonness o'erthrown;
But steel and fire and stone."

SO WRITES Rudyard Kipling in his stirring war poem Yes, the world has passed away. It will never be the same. We shall need new maps not only of Europe but of Africa and of the oceans. No living man can tell how much the world that is to emerge from the chaos of war will differ from that which existed before.

"Our world has passed away."

But something is left beside steel and fire and stone. "Now abide faith, hope, love, these three." They and not steel, stone and fire are the eternal realities. They are more than graces. They are the three fundamentals. After the steel is sheathed, the fire is quenched and the stone disintegrated, these three abide. The men who are killing each other love their wives and babies more than they hate each other. Today there seems little left but steel and stone and fire; but really these are not the things that are left, "Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three."

The Bible tells us of more than one world. And sometimes it speaks of this world as if it were many. Peter contrasts the world before the flood with the present world in the same passage in which he contrasts the present world with what many people think, and wrongly, means heaven. The Epistle to the Hebrews is speaking of the very world in which Christ was crucified when it says that God did not entrust the world to come to angels but gave it to man. Out of the abomination of desolation, the void and waste, is emerging the world to come, this present world as it is to be. The world is passing away, but now abide faith, hope, love, these three.

SO SAY WE ALL OF US.

SECRETARY GRAHAM FRANK'S communication in this issue opens with this clean-cut declaration: "If the General Convention is an ecclesiasticism I want nothing more to do with it, unless it be to help bury it."

So say we all of us.

It was most unfortunate that the editor of a paper whose advocacy of the General Convention, in the face of its critics, has been pronounced, should have encouraged the Northern California state convention to turn itself into an ecclesiastical court. He thereby failed sadly to measure up to the leadership inhering in his position. No single act has done so much to give apparent ground for the suspicion with which in certain quarters the General Convention idea is regarded.

No doubt Mr. Smither by this time sees with regret the character of the pitfall into which he walked on his recent California visit. But it is due the brotherhood that his paper plainly disavow any purpose to use the General Convention for the ecclesiastical purposes to which the California convention was persuaded to lend itself.

AUSTRIA'S ATTACK IN ALLITERATION.

THE war between Austria and Servia brings forcibly to mind one of the most notable alliterative forms ever written in the English language. It is not definitely known who wrote it, but it is believed to have been the work of Alarac A. Watts, Jr., and it dates from one of the sieges of Belgrade by Turkey, probably in 1789. This poem, though often imitated, has never been equaled. It stands as the most complete and interesting alliterative jingle on the twenty-six letters of the English language.

An Austrian army, awfully array'd,
Boldly by battery besiege Belgrade;
Cossack commanders, cannonading come,
Deal devastation's dire destructive doom;
Ev'ry endeavor engineers essay,
For fame, for freedom, fight, fierce furious fray.
Gen'rals 'gainst gen'rals grapple—gracious God!
How honors Heav'n heroic hardihood!
Infuriate, indiscriminate in ill,
Just Jesus, instant innocence instill!
Kinsmen kill kinsmen, kindred kindred kill.
Labor low levels longest, loftiest lines;
Men march 'midst mounds, motes, mountains, murd'rous mines.
Now noisy, noxious numbers notice nought,
Of outward obstacles o'ercoming ought;
Poor patriots perish, persecution's pest!
Quite quiet Quakers "Quarter, quarter" quest;
Reason returns, religion, right, redounds,
Suwarrow stop such sanguinary sounds!
Truce to thee, Turkey, terror to thy train!
Unwise, unjust, unmerciful Ukraine!
Vanish vile vengeance, vanish victory vain!
Why wish we warfare? Wherefore welcome won Xerxes, Xantippus, Xavier, Xenophon?
Yield, ye young Yaghier yeomen, yield your yell!
Zimmerman's, Zoroaster's, Zeno's zeal
Again attract; arts, against arms appeal,
All, all ambitious aims, avaunt, away!
Et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Proposed Religious Work at Exposition

The interests of religion during the ten months' period of the Panama Exposition, will be under the managment of the committee of one hundred appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, with headquarters at San Francisco.

THE PROGRAM.

The program for this great religious campaign includes work both within and without the exposition grounds. Within the grounds the committee will build a modest yet commodious and commanding building, to cost, furnished, $50,000. In this building there will be two lines of religious work.

First—That of an exhibit, in a concrete and intensive form that will show what Evangelical Christianity thus far has done through Bible work, missions, Sunday-schools, Christian education, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. work, Christian Endeavor and kindred societies, temperance reform, social service, etc., for human salvation and uplift.

The maximum space now at the disposal of the exposition management for such an exhibit is only 3,000 square feet —wholly inadequate!

ITS PLATFORM.

Second—This building also will contain a lecture hall capable of seating 1,000 to 1,200 persons. On its platform, which Dr. Jowett thinks will be the greatest world-challenging platform yet lifted, daily at the noon hour, during the exposition period, some strong world-famed man or woman will give a sane, strong, compelling Christian message on such themes as Missions, Personal Religion, The Word, Christian Education, Reform, Social Service, Civic Conditions and Duties, etc.

Already such men as Dr. Jowett, John R. Mott, Robert E. Speer, J. A. McDonald, (Toronto), Samuel Zwemer, Cairo, (Egypt), Hon. John Wanamaker, Hon. William Jennings Bryan and others have been consulted regarding this work and have given encouragement of their help.

Who can forecast the impact of this platform upon the thought of America and Europe, and especially upon the present and future leadership of Japan and China?

ITS EVANGELISM.

Without the exposition grounds, near the civic center so as to command the transportation facilities, locally and for the bay region, as also the hotels and lodging places, a great steel tent will be set up (steel in order to meet fire ordinance requirements) in which nightly shall be held great evangelistic mass meetings. These meetings will be under the sane leadership of the present-day leading world-famed evangelists. At the noon hour too, in a large down-town theater, mass meetings for men, boys and women will be held. Also in factory and shop meetings thousands of men, women and youth will be reached with the gospel!

ITS IMPORTANCE.

What mortal can measure the importance of this work? The nations of the earth will be our guests! Think of the self-evident results in America and throughout the world! Rightly done this work will give evangelical Christianity its proper place and rating. The exposition will be material progress at climax! This work will lift the gospel to its rightful place in world-thought!

ITS BUDGET.

According to the best available estimates now at the command of the Executive Committee the budget will run:

Inside building, furnished	$50,000
Outside steel tent—ground rentals	40,000
Overhead expenses	20,000
Exhibits	15,000
Downtown theaters, halls, rentals	15,000
Lecture and Evangelistic talent	15,000
Social service, and world peace	10,000
Men and boy's work	10,000
Women and girl's work	10,000
Publicity	5,000
Up-keep of buildings	5,000
Incidentals	5,000
A total of (on this basis)	$200,000

Some anticipated income from collections at Evangelistic meetings will cover other probable cost risks. The inside building somehow can be used for future religious work for young men or young women—or both.

ITS CHALLENGE.

Has evangelical Christianity ever before lifted such a challenge as this? Dare we refuse to accept it? Than to do this mighty work what better investment can American Christians make of money and effort for Christ and his kingdom?

THE COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED.
San Francisco.

American Tract Society Moves.

The American Tract Society, which has been located at 150 Nassau Street for eighty-nine years, since it was founded in 1825, is moving in its ninetieth year to large and commodious quarters in the new Architect's Building at 101 Park Avenue, corner of Fortieth Street. The society has felt that the changed conditions on the mission field require new and enlarged policies to meet them, and by moving uptown it is following the natural movement toward the transportation centers. The Finance Committee was empowered to select the best available site and at the last meeting voted unanimously in favor of the Park Avenue location, where the society will have a large roomy store on Park Avenue in addition to ample office room. The society is interdenominational in character. It publishes Bibles, testaments, hymn-books, religious and educational books and tracts in most of the active foreign languages, as well as in English and supplies them to missionaries, students and Christian workers throughout the world. The work of the society's colporters is largely among people who are without access to public libraries, and hundreds of thousand homes would have been without religious reading of any kind save for the visit o fthe colporter and the leaving of the tract society's publications. The grand total of all publications in all languages issued by the society amounts to 788,045,890 copies. The officers of the society are William Phillips Hall, president, Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D., vice-president, Rev. Judson Swift, D. D., general secretary, and Louis Tag, treasurer.

Bible's Influence to Be Tested.

The committee appointed by the American Bible Society to arrange for its centennial in the spring of 1916 has requested Rev. William I. Haven, one of its corresponding secretaries, during his Oriental tour this fall and winter to arrange with missionaries, native Christian leaders, and other competent persons to prepare articles dealing with the influence of the Bible upon the peoples and civilizatons of these various lands. The Bible Society purposes out of these reports to publish a volume on the influence of the Holy Scriptures on laws, customs, languages and religion wherever it has gone in the missionary field.

Magnate Lauds Ten Commandments.

Col. Timothy S. Williams, the president of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit street railway lines, recently spoke in Chicago on the topic of the hard times and the honest conduct of business. Mr. Williams believes that the need of the hour is more strict observance of the ten commandments. Here are some of Colonel Williams' statements:. "I have long been convinced that the fundamental reason for the times being out of joint is the lack of a wholesome respect for the ten commandments. As a lawmaker Moses certainly has had no superior in the thousands of years which have passed since he directed the morals of the children of Israel. A greater teacher than Moses supplied later two additional commandments, one of which (the love of God, is now generally ignored, while the other is (without due acknowledgment to its author) the inspiring note of the present yearning for true democracy—'Thou shalt love they neighbor as thyself.' And Christ properly insisted that upon these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. We business men must not deceive ourselves with the repeated assurance to ourselves and to the public that we are the innocent victims of radicalism. When we look for the cause of radicalism we find it in our own misdeeds and lower ethical standards. And in making this admission I do not single out the men of large affairs in industry, trade or finance—nor the managers or manipulators of railroads and other public utilities—but I have in mind as well the small merchant and trader, the small money lender, even the daily wage earner; and organizations of labor as well as of capital. The standard of morality is vastly higher in business life today than it is in political life. The day has passed in large corporations when any individual stockholders or any combination of stockholders can, if disposed, force dishonest methods or fraudulent practices upon their operating staffs. If I am right in my observations as to present ideals among the managers and stockholders of corporations, then it is only a question of time when public sentiment will change, and when the public is once convinced of our sincerity and honesty, we need have no apprehension of the ravages of demagogues and politicians. We can then state our problem frankly to the people, confident of their intelligent cooperation and support."

The President Appoints Day of Prayer.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in response to whose request President Wilson has appointed Sunday, October 4, as a day of prayer, has issued a communication to the Protestant Evangelical churches urging the complete observance of the day at both the morning and evening services with the suggestion that, whereever possible, union services be held in the evening. The resolution of the Federal Council which was submitted to the President, August 20, was as follows:

"That as this awful war must drive devout people to their knees, we venture to suggest that an early Sunday and the preceding Saturday be designated by the President of the United States as a day of united prayer in all places of public worship and in the homes of the people to ask the Supreme Ruler to intervene in such ways as his divine wisdom may approve so as to calm the hearts of those who are filled with passion for war, dispose their minds to listen to the counsels of humanity and accept overtures for peace, and bring speedily to their distracted and distressed peoples the blessings of peace."

The resolution of the Federal Council was supported by a letter on behalf of the Jewish congregations signed by Rabbi H. Periera Mendes of New York.

Whitefield's Bicentennial.

The bulletin issued by Dr. William H. Roberts and Dr. William E. Biederwolf, chairman and secretary of the Federal Council's commission on evangelism, recommends to ministers throughout the nation that they prepare themselves by reading and study to preach on Sunday, December 13 next, on the ministry of George Whitefield. The appropriateness of the occasion attaches to the fact that the day following, December 14, is the 200th anniversary of the birth of this mighty modern apostle. The particular object of commemorating his labors at this time and bringing attention to the spirit and method of his ministry is the hope that from such a revivification of his example there may radiate new enthusiasms in evangelistic preaching and evangelistic service throughout all the churches.

It is befitting that under Whitefield's name there should be made a general appeal to all evangelical denominations to renew their evangelistic zeal, for Whitefield himself was so thoroughly superior to denominational lines that he affected in England and America both Presbyterians and Methodists, equally, and in England at least the inspiration of his life was scarcely less pronounced and permanent on the Church of England itself.

Credit in City Schools for Bible Study.

The Austin, Texas, school board at a recent meeting took notable action affecting religious education of adolescent boys and girls, when it voted to extend credit toward graduation for the study of the Bible. In doing this it follows the policy which has worked admirably at the University of Texas, by which courses given by the association of religious teachers are credited toward the A. B. degree. The action of the school board was due to a petition from the Austin church council in which the Sunday-school superintendents' association also joined. This council requested that as much as one unit of credit be granted toward high school graduation to all students regularly enrolled, who pass an examination, upon a course of study as outlined by the council. It was proposed that the instruction conform to the following conditions:

"(a) Teachers who give such a biblical course must hold a first grade state teacher's certificate, or, in the absence of a certificate, must, in the judgment of the city superintendent of schools and committee on teachers, possess the training represented by such a certificate.

"(b) At least forty consecutive minutes of class instruction must be given each week for nine months.

"(c) A separate room, to insure proper conditions of attention and control, must be provided for the class.

"(d) Maps of Palestine and vicinity, adequate for the presentation of the course, must be provided.

"(e) A blackboard, adequate in size, must form part of the equipment.

"(f) A reference library, though not required, is urged as essential to the best results.

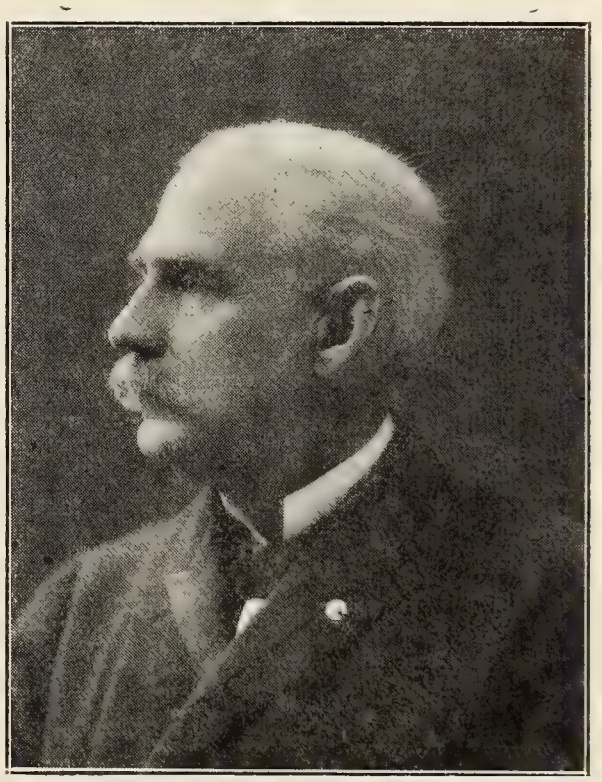
"(g) The course of study is practically the same as that of the graded lessons for the intermediate department published by the International Sunday-school Association."

The Bible instruction for credit is to be done in the city churches. The plan avoids the union of state and church. There is no effort to give any religious instruction in the city school, and even the expense of the plan is borne by the churches. In turn, they are free to give the instruction as they wish, making it devotional, dogmatic, doctrinal or evangelical; and the high school examines the students only on the historical, geographical or biographical materials. In other states where this plan is in operation the Jews, Catholics and Protestants heartily indorse the system, and all are expected to do so in Austin. At its meeting in March the Texas State Sunday-school Association authorized a commission of twenty educators and religious leaders of the state to promote this plan of correlation of religious and secular instruction, which is claimed will help solve the problem of a complete education.

Francis E. Clark, Traveler

DOUBTLESS no other man in the world has travelled so many miles and done so large a work for the world as Rev. Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor Society and president of the World's Christian Endeavor Unon, who will be sixty-three years old on the twelfth of the coming year.

Thirty-three years ago Dr. Clark was pastor of the Williston Congregational



Dr. Francis E. Clark.

Church of Portland, Maine. He was then a young man just fresh from college and seminary. Williston Church was a typical New England church, with all of the problems and difficulties that those churches had to meet.

In the winter of 1880-1881 a series of special evangelistic services in the church had led a great many young people into church-membership. This wise young pastor realized that if those young people were to be held for the church they must be trained for service, they must have something to do, and they must be shown how to do it. He called his young people together, and on February 2, 1881, the first Christian Endeavor Society was formed, the first Christian Endeavor pledge was signed, and the following Sunday the first Christian Endeavor prayer meeting was held.

From that small beginning in Portland the society has spread and grown, until today there are more than 80,000 Christian Endeavor societies in the world, with more than 4,000,000 members.

There are Christian Endeavor societies in every country of the world, and each week meetings are conducted in more than eighty different languages; the literature of the society has been printed in as many tongues. Something like 1,500 daily, weekly, and monthly periodicals carry Christian Endeavor news; more than 200 periodicals are devoted entirely to the work of Christian Endeavor. There are more than 750 different kinds of books, leaflets, cards, etc., published for use in the work of the society.

From almost the very beginning of the movement Christian Endeavor has been interdenominational in its scope and work. Though it began in a Congregational Church, today there are eighty-seven different denominations that take Christian Endeavor as their young people's society. Throughout the world there are probably more Methodist Christian Endeavor societies than those of any other denomination, though in North America many of the Methodist churches have a purely denominational young people's society. On this continent there are more societies in Presbyterian churches than in those of any other denomination: the Christian Church has the second largest number of societies, the Congregational third, the Baptist fourth. In England, Burma and India the Baptists lead in Christian Endeavor, while in Australia, Spain, France and other countries the Methodists lead: in Norway, Denmark, Germany and Russia the Lutherans lead; in Italy the Waldensians, etc.

No agency has done more to bring the Christian people of all denominations closer together than has this great society. The present tendency toward a unity of Christian people and churches is due, in a large part, to Christian Endeavor, with its more than 12,000 union meetings every year, ranging from local and county Christian Endeavor union gatherings of one hundred or less, to the State, International, and World's Conventions, with thousands and tens of thousands of delegates present.

The General Convention and Ecclesiasticism

BY GRAHAM FRANK.

If the General Convention is an ecclesiasticism, I want nothing more to do with it, unless it be to help bury it. It is because I believe that it is a movement away from ecclesiasticism that I am giving some time to helping it forward.

It fell to my lot to speak at the Northern California convention on the evening of the historic day in which that convention had refused seats to the delegates from the First Church of Berkeley. I made the same speech I had made at other state conventions. With explanations to the effect that I did not mean to be guilty of any discourtesy, I stated as plainly as I had ability to do that the thing the Northern California convention had done that day was implicitly impossible in the General Convention. In substantiation of this statement I read the following from the preamble of the constitution of the General Convention: "We, members of churches of Christ, in convention assembled, reaffirming our steadfast adherence to the independence and autonomy of the local churches and inviting the fellowship of all our sister churches in the accomplishment of these ends, do adopt the following constitution." I further read, in part, the resolutions adopted by the Toronto convention as follows:

Whereas, fears have been expressed by some that the convention organized on the basis of representation from local churches co-operating through said convention may be a step toward a species of ecclesiasticism contrary to the history, spirit and aims of our movement, now therefore, be it

Resolved, by the representatives of the churches in convention assembled, that no such purpose is contemplated, nor would it be possible under the constitution which we have adopted:

Resolved, by the representatives of the claim any desire or intention that this convention or any of its successors shall ever exercise any control over the freedom or autonomy of the local churches, and that this convention claims no authority greater than or different from that which has always been recognized in our conventions and which is not mandatory but purely advisory, whether it be in relation to congregations or any missionary, educational, philanthropic or other organization.

I did not discuss the action of the Berkeley church, but sought to make it plain that the General Convention was not and could not possibly become an organization for dealing with such questions. The object of the convention is plainly stated in Article II of the constitution:

The object of this convention shall be to promote unity, economy and efficiency among all the philanthropic organizations of the churches of Christ; and to secure equitable representation of the churches in an annual convention which shall receive the reports of and be advisory to such philanthropic organizations, thus securing a closer co-operation in the work of the kingdom of God.

I think it is both Christian and wise in any discussion of this matter to proceed on the basis of facts.

It is not a question as to whether or not there shall be any general organizations among us. We already have them. The urgent question now is whether or not our churches as such will take up the responsibility laid upon them of co-operation in the work of advancing the kingdom. The ecclesiasticism which we may well fear is that which is growing up outside of the churches and being imposed upon them in ways that do not always comport with either the word or the spirit of the Master.

The experience of the year has forced on my mind the conclusion that the day has fully come when our churches need to have something to say concerning the co-operative work of the kingdom. The right of the churches thus to co-operate is so sure and so fundamental that it never occurred to me that any one would ever call it in question. If it is true that only individuals as such can co-operate in the missionary work of the church, and that only missionary societies and boards can hold conventions and report to individuals concerning their work, it is well that we should know these things. I read in Second Corinthians of the brother who was "appointed by the churches to travel with Paul in the matter of this grace." The day is at hand when our churches must either assert their liberty or submit to an extraneous ecclesiasticism that is the bane of all Christian hearts.

It is because I believe in Christian freedom and in the right and duty of the churches to co-operate in the work of the kingdom, that I believe in and am advocating the General Convention.

The Servant of the Spirit

By C. Sylvester Horne.

the real romance of history is this romance of the preacher; the sublime miracle of the God-intoxicated soul with vision of an eternal will, and sense of an empire to which all continents, tongues, races belong. This man stands serene amid the clash of arms, and the foolish braggadocio of force, asking only for the sword named truth, for the harness of righteousness, and the spirit of peace. This is the world's unconquerable and irresistible hero. All its most enduring victories are his. It is he who year after year, and generation after generation, in spite of rebuffs, defeats and disappointments, has planted the banner of the kingdom of justice, freedom and humanity on the conquered and dismantled fortresses of oppression, selfishness and wrong.

It will do us all good to realize the catholicity and magnificence of our order. It is well to realize that for justification of our existence we can make appeal to an universal instinct. We may well cherish our affinities. Our kith and kin is the mightiest family under God's heavens.

The one thing needful to make us prophets is an experience akin to that of Zechariah—the soul's awakening. Some angel of the Lord, some messenger from his presence, some ministry of his hands must wake us out of our sleep. Of this I am very sure—no preacher will thrill and move his generation who has not himself known this kindling of the soul. For it is "soul" the world needs. Everywhere today I hear the same complaint—that we are suffering from lack of soul. Art, they tell us, shows no falling off in skill of technique, but there is so little soul in modern pictures. Music is the same; the great composers have left no successors. Poetry died out in the nineteenth century. It is the same in other spheres. The employer complains that his workmen put no soul into their work. The workman retorts that industries today are managed for the most part by companies; and companies are well enough called "bodies" of men, but they are bodies without souls. Even the pulpits of the world, I hear it said, are occupied by those who unite to a chaste style a well-furnished mind, and a genius for criticism and analysis; but somehow there is little soul, and the winds of heaven do not sweep over the spirits of their audience as in days gone by.

KEEPING THE WORLD'S SOUL ALIVE.

All this may be exaggerated. I suspect it is. But nobody can question that there is a measure of truth in it. It is "soul" that is the motive-power of all progress; that turns all the wheels that ever do turn to any noble purpose. "The words that I speak unto you," said Jesus, "they are soul." As a mere matter of fact he has kept the soul of the world alive. As John Morley wrote many years ago, "The spiritual life of the West has burned during all these centuries with the pure flame first kindled by the sublime mystic of the Galilæan Hills."

This is our business—the business which all the parliaments of the world are powerless to transact. It is keeping the soul of the world alive.

Of Human Interest

Danish Critic Praises America.

Dr. George Brandes, the famous Danish scholar and critic who recently visited this country, when interviewed as to his impressions of America, said:

"Here in America men have the true chivalry.

"Your woman suffrage movement is a proof of the esteem in which women are held. The women do not have to bluster or destroy. In several states they have the vote, and, little by little, will have it in all. There is nothing over which they need worry.

"In my own country," he said, "women have already obtained a large share of suffrage, and all without any passion, without any heat or any disturbance. My brother was one of the ministry that conferred the franchise upon them.

"It was not easy at first when the idea of woman suffrage began to take hold in Denmark. Forty years ago, I translated John Stuart Mill's "Subjection of Women" into Danish, and none of the papers would review the book, for they feared it would incite wives to revolt against their husbands."

Dr. Brandes says that woman suffrage in Denmark has not made any great change in politics, but that it has had a markedly good effect upon the women.

The Poor Governor.

Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut, was one time fishing in the stream of the Adirondacks when he encountered a handsome setter dog, which insisted on following him from camp to camp, as he moved along the stream, reports Lippincott's. Later he met a party of men working up-stream with a native guide. The guide immediately recognized the dog as his own property.

"Ha, trying to steal my dog, are you?" he shouted at the governor. "I'll have you in jail for this! There's a law in the woods just as big as you have in the city."

The governor endeavored to explain that he was an unwilling companion to the dog, which had persisted in following him, but to little or no effect until he added a crisp greenback to aid him in his arguments.

"It's queer what strange things happen to a man up here," he remarked to the stage-driver who later carried him away from the woods. "That is the first time I was ever accused of stealing a dog."

"Yes, sir," replied the driver sympathetically. Then, after a moment's thoughtful silence, he continued, "As for me, sir, I have never been accused of stealing anything."

Admiral Peary on Partners.

"A silent partner," said Rear Admiral Peary, "is something on the order of Mabel, Tommy and Dan. Mabel, Tommy and Dan, three ragged little country weekers, looked anxiously at Joe, their brother, who advanced across the barnyard toward them crying bitterly.

"Dan ran to Joe. Then the others saw him burst into tears on his own account. "'What's the matter?' Mabel asked when Dan came back leading Joe by the hand.

"'Boo, hoo!' roared Dan. 'A goose bit him, and he swallowed that there new piece of chewing gum. Boo, hoo!'

"'Oh, boo, hoo!' wept Mabel.

"Boo, hoo, hoo!' wept Tommy.

"And little Joe, louder than all the rest, kept up a continual:

"'Boo, boo, boo, boo, hoo!'"

A Boy's Composition.

William H. Maxwell, superintendent of New York's public schools, quotes with no little zest a composition, based on a moving picture play, that a boy of ten wrote. The best paragraph ran:

The villian curled his mustarsh, and seezing the pure vurgin shreeks ha ha be mine or deaths blud is on my head this dagger stabs thee to thy utermost sole ha ha ha vengunze vengunze. But the good hero kurses and says O hevins hevins stur one step and thy ded body lies at my door. Iay won parm on the vurgins korpse and it was better if you was drownd with a millstone. He Helped Her.

"I count myself fortunate," says a Philadelphia minister, "in numbering among my parishioners several who invariably tell me the truth about myself.

"Of a certain worthy but uneducated woman of my flock I asked whether she liked my written or unwritten sermons.

"She reflected for a moment, and then replied: 'I like you best without the book, because you keep saying the same thing over and over, and that helps me to remember.'"—Harper's Magazine.

Fleeing From Alsace

evident, especially after I have procured a paper, that we cannot go to Paris, and if we reached Paris we could not leave. But we must have gold to go farther. Not being able to locate my friends at once on Sunday, I called up the American consul only to find in the end that some of them, and perhaps all, have departed. There was no question but what I could get out of the country, but a very strong probability of a delay which might result in missing the steamer on which luckily we had secured passage while in Paris. Good American gold certificates would not procure me tickets. It must be gold. Finally I persuaded the hotel-keeper, whose waiters, all German, were leaving him, to take $20 of perfectly good U. S. gold certificates for $10 worth of Belgian and English coin, which, with what I had, was sufficient to land us in London. An all-night's journey via Ostend and Dover and we are across the Channel and in London. After securing a hotel, getting more gold and tickets on the special train going to our boat at Southampton, it is noon. At last we are able to rest and sleep and we spend the rest of the day and all night at it, except for an evening meal and a cablegram home advising our dear ones that we are safe.

While I have penned these lines the days have been passing. We have gone into Queenstown and out again, passed man-of-war and torpedo flotillas. It is a bit uncanny to see a small flagstaff protruding from the water alongside and keeping pace with the ship—a submarine. Although we are sailing under the American colors, we must stop and assure them of the port of destination. We are eager for news but get little. In the late hours of Saturday night the "Lusitania" goes sweeping by, away north of her course, not a light showing. Our wireless tries to communicate but the only response is "Can't talk." We know, therefore, that she has come safely out of New York harbor and that no war ship will catch her at the speed she is going. In the early morning "La Lorraine," of the French line, rushes by homeward bound, also dark and silent.

Disciples Table Talk

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION AT DECATUR.

Illinois Disciples gathered at Decatur this year for their sixty-fourth annual missionary convention. There have been great changes in the personnel of the Illinois ministry in recent years. Trusted leaders of the past have died or moved to other states, and for the most part a new group of men is at the helm. The most noticeable change this year was the absence of J. Fred Jones, the state secretary who, longer than any other man, has led the Illinois work. Between fifty and sixty new ministers have come into the state during the year and are taking their places in not only their local communities but in the general cooperative work as well. The convention was the guest of First Church, Decatur. There are two churches in that city, and this is the first time First Church has ever entertained a convention. Their new building was dedicated a few months since. The private homes of both churches were open to delegates. Meals were not served in the church as is customary, and this seemed a good change as it allowed the local church members far more opportunity to attend the sessions of the convention. The hearty hospitality of Decatur Disciples was expressed through the welcome given in receiving delegates into the homes.

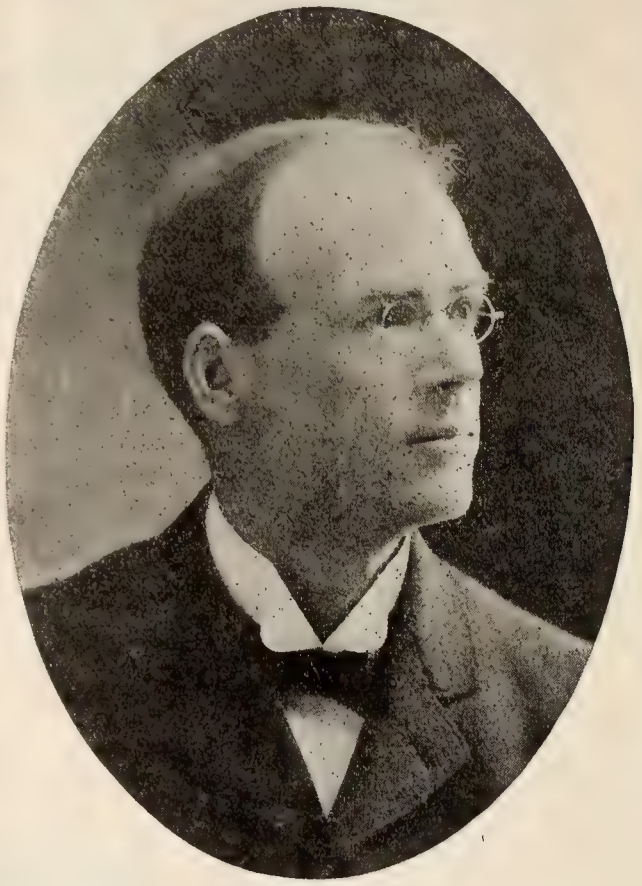
Woman's Missionary Society.

As usual the opening sessions of the state convention are those of the Woman's Missionary Society. These sessions were every way profitable and inspiring. Under the leadership of Mrs. Lura V. Porter, president, and Miss Jennie Call, secretary, the women's activity has been particularly effective in the past year. The establishment and equipment of a business-like office for Miss Call, in Springfield, has proved to be a step in advance, though it was taken somewhat hesitantly. Mr. H. J. Derthick and Mrs. W. C. Payne of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, were present and spoke helpfully. The climax of the session, and indeed of the whole week, was reached in the afternoon of Tuesday when Mrs. Ross, now of Canton, Mo., but formerly matron of Lida's Wood at Eureka College, spoke on "A Mother's Message." The artless eloquence of her address wonderfully stirred the hearts of all her hearers. Mrs. Ross has been speaking for the woman's organization in Iowa during the past year. Hers is a great interpretation of the relation of Christian motherhood to Christian missions. Her son, Emory Ross, is a missionary in Liberia, Africa.

After the session of the C. W. B. M., S. E. Fisher, of Champaign, president of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, was introduced and made a statement of the task of Illinois missions. He gave special attention to the work at the state university where student pastors among both men and women have been at work during the past year. There are now about five hundred Disciple students in the state university and their spiritual care is coming to be a matter of great concern.

The New Secretary.

John R. Golden was introduced as the new state secretary to succeed J. Fred Jones. He is an Illinois man, and his return to the state is a most welcome event. It is but a few weeks since he was first approached with regard to the work of the state missionary society. There has been but little time to mature a program for state missions. His address, however, showed acquaintance with the big human problems of Illinois. It indicated that our work must be both evangelism and conservation. The various social groups in the state must have attention. There must be work on the rural church problem and also attention to the great cities. Mr. Golden is to set out right away to visit the leading churches of the state and to study in more detail what should be done. The report of the state secretary shows that while we are not losing membership in Illinois we are losing churches. We now report a hundred less organizations than we did five years ago. This is partly due to increased efficiency in getting the facts from out-of-the-way places but it is also indicative of the death of churches in overchurched villages. In many cases the death of such churches may be a gain to the kingdom. In other cases it represents the death of churches in rural communities where they have been needed and should have been kept alive with more intelligent oversight.



Rev. E. M. Smith, of First Church, Decatur, Ill., who entertained the state convention this year.

Figures and Interpretations.

All were impressed with the burdensomeness of hearing figures without interpretation for two hours, much the same sort of figures that are given every year. The resolutions committee rightly asked that the amount of this material read in future conventions be greatly decreased. It is wrong to take the time of a great convention to read ten cent items of office expense. It is enough that such matters should be passed upon by the state board. The statistics that are gathered in the state office and are never printed need interpretation. A good convention speech could be made from the figures now in the state office on the question of ministerial salaries. M. L. Pontius, recently removed from Peoria to Jacksonville, warned us in his address on state work that useless organs perish in the process of evolution, and that the state missionary society must have a real function or cease to exist. The statement of the function of state missions was the constructive task of his address. In the educational association Miss Luceba Miner read the report of the Eureka Educational Aid Association. She is retiring from the service of the organization to make place for Rev. Louis O. Lehman, of Gibson City, who will represent both the Aid Association and the college in the field this coming year. He will undertake to raise twelve thousand dollars to provide against the annual deficit under which the college is now compelled to operate.

Dr. Combs and President Pritchard.

Rev. George H. Combs of Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, spoke on Wednesday evening on the present war. He declared that the nations going to war for the time lapsed from the Christian faith, but they would return to both civilization and Christianity and the walls of everlasting peace would be built higher. The same evening President H. O. Pritchard of Eureka College spoke on educational work. He outlined the forces that make the task of the church college difficult, but expressed the faith that present educational tendencies are all in the direction of bringing the small college back again into the favor of the general public. He decried the mob spirit in education which makes the freshman seek the large institution without regard to what the institution has to give.

American Missions and Europe's War.

Thursday morning there was a conservation session in which various addresses were given on Finances, Bible teaching, church work and church letters. In the afternoon Carey E. Morgan, of the American Society, spoke with regard to the difficulties of his organization. He showed that this society had pioneered the way for our organized work. He also showed that the present attitudes of communities which insist upon keeping their home mission money in their local communities had resulted in the present deficit in the coffers of the society. He spoke with vision on the task of the Disciples and insisted we should be "peacemakers" and not "piecemakers." The Disciples of the Prince of Peace should speak the truth in love and be forbearing with honest error. Thursday night Dr. Combs spoke again. He spoke on "America, the Hope of the World." "If we can get rid of the Corinthian fashions, the wriggles and indecencies of women's dress permitted in the name of art," he said, "I am almost tempted to say the war will be worth all that it will cost. 'Made in America' is yet to become a slogan of which we all shall be proud. This war will make unpopular the supercilious talk of which many American travelers have been guilty about the superiority of European monarchies. We have been told how much better are the orderly methods of a monarchy than the helter-skelter of a democracy. We are going to learn that the only sovereignty is the sovereignty of God and man. 'To rent' signs are yet to be hung on the palaces of Petrograd, Potsdam, and Buckingham."

Long-time Treasurer Resigns.

J. P. Darst of Eureka, who resigned after twenty-six years of service as state director and treasurer of state funds, because he will move to Los Angeles, Cal., was presented with a bouquet of twenty-six roses and a congratulatory address. Resolutions were unanimously passed indorsing national prohibition of the liquor traffic and commending the Anti-Saloon League. The resolutions also requested that the date of future conventions be arranged so as not to come on the date of the primary election, as in this convention many delegates were deprived of their votes. Greetings were sent to the Illinois conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in session at Shelbyville. The convention adjourned to meet next year in Bloomington.

The following officers and board members were elected for the coming year: Pres., W. G. McColley, Shelbyville; Vice-president, N. H. Robertson, Watseka; Recording Secretaries, Iva W. Agee, Litchfield, H. J. Reynolds, Camp Point; Representative of Anti-Saloon League, Rev. W. F. Shaw, Chicago; Members of State Board, W. H. Cannon, Decatur, S. H. Zendt, Bloomington, M. L. Harper, Eureka, R. E. Henry, Havana, S. E. Fisher, Champaign, J. H. Harrison, Bloomington, H. H. Peters, Paris.

Banquet at Sanitarium.

Battle Creek, Mich., has become America's most noted place for the repair of ruined digestions. In this connection it may be of interest to note that James Small, of Kansas City, Mo., was the principal speaker at a banquet given at the sanitarium for the residents of Oklahoma and Missouri. But then all life is filled with inconsistencies.

Cheney, Kansas, Dedicates.

Dedicatory services were held in the new church at Cheney, Kan., Sunday, Aug. 30, Geo. L. Snively in charge. The church has just attained its majority having been organized twenty-one years ago. The new structure is a great credit to the congregation and the town of Cheney, since no other town in Kansas of the size of Cheney can boast of a better church building. While only a very few hundred people live in the town proper the surrounding country is populated with rich farmers. The cost of the building in money was $15,000. The value is much more since a great deal of work was donated. All is paid for. L. B. Myers is pastor.

Philipsburg Church Dedicated.

A six thousaand dollar building was dedicated by Geo. L. Snively at Philipsburg, Kansas, on Sept. 6. For the past two years, C. C. Atwood, the pastor of the church, has been laboring faithfully in this building enterprise. Philipsburg is a good county seat town in western Kansas—a Rock Island division point. The church building became a necessity for the growing congregation and Sunday-school.

Galveston Church Growing.

For a number of years a relatively small band of Disciples has been trying to get a church established at Galveston, Texas. The church has received encouragement and help from the state missionary society because Galveston is destined to be one of the important cities of the south. No city will profit more by the opening of the Panama Canal. The Galveston church, although not yet large in numbers, has been gathering strength during the past few years under the ministry of C. G. Brelos and others. After the resignation of Mr. Brelos and his removal to Illinois the church was for some time without a pastor. Recently J. B. Holmes has been called to the pastorate and he thinks there is a splendid outlook for a successful work.

Bible College Creed Stirs Texas.

Not in many years has there been such agitation in the church in Texas as has been occasioned by the adoption of a creed by the Brite Bible College of Texas Christian University. The charter of Brite Bible College provides that the successors of the trustees of the college shall be elected by the Texas Christian Missionary Society when assembled in annual session. But no trustee can be elected unless he subscribes to all the articles of the Brite College Creed. This would resolve the state missionary society into an ecclesiastical court. The state society has not yet accepted this responsibility. It is not improbable that the subject will be discussed in the state convention.

Church Has Week of Talk.

Second Church at Warren, O., began the campaign of fall work with a "week of talk." This is a new kind of week on the church calendar. In this day of many devices in methods of church work a device that can organize and direct talk will be widely welcomed.

Thirteen Weeks in Chautauquas.

Bruce Brown of California has just completed a tour of sixty-five cities in which he lectured one hundred thirty-seven times. This took thirteen weeks, five cities per week. Mr. Brown was able to fill this long list of engagements without missing or even being late at one. He is now engaged in holding an evangelistic meeting at Webster City, Ia., after which he will return to California for further evangelistic work.

Death Calls Prominent Layman.

On Sunday, August 23rd Edwin A. Nye, of Des Moines, Ia., was stricken with apoplexy and died instantly. In his death the Disciples have lost one of the strong men of the church. For eleven years he was editor of the Des Moines Daily News. In 1908 he resigned to become western representative of the American Press Association. During all the years of his busy life, Mr. Nye found time to take an active part in the work of the church. For the past sixteen years he has been an elder in Central Church at Des Moines. He was always the right hand man of his pastor and the friend of every member in the church.

Tabernacle for Mining Town.

Central City, Pa., is an important mining town situated not far from Somerset, Hooversville and Johnstown. The churches in these last named places combined to establish a church in Central City which is a new mining town and had no regularly organized church. Enough assistance was obtained from these combined sources to erect a tabernacle which was dedicated Sept. 6, by S. G. Buckner, the pastor at Somerset. As this is the only place of worship in the town the prospects are that members of other churches will join with the Disciples and make the church a community enterprise.

Caught in European War Zone.

George W. Knepper was among the thousands of American tourists who had great difficulty in getting out of the German war zone. Mr. Knepper, pastor of First Church at Ann Arbor, Michigan, sailed from New York July Fourth for England, intending to make an extended trip abroad, which he was obliged to abridge—and he was mighty glad to do so—because of the war. Upon his arrival at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, on his return home he gave out for publication in the "Yarmouth Times" an account of his experience abroad and some observations of the early preparations for war. He thinks the European rulers have precipitated the war in order to save their monarchical power.

Crawfordsville Appreciated J. M. Alexander.

J. M. Alexander has taken leave of Crawfordsville and begun his work at South Bend, Ind. The Crawfordsville Journal was very hearty in expressing for the Crawfordsville church and the community as a whole an appreciation of Mr. Alexander's work in that city. A part of the appreciation follows: "Mr. Alexander has proved one of the most capable and influential ministers who ever occupied a pulpit in Crawfordsville. He has won the highest regard of his congregation during the time he has been in the city and has held the warm friendship and admiration of members of other denominations. His loss will be keenly felt by the members of his church who realize the valuable work he has done for the institution. As a pastor and as a man Mr. Alexander has made a host of friends in Crawfordsville, who will always remember his kindly bearing and sincere efforts to accomplish good in the community."

Gospel Team at Work.

Wichita, Kansas, claims to have originated the idea of the "gospel team." The essential idea is probably as old as evangelism but out in Kansas and Nebraska new form and direction has been given to the work of evangelism by this organization known as the "gospel team." The church at Fairbury, Neb., has just organized such a team. It is composed of about twelve men, all of them laymen. The first Sunday in September this team went to Bower, Neb., and conducted evangelistic services. Such a combination of men has remarkable influence with other men. The Fairbury church and any other church which has organized a "gospel team" has found a fruitful way to employ the lay ability which lies dormant in so many churches.

Kentucky Convention Well Attended.

An unusually large number attended the Kentucky State Convention held at Ashland the first week of this month. The new church edifice at Ashland just built at a cost of $55,000 and dedicated free from debt was taxed to the limit in order to accommodate some of the sessions of the convention. Between 300 and 400 out of town delegates were in attendance. The educational and missionary interests of the church received due attention. W. N. Briney, of Louisville, delivered an address on "Kentucky's Call" which set forth the objective ideals of the missionary societies. Prof. E. E. Snoddy, of Transylvania University delivered the principal address at the educational session of the convention.

Minister Enters Politics.

Several Disciple ministers have resigned their churches this fall to enter the political contests of their districts. C. R. Wolford has resigned at Owosso, Mich., his resignation to take effect Nov. 15. Mr. Wolford has been successful during his three years' pastorate at Owosso and he leaves the church in good condition, free from debt. He became a candidate and received the nomination for the office of state representative on the Progressive ticket. He plans to make his home in Owosso permanently.

Honor George Hoagland.

For many years George Hoagland has been a recognized leader among his own people, the colored people of Bloomington, Ill. He was elder of Third Church, a congregation of colored Disciples there. He is now moving to Nashville, Tenn. His leaving Bloomington was the occasion of a large gathering of the colored people of the city to bid him farewell. The meeting was held in one of their churches. The following resolutions were adopted: "Whereas, the Mt. Pisgah Baptist Church, the Union Baptist Church and the Wayman Chapel, A. M. E. Church, together with the Third Christian Church and the citizens of Bloomington, with the purpose of showing our respect to our beloved brother, minister and townsman, Rev. George Hoagland and family; And, whereas, he and his family have led an upright life, be it resolved that we recommend Elder George Hoagland to the confidence of all good citizens and to the brotherhood of the Christian world."

Secret Societies Commended.

Orvis F. Jordan, pastor of the Evanston church, Chicago, delivered a sermon before a large gathering of Knights of Pythias at the Grace M. E. Church in Evanston on Sunday, Sept. 6. Mr. Jordan spoke to the question: "How can organized fraternities co-operate with agencies of religion and education in making a better city, state, and nation?" He said: "The calumnies that have been uttered in the past against secret orders are growing ridiculous with the years. Once it was charged that secrecy was prima facie evidence of evil. Now we know that philanthropy may have its hidden things as well as crime. Once it was charged that secret orders taught a bad ethical code. The very efforts that have been made to expose the ritual of secret orders have shown to the public sentiments of rare ethical beauty. It is every man's privilege to belong or not belong to great fraternities like the Knights of Pythias, but it is not the privilege of any man to condemn an institution of which he knows nothing save by word of gossip. The fraternities have shown the church how to organize for relief. No institution in the world today has such machinery for quick action for the aid of a stranded brother away from home as have the great orders. Fraternities furnish a debating school and train citizens in the art of self-expression. The lodge meeting is at its best an exchange of benevolent sentiments for the uplift of the race. Nor should any one miss the contribution of the fraternity to the propagation of religion. Every member of a great fraternity has confessed to a faith in God to join. The lodge fights vice in all its forms. Drinking may not be done in any lodge room, nor may bartenders or gamblers join. The lodge demands of its men clean lives."

Union Services to Hear Roy Stauffer.

All the churches at Sterling, Ill., united in a Sunday evening service Aug. 23 to hear Roy Stauffer of Cleveland, O. Mr. Stauffer was formerly pastor of the Sterling church and was spending a part of his vacation there visiting old friends. The whole town turned out to hear him.

M. C. Hutchinson Closes Work.

Sunday,August 30th, M. C. Hutchinson preached his farewell sermon to the First church at Burlington, Iowa, before leaving for his new field of labor at Fulton, Mo. The following excerpt from a Burlington paper gives some idea of the esteem in which Mr. Hutchinson is held in that city: Mr. Hutchinson has been the pastor of the local church for the past four and a half years and his work has been highly successful. He will be greatly missed, not only by his congregation but by the whole city, as he has been a man to get in touch with many of our citizens who will be loath to see him depart from our midst. The church has called to its pulpit F. D. Ferrall, of Des Moines, Iowa, who closed a successful four years' pastorate at Shenandoah, Iowa. He will come to Burlington September 14th, occupying the pulpit Sunday, September 20, at which time the annaul fall rally day of the Bible-school will be held, and a great day is in store.

Ivey and "That Big Cumbention."

"We're goin' to go down town when all those folkses come to that big cumbention and tell them to build us a bigger house to live in soon, so we can have a big play-room and a great big garden, too." The little fellow who made this declaration was Ivey Henderson, a bright and healthy six-year-old youngster in the Southern Christian Home, Atlanta, Ga. He meant just what he said, too—that he would get up before the convention himself and tell the folks what he wanted. Ivey is the fellow who stood up before the state convention in Macon, Ga., a few months ago, and told the delegates: "We need some money from you all." And he got it, in the shape of a number of substantial contributions from individual delegates. When the General Convention is held in Atlanta, October 7 to 14, the orphanage will be one of the places of particular interest to the thousands of delegates from all parts of America. The children are themselves intensely interested in the mammoth convention for which the people of Atlanta are getting ready, and it is probable that the forty little folks will be taken down to several sessions. The present Home in West End is only rented, and a movement is now on foot to establish a fund to build a permanent Home for the institution, a little farther out in the suburbs of Atlanta.

Frank Waller Allen Begins New Work.

Frank Waller Allen considered the theme "The Touch of Jesus" in his initial sermon at First Church, Springfield, Ill., to which field he was called several months ago from Paris, Mo. "There is nothing worse than loneliness," said Mr. Allen. "No one to greet you with a pleasant word or to shake you by the hand and talk about the weather. I remember when I was in New York City one time. I was in the newspaper 'game' as a reporter and I had gone to this city, the largest city in the United States, thinking that perhaps I might put my talents to work with the large newspapers there. I did not know a person in that city, and how I wished every morning that I might meet someone who would shake me by the hand and say to me, 'Do you think that it will rain today?'" Mr. Allen applied the parable of the touch of the Savior on the flesh of the leper thus making him clean and whole with the touch that the Lord may give those today who are not clean and whole. "Many are lonely, unclean and rotting with sin, who need the touch of Jesus to make them strong against temptation, make them clean and whole and fill them with salvation," he declared. The new Springfield pastor has had a varied and interesting career. Son of Rev. Frank G. Allen, for twenty years pastor at First Church, Louisville; educated at Transylvania University, Lexington; in newspaper work in Louisville, Kansas City and other cities; author of "Back to Arcady," "The Golden Road" "Lovers of Skye," and of a new book, "Bread and Love." All this time Mr. Allen has been a preacher of high ideals. While pastor at Paris, Mo., he was esteemed not only for his pulpit work but for his efforts for the betterment of Paris as a town. Mr. Allen has now undertaken a difficult and exceedingly important work, but there is no reason why he should not win in this field as he has in others.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Word has just been received at the office of the Foreign Society that Mr. Tiju, a very devoted and efficient Christian Hindi evangelist, was recently bitten by a panther, and a few days afterwards blood-poisoning set in, and five days following died.

The missionaries in India are calling loud and piteously for reinforcements. One station has been closed for some time for want of more workers.

Dr. Wilmot of Octavia, Nebr., expected to go to the mission field this autumn, but his departure has been deferred for one year.

The sailing dates of a number of missionaries of the Foreign Society have been deferred on account of the war in Europe.

A family in Illinois has undertaken the support of a missionary on the foreign field. They will send $50 each month. There are hundreds of families that could take this step, and be all the happier and better for having done so. This is another Living-link.

Statistics show that one out of every 860 church members in America goes as a foreign missionary. If every congregation would send one missionary the number would be greatly increased.

A hundred years ago there were no medical missionaries. Today there are over 9,000, treating annually more than three millions of patients.

About 200 missionaries from home and foreign fields are expected to attend the sixth annual Medical Missionary Conference to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 17-20.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first nine days of September amounted to $22,086, a gain over the corresponding time 1913 of $7,053.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR OCTOBER 4.

Mark 14: 1-11. Memory Verses, 8, 9.

Golden Text.—She hath done what she could.—Mark 14:8.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(1) Now after two days was the feast of the passover and the unleavened bread: the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him with subtlety, and kill him: (2) for they said, Not during the feast, lest haply there shall be a tumult of the people. (3) And while he was in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster cruse of ointment of pure nard very costly; and she brake the cruse, and poured it over his head. (4) But there were some that had indignation among themselves, saying, To what purpose hath this waste of the ointment been made? (5) For this ointment might have been sold for above three hundred shillings, and given to the poor. And they murmured against her. (6) But Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. (7) For ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good: but me ye have not always. (8) She hath done what she could: she hath anointed my body beforehand for the burying. (9) And verily I say unto you, Wheresoever the gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, that also which this woman hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. (10) And Judas Iscariot, he that was one of the twelve, went away unto the chief priests, that he might deliver him unto them. (11) And they, when they heard it, were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently deliver him unto them.

Verse By Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 1. Now after two days: Two days after leaving the temple and going to the Mount of Olives where he spoke at length with Peter, James, John and Andrew. Was the feast of the passover and the unleavened bread: This feast of the Passover was celebrated at even of the 14th day of the first month, and the feast of unleavened bread began on the 15th and continued for seven days. In sacred history the term "Passover" is used to denote the whole period. It commemorated the exemption or "passing over" of the Israelites when the destroying angel smote the first-born of Egypt. The chief priests and scribes: Members of the Sanhedrin. Might take him with subtlety: Having discovered their inability to find any just cause for arresting Jesus, they seek to entrap him into some technical offense by their conniving.

v. 2. Lest haply there should be a tumult of the people: They had not failed to see the hold Jesus had over the people.

v. 3. While he was in Bethany: Bethany was a village located about two miles east of Jerusalem on the slope of Mount Olivet. Jesus probably spent many nights there, in the homes of Mary and Martha and Simon, and went into the city for touch with the people during the day. Simon the leper: No doubt Simon had been healed of leprosy by Jesus, else he would have rendered his guests ceremonially unclean. There came a woman: This woman was Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus. See John 12:3. Cruse of ointment of pure nard very costly: This unadulterated nard had been secured at great cost. It is suggested by some that this might have been purchased for the purpose of embalming her dead brother, Lazarus.

v. 4. To what purpose has this waste of ointment been made? "A little later Jesus employs the very word that Judas himself used in plausible reproach, and employs it against Judas himself. Of all those whom God had given him, Jesus lost but one—'the son of perdition,' or the son of waste. He who was so anxious over the waste of Mary's ointment had no eyes to see that it was he himself who was wasting." W. J. Dawson.

v. 5. For above three shillings: Three hundred shillings was equal to about $51. It was about the average annual wage of the day laborer.

v. 6. She hath wrought a good work on me: The explanation is in verse 8

v. 7. For ye have the poor always with you—but me ye have not always: This scripture is commonly misinterpreted. Jesus does not say, "During all future times ye shall have the poor with you." Many who are participant in the responsibility for poverty seek justification for poverty in these words of Jesus. Jesus is merely stating a fact. They did have the poor with them always. The latter part of the above quotation refers, of course, only to the physical presence of the Lord.

v. 8. She hath done what she could: It was her best.

"It may not be the best;
But if it is my best;
It is heaven blest."

She hath anointed my body beforehand for my burial: Here is a rebuke to those who have no "flowers for the living."

v. 9. For a memorial of her: How true this has been proven to be. This act has been related by preachers and teachers throughout all Christian times. It is a story that never grows old. Christians think of this woman, who did what she could, more often and with more admiration than they do of the great political and military leaders of history.

v. 10. That he might deliver unto them: See Mk. 3:19.

v. 11. Promised to give him money: See Matt. 26:18.

The Measure of Love

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

In St. Paul's Cathedral, London, you may find this inscription:

"MAJOR-GENERAL CHARLES GEORGE GORDON, C. B., WHO AT ALL TIMES AND EVERYWHERE GAVE HIS STRENGTH TO THE WEAK, HIS SUBSTANCE TO THE POOR, HIS SYMPATHY TO THE SUFFERING, HIS HEART TO GOD."

The English people have a remarkable ability to phrase ideas superbly as this inscription shows. One would be bold, indeed, to suggest an improvement, but would it not be better to put "his heart to God" first? All would follow after that. Of the generous givers Paul says, "But first they gave themselves to the Lord." It was so with Mary.

NO RESERVATIONS.

The trouble with most of us is that we have so many miserable reservations. We give something but we hold more back. The beautiful element in this deed lies in the fact of its absoluteness, its surpassing richness, nothing is held back. Mary gave it all. Why, a whole year's earnings it took to buy this precious spikenard! To Judas it is waste and yet Judas is so blind to real values that he will go out and waste his own eternal life!

Mary gave in the right fashion. No wonder her praises shall be sung so long as the Bible endures, so long as men, women and children shall sit in groups listening to its stories. It was a beautiful deed, beautifully generous. Nothing is too good for Christ. You cannot build a church too good. Ruskin once said, "I would have every English village build a marble church, not alone for the sake of the building, but also for the sake of the spirit that would build it." There has been too much reservation. Mary teaches us the abandonment of love, the extravagance of devotion to the person of Jesus. We are learning this now in these days of Men and Millions. But first let us give our own selves to the Lord. We have been afraid of wasting our money on foreign missions. Orphans, widows, worn-out ministers, have known the pain caused by our carefully reserved possessions. Christ did not consider this gift of love waste. He approved it heartily. He would carefully gather up the fragments after the feast, but he would approve the richness of this gift. "She did what she could." She loved much, she gave much.

THE MEASURE OF LOVE.

A man said to me once, "I always dread going to ———'s store with my wife, we see so many beautiful things, and I have not the money to buy them for her." Another man said, "I would like to buy fifty dollar hats and five hundred dollar gowns for my wife; nothing would be too good for her if I could afford it." In his estimation nothing was too good. In one of our southern churches a poor washerwoman came forward on Foreign Missionary day with twenty dollars which it had taken her a year to save. The Lord would regard her as he did the widow of his day. In Cleveland a church was dedicated free of debt because a small boy came in just before the service and handed the pastor an envelope containing a large gift. His mother was very poor and when the minister, with tears in his eyes, held up that envelope and told its story, thousands of dollars were piled upon the plates in a few minutes. It is all an affair of interest, of devotion. In one of our churches the minister always in his prayer over the offering uses the expression, "The measure of our love." It is a church in which the people have been taught to give generously.

THE SWISS GUARDS.

A gentleman just back from Europe spoke of "The Lion of Lucerne" as the most interesting thing which he had seen in all his travels. This only shows how a strong man is touched by the idea of unreserved giving, for the Lion of Lucerne commemorates those brave Swiss soldiers who protected Louis with their lives. They fell dead upon the palace steps, but they held back the mobs from the King. We sing of their fidelity for they were faithful unto death. What an example of unreserved giving!

No man can long be a pastor without discovering the gift that measures love. He alone knows the sacrifices which men and women make for the cause of Christ. He comes to appreciate those simple, humble folks who give to the point of sacrifice and beyond. Men wear old hats and clothes of last year; women deny themselves outings and give the money to missions. I know one man who looks like a scarecrow—but he supports three students in college and two missionaries abroad. It is great to be a fool for Christ's sake. His old slouch hat will one day be replaced with a crown of gold and his faded coat by a garment of gleaming white. His face will not need to be changed; it is saintly now. The downright stinginess of so-called Christians is appalling and this beautiful lesson is timely with its note of abandoned generosity, devoted extravagance, unreserved love.

A new idea at Chautauqua is a school of Mothercraft.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 30.

The Ideal Church. Rev. 3:7-13.

Desire and imagination create ideals. The man devoid of ideals would be hard to find. Ideals differ in value. Some are base, some are noble. Men endowed with exceptional powers of imagination and whose desires are worthy picture to us the individual as we feel he ought to be and society as it ought to be. A pig endowed with imagination would construct a pig heaven. Piggish men build for themselves in imagination heavens in which gross pleasures will be uninterrupted. Knowledge, truth, justice, happiness, and friendship are the elements with which the good man constructs his ideal social order.

THE OPEN DOOR.

The church has a place in a world that contains evil. In the New Jerusalem there will be no temple. The church is here to help set things right. Cruel wrong, base ingratitude, and blighting sorrow are in the world, and men of faith unite to destroy them. The man of faith finds an open door wherever there is evil of any sort. The Lord tells the church at Philadephia that he has set before it an open door. Let us not overook the fact that he set it before a church that could see it. Churches make their opportunities.

LITTLE STRENGTH WELL USED.

The church at Phiadephia was not the dominant force in the city. Its numbers were few and its teachings were disliked by the multitudes. It might have said, "What is the use?" Churches are asking the question today and the answer implied by their manner of asking is that resistance to evil is folly. Philadelphia did not raise the question. If it did, it dismissed it quickly. It had faith to invest what it had in the work committed to it. There is always a venture in morals and religion. The outcome is never absolutely certain. The advocate of peace believes the world will some day have sense enough to refrain from war; he cannot demonstrate that peace will come. There are reasons for believing that strife in the industrial world will be allayed; we do not know that it will. We must take risks for our ideals. Have we visions of the universal kingdom of God? What can we do to bring that kingdom into full power?

THOU DIDST KEEP AND DIDST NOT DENY.

This church at Philadelphia had a word of truth to keep and a name to honor. It was steadfast and loyal. When the story of the present war in Europe is told, we shall probably learn that some of the preachers of peace remained firm in their convictions, unshaken by the fury of animalism about them. Slavery went down because men kept the word of truth. The liquor traffic has tried to stop the mouths of those who know the truth about it but it has failed and is now threatened with disaster because the truth has been spoken. If we had in detail the history of the city of Philadelphia, we should doubtless be amazed and indignant at the lies told about the Christians. But lies were unavailing. The Christians remained faithful.

THE TRIBUTE OF ENEMIES.

"I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." If we have important truth to communicate, and we bear consistent testimony to it, we may hope that men who now reject it will finally accept it and join with us in the proclamation of what they now denounce as false. This is the honor we may hope to receive from our enemies. We are forbidden to crush them and humiliate them for the glory of victory. We are likewise forbidden to obtain peace by surrendering the truth.

Acts 14:27; Rev. 2:13; Matt. 24:45; Is. 49:23; 2 Tim. 2:12; 2 Thess. 1:3-4.

Is Your School Preparing for the Bible Knowledge Contest?

Harold Bell Wright, whose works will be given as First Prize in the Bible Knowledge Contest.

The Interest already manifested in this Contest indicates that it will be one of the most popular campaigns of its kind ever undertaken by a religious paper. It will be instructive, stimulating, helpful and will be worthy of the paper which is promoting it—which believes that is possible for a paper to be religious and at the same time attractive, spiritual and at the same time modern and wide-awake.

THE PLAN OF THE CONTEST

ONE HUNDRED QUESTIONS ON THE BIBLE will be furnished "The Conquest" by leading Disciple ministers and teachers. Among these question-makers will be: Rev. Peter Ainslie, Prof. H. L. Willett, Rev. Finis Idleman, Rev. John R. Ewers, Rev. W. F. Rothenburger, Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, Prof. W. S. Athearn, Rev. Edgar D. Jones, Rev. John E. Pounds, Rev. P. J. Rice, Rev. H. H. Peters, Rev. H. T. Cree and others. These One Hundred Questions will be published in "The Conquest" from week to week, in instalments. Every issue will contain contest material. The contest will begin early in the autumn quarter.

Five Disciple leaders of authority in Bible scholarship will serve as judges in the contest. At the close of the competition they will award TWENTY-FIVE PRIZES to the contestants sending in the most nearly correct lists of answers to the One Hundred Questions.

THE FIRST PRIZE will be a beautiful set of the works of Harold Bell Wright, bound in full leather, with gilt top, a veritable edition de luxe. The set includes the following books: That Printer of Udell's, The Shepherd of the Hills, The Calling of Dan Matthews, The Winning of Barbara Worth, Their Yesterdays, and the new book just from the press, The Eyes of the World. This splendid prize has been donated to the contest by the publishers, The Book Supply Company, Chicago.

THE SECOND PRIZE will be a fine American Revised Bible, divinity circuit, leather lined, silk sewed, a book of which the winner will certainly be proud. This is the donation of Thos. Nelson & Sons, New York.

THE THIRD PRIZE, Ladies' Solid Gold Chatelaine, or Men's Gold Christian Endeavor Charm. Donated by the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Three Prizes for Schools

In addition to the prizes to be given to individual winners, THREE SPLENDID SUNDAY-SCHOOL BANNERS will be awarded the three schools which send in the largest number of correct—or nearly correct—lists of answers.

FURTHER INFORMATION ABOUT THE BANNERS WILL BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Prayer and the War

PRESIDENT WILSON HAS ASKED ALL PEOPLE WHO BELIEVE IN GOD TO FOREGATHER AT THEIR ACCUSTOMED PLACES OF WORSHIP ON SUNDAY, OCTOBER FOURTH, AND PRAY FOR THE NATIONS NOW AT WAR.

No precedent exists in human history for a neutral nation taking that kind of an interest in a faraway conflict in which its own national and selfish interests are not likely to be seriously involved.

It is a beautiful and significant token of the reality of the "international mind," the sense of the social unity of all mankind which modern industry and scholarship and acquaintance have been creating.

The day should mark a profound religious experience in American Church life. It should release and define our vague sentiments of human brotherhood. It should make plain the spiritual and essential, as over against the superficial distinctions between barbarism and civilization.

Such a linking of heaven and earth—in such a cataclysmic hour—and on behalf of such a fundamental and collossal moral ideal—should, and no doubt will, bring an immeasurable blessing first to those who pray and then to those they pray for.

For this is the divine philosophy of prayer: not that God is asleep or indifferent and must be awakened by the voice of man, nor that he is cruel and pitiless until his displeasure has been appeased by the servile humiliation and plaint of his creatures, but that he is himself so much part-and-parcel of our lives that he can get his will done in our earth only by getting his wisdom into our very thought processes.

It is by means of Truth that God gets his chief work done in the world. There are some levels of the universe upon which he works without need of Truth. But on the higher levels, the levels of human life and moral progress, God is helpless except as his wisdom and purpose are reflected back to him in human perception as Truth.

It is Truth that makes men free.

And prayer is, at bottom, simply the right attitude, or mood, for the soul to assume in order to possess Truth.

The main thing we get out of our prayers is the Truth about the things for which we pray, and Truth leads us to do the things we ask God to do.

Prayer, therefore, is its own answer. Communion with God about anything whatsoever, from our daily bread to the forgiveness of sins and the kingdom of heaven, always brings results, for it is in prayer that there is disclosed to us the divine point of view for regarding the things for which we pray. The adoption of this divine point of view is the secret of attainment and of power.

There need be, therefore, no inhibitions on our hearts as we pray for our war-torn Christendom. We may, rationally, and with philosophic sanction, fling all skepticism aside and ask God to pour out his pity upon the world and to save mankind from the hideous curse with which it is today being smitten. But our prayer must not be merely an indulgence of emotion, a bath of the feelings in the tender sentiments of pity and grief. Our prayer must be an endeavor to think about this war as God thinks about it, to get behind pretexts and occasions to causes, to transcend prejudices and partizanship and deal broadly and honestly with reality.

The mood of prayer is not a mood of passion, nor of partizanship, nor a mood of pride. It is only to humble and contrite souls that God can give his wisdom, his point of view.

"Pray God," the Kaiser exhorts his troops, "to give victory to our side."

"Pray God," advised Abraham Lincoln, "that we may be sure to be on his side"!

To the Kaiser the case is closed; the enterprise is launched; there is no place for debate; God is to be considered only as one of the reënforcements that may be called upon for aid—another ally that may be persuaded to come into the entente now that Italy refuses to take part. And so William comes to his God with a proud heart and with boastful words.

But to Lincoln the human enterprise of which he was chief commander was continually open to reconsideration. His mind was open to find God's will. The work to be done was not man's work but God's work. Man's task was to find God's will, to know the highest justice attainable, and then to reënforce God in achieving it.

Lincoln's mood, his attitude, was the true attitude of prayer. To a soul—to the soul of a nation—that bows its head low in contrition and humility before God, Truth will unveil itself; and to see and possess Truth is more than to win a war.

To our peaceful nation in this hour is set the deep spiritual task of thinking Truth about this human slaughter. Truth may compel us to judge for or against one nation or another. Truth may show us that God's long-time justice demands immediate peace, or it may demand that this war be fought through to its horrible finish.

Truth will surely set justice and permanent peace, based upon disarmament, paramount to an opportunist settlement—a mere truce.

And Truth—the full truth about this war—will show us our own guilty share in it, our materialism of mind, our own lack of faith in our Master's law of love, our lack of confidence in the protective power of an unselfish national purpose unsupported by battleships and fortresses and standing armies.

Truth will make us pray for pardon before we pray for peace.

The Three Men Behind the War

An Analysis of the Final Causes of War, Showing the Fallacy Lurks in the Policy of Armed Peace.

BY CHARLES EDWARD JEFFERSON.

This is a remarkable article. It illuminates the whole war business with an insight that is hardly less idealistic than it is shrewd. Doctor Jefferson is speaking, during these days, the greatest message against war that is being uttered. While other writers analyze and analyze what Aristotle would call the "efficient causes" of the present war, Doctor Jefferson analyzes and sets forth in clear outline the "final cause" of it all. The theme of this article should be carefully pondered on the way to church on Peace Sunday, October 4.

AT ONE time in Roman history, the empire was under the domination of three men. The governments of Christendom have fallen into the clutches of a triumvirate, whose power must be broken before the nations can free themselves from the bondage under which they now groan.

Dr. Jefferson.

The first man of the three is the military-naval specialist, the expert in the science of warfare. War is more and more a fine art, and years of technical training are needed to fit a man to deal with its problems. The modern fighting machines are intricate masterpieces of human genius, and only men of high scientific attainments can make use of them. The military expert must be proficient in mechanics and mathematics, chemistry and engineering and a dozen other sciences. He must know how to calculate the curves of projectiles, the force of explosives, the resisting power of metals, and the range and destructiveness of guns. In his own province, he is undisputed master.

THE MILITARY SPECIALIST.

This has given the military specialist of a certain stripe his opportunity. He has taken advantage of his acknowledged superiority in technical knowledge, to play upon the credulity of the people. I do not speak of all military specialists, but of one type only, the man who has the ideals of Caesar, and who is ambitious to stamp his ideals on the policies of nations. This man, not content with fulfilling the duties of his own office, has little by little usurped the functions of other servants of the government, until he has become a foremost figure in the diplomatic world. His first move is to suggest a Council of National Defense, of which he shall be the head, thus acquiring a potent influence over the expenditure of national treasure. He is made a member of numerous commissions, and is sent on important diplomatic missions, becoming one of the nation's leading representatives in the realm of international affairs. In Europe one cannot go far in any direction without coming face to face with one of these uniformed guardians of the national interests and honor. He takes an upper seat in all peace conventions, for he is a stalwart advocate of peace as well as an expert in war. Although he believes that war is the mother of all virtues, he is willing to kill her in the interests of armed peace. There is no place he likes better than membership on the committee which determines what subjects shall be discussed at Hague conferences. Wherever international policy is in the making, he is on hand.

OUR MODERN SIR ORACLE.

The distinctions showered upon him feed his self-esteem. His haughtiness increases and he grows ever more domineering. He acquires the Olympian tone. His words are oracles. He looks down upon civilians as men of lesser breed. He poses as the anointed custodian of national honor, and is the only man who knows how this honor can be safeguarded. He alone is an expert in national perils. He often knows more than he will tell. When asked to state his reaon for additional battleships or battalions, his reply is that he cannot make his knowledge public for fear of causing fresh international complications. He becomes a High Priest of the mysteries in the temple of international life. In this way he adds new cubits to his stature. One must cross the ocean to see this gentleman full grown. Things are yet in the green tree here.

THE LIMITATIONS OF EXPERTS.

But although somewhat snobbish, he has his virtues. He is not a barbarian or a charlatan. He is a patriot and a gentleman. He has not consciously entered into a conspiracy against humanity. His misfortune is that his ideal is pagan. His education has given his mind a bias which makes him a dangerous counsellor. He is a specialist, and, like many another specialist, he is expensive and has a knack of suggesting elaborate and costly methods of treatment. He is prone to diagnose along the line of his specialty. He can see what he is looking for whether it is there or not. Prolonged application to a narrow set of phenomena has destroyed his perspective. He is apt to see everything through the bore of a gun. Brooding over battles has turned the whole earth into a battlefield. Looking for enemies he has found them on every side. Dreaming of possibilities, he has reached the astounding conclusion that every conceivable contingency must be provided for. So long as he deals with matters within the scope of his knowledge, he is a man to be relied on. The moment he attempts to deal with questions of national policy he is to be feared. Of all the servants of the government he is the last to be entrusted with the responsibilities of statesmanship. He is peculiarly unfit to say how a nation's money shall be spent. National finances are in a muddle wherever he has his way. Because he is an expert in the firing of shells, it does not follow that he knows how many shells the people are able to buy. A knowledge of the force of explosives fits no man to deal with the tangled threads of international business. Sailing a battleship is one thing, and sailing the ship of state is another. He evidently knows nothing of the value of money, or of the danger of turning the screws of taxation until the people rise in revolt. He has never once in any land during the last thirty years suggested retrenchment. His one cry is ever, "More! More! More!"

PEN MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD.

This man has set himself up as an instructor of nations. He is writing for many papers. A long list of books is down to his credit. His literary fertility is amazing. No one realizes the extent of his industry till one consults the catalogues of the last twenty years. His purpose is ever the same—to extol the glory of military ideals and to show how urgent is the need of more guns.

It is here that we face one of the features of Armed Peace, too generally overlooked. In time of war the energies of army and naval officers are absorbed in the task of fighting, but the prolonged leisure of armed peace gives them opportunity to become instructors of the youth of the land. Latent energies are thus set free whose full power for mischief we are not yet able to compute.

THE LITERARY EXPERT.

Who dare say what a great company of able writers, salaried by the government, can accomplish in shaping national character and destiny, if they spend their days and nights in writing their conjectures of the motives and intentions of neighboring nations, and vivid descriptions of the way in which suppositional invasions can be most successfully repelled. There are in Christendom over two hundred thousand commissioned officers in army and navy, eating at the government table, and when one takes into account how many of these are constantly engaged in laying before the public horrifying descriptions of imagined complications and conflicts, every description taking on the solemnity of prediction, and every prediction being followed up with a plea weighted with the authority of official knowledge, for more guns, one cannot wonder that the world is where it is. Military and naval officers are retired from active duty in the prime of life, their ripest years being thus entirely free for the unhampered use of the pen. After the experience of the last thirty years, no one would care to dispute the old adage that the pen is mightier than the sword. By the pen, the doors of national treasuries have been forced wide open, and the stream of national revenue has been turned into a new channel. It is sometimes said that army and naval officers want to fight. This is calumny. They want to write. More things are wrought by printers' ink than bullets. The first man of the triumvirate is the literary expert in the science of war.

THE SECOND MAN OF THE TRIUMVIRATE.

The second man is the contractor, the man who makes ships and armorplate, cartridges and shells, swords and rifles, the man who supplies coal and oil for the ships, food and harness for the horses, provisions and clothing for the men, powder and ammunition for the guns, the ten thousand things which go to the upkeep of a great army and navy, and which cost hundreds of millions a year. He is a loyal comrade of the specialist. The specialist tells him what is needed, the contractor supplies it, and the government pays the bills. The contractor's job is a big one, and it pays. His prices are enormous and the government does not inquire into them too closely. Some of his guns bring a hundred thousand dollars apiece. He builds dreadnoughts at fifteen millions each. The prices go up every year. The dividends are large, and the contractor, in the generosity of his heart, allows prominent members of the aristocracy and wealthy legislators to become directors and stockholders of his company. In recent investigations in England, the most interesting fact brought to light was that a surprisingly large number of nobles and members of Parliament are stockholders in the great armor-making plants of that country.

A BUSINESS THAT PAYS.

In many lines of business, it is difficult to keep up a steady demand for the goods produced, but the military contractor suffers no such embarrassment. By keeping a large force of inventors at work he is able to bring out each year new patterns in sufficient number to coax from the government increased appropriations. It is natural that a government in constant peril of overthrow should want the very latest and deadliest of defensive weapons, and these the contractor is each year fortunately able to supply. There is no limit to the ingenuity of inventive genius, and so long as governmental gold is abundant, the stream of military and naval inventions is not likely to fail. The contractor is peculiarly fortunate in that his costliest creations soon became antiquated. Battleships which cost millions are used as targets at the end of a few years. Beginning with 1884 Great Britain in twenty years spent two and a quarter billion dollars on her navy, and in 1905 the British admiralty admitted that much of this expenditure was then represented mainly by scrap iron, one hundred and fifteen vessels being condemned as useless.

ARMED PEACE PREFERRED TO WAR.

Like the specialist the contractor believes in peace, and he wants it armed. Peace without armor would be to him ridiculous. Wars gigantic and terrifying loom in the near future, but he is ever optimistic, knowing that if government does not become parsimonious, he can supply the apparatus which will keep these wars indefinitely away. It has been said that the contractor loves war. This is a slander. Armed peace is far more to his liking. War comes seldom, is full of uncertainties and is soon over; whereas armed peace goes on forever. Battleships burn as much coal and oil in peace as in war, soldiers eat as much and wear as much, and are therefore as desirable customers for a contractor. In sundry ways armed peace is more profitable than war. In war only a few shots are fired; in peace the target practice must never cease. When four hundred pounds of powder are used at one charge of a single gun, continuous target practice becomes glorious. In war a nation knows how many battleships it needs, whereas in peace nobody knows, and the number to be ordered is limited only by the gullibility of the government. In war the value of airships could be speedily determined, but in peace their value is conjectural, and hence government can be induced to go on buying them at fabulous prices. These two men, the specialist and the contractor, sit side by side at the door of the national treasury in every land. Professional ambition and commercial acquisitiveness make a strong team, not strong enough, however, to pull the militarist chariot along the upward way.

THIRD MAN OF THE TRIUMVIRATE.

A third man is needed and at the call of the specialist and contractor he appears. He is the man who is scared. He is a patriot, but he is timorous. He is sensible, but panicky. He knows all about his own business but nothing about guns. Whenever he is nudged he is ready to sign petitions for more battleships. He has been told on the highest authority that his country is in danger, and his heart is in a flutter. With a beautiful humility, he accepts whatever the experts have to say. He listens like a three years' child, and the experts have their will.

The triumvirate is now complete, and it is time to organize a military and naval league. Without the third man such a league is impossible. It is through the man who is frightened that the specialist and contractor work their miracles. This third man is a man of light and leading and is known to be disinterested, and hence he and his friends are much in evidence in the leagues' literature and at all the leagues' public meetings. But the core of the league is made up of the specialist and contractor along with their brothers and cousins and their wives' relations. The driving forces of the league are the first two members of the triumvirate. Professional ambition, commercial greed, and terror, welded together constitute one of the most formidable alliances known to history. It is impossible to account for the phenomenal expansion of the military and naval establishments in recent years without taking into consideration the military and naval leagues. Such a league when full grown can play with a government as a cat plays with a mouse. Its methods in Europe are so effective that they are almost certain to be copied in time everywhere. The words with which it conjures are patriotism and peace. Everything it does is done to safeguard the vital interests of the country and to avert the horrors of war.

THE POWER OF FEAR.

The most effective spur thus far discovered is fear. Wherever one of these leagues exists the nation is in constant peril of invasion. Far-off nations hitherto friendly grow lukewarm or positively hostile, and the danger of losing valuable national possessions becomes imminent. Men rise, as if by enchantment, all over the land to warn the people of their complacency and blindness, and showers of letters fall on the desks of legislators written by voters who desire to throw light into the darkened legislative mind. Sunday newspapers and magazines blossom in gorgeous pictures of battleships, and in vivid descriptions of pressing military and naval needs. Fear is the blindest and mightiest of all passions, and nations when dominated by it, become insane. Future generations will look back on our time as a period in which Christendom went mad.

It is in a manufactured atmosphere of suspicion and terror that the militarist rides on to victory. In a world knit together by electric wires in which every whisper can be heard through mountains and over seas, and in which rumor works like magic and panic runs like fire: in a world piled high with explosives and in which mischief-makers in the press and jingoes in public office are ready to egg on any enterprise however diabolical, if it only promises excitement, there is no limit to the power which can be wielded by an organization which, clothed with the garments of patriotism and working ostensibly for peace, has for its supreme end and ambition the further multiplication of guns. Through its salaried agents and still more through its uninvited and irresponsible coadjutors, it can keep a nation in a state of chronic alarm, and stampede statesmen again and again into courses of inconceivable folly. Who knows but that the time may come when the nations of Christendom may be driven in sheer self-defense to outlaw all such organizations as incorrigible fomenters of suspicion and discord, and insurmountable obstacles in the path of brotherhood and peace.

The hope of the future lies in the man who is scared. It is he who pays the taxes, and if his pulse can be calmed the world will be saved. When his eyes are once opened, and he discovers how egregiously he has been duped, his indignation will drive out his fear, and in his wrath he will grind the God of Armed Peace to powder.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Where shall we look for him? First in the United States. He is less intimidated here than anywhere else. In Germany he in England he is in hysterics, in America he is somewhat shaky, but not beyond the hope of speedy recovery. Once get the facts fairly before him, and we shall have reached the edge of the dawn of a new day.

What the world is waiting for is a strong voice to cry a halt in armaments. The time is not ripe for disarmament, is apprehensive, in France he is excited, nor even for a reduction of armaments. The step for which humanity waits is an arrest of armaments. Why should the United States not take that step? What is the use of being a great world power if we have not the strength to do a beautiful and original deed? In all dark situations the only way out is an act of heroism. In the present world crisis nothing less than magnificent and unparalleled courage will avail. When the nations are confessedly moving along a downward way, why should not the Republic of the West sound a note which will brace all forward-looking hearts everywhere? Is it a risk? Why not take it? It is not so great a risk as the risk we run in building up in our National capital a military-naval oligarchy which may some day prove our undoing. All history testifies that a Republic has no peril so insidious to fear as the growth of military power within its own borders. The military ideal and the ideal of Democracy cannot survive together. Why not adopt a naval policy which all the world can understand? Why not say in a tone audible around the world,—"We will go no further in this business! Hereafter there shall be no increased expenditures for shells and guns, but ever increasing appropriations for the warfare against poverty, disease and ignorance, and for the strengthening of those social and humanitarian agencies which will make us more and more a prosperous, happy, and mighty people."

It is in this way that America will most surely enlighten the world.

Disciple Hymnbooks and Trinitarianism

How Sacred Songs Disclose a Changed Temper and a Loosening Conviction.

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

The following informal study by Doctor Ames is intensely interesting in itself, and the particular observation which forms its thesis radiates suggestions in many directions. The serious conclusion which the writer leads us to is that, in their theological convictions, the Disciples are sadly drifting. It is possible that they have drifted much farther from the strategic and distinctive position of the fathers than they are aware of.

IN the Millennial Harbinger for 1865 Isaac Errett published an article on Protestant Hymnology. He was emphasizing the crudities and theological absurdities of many of the hymns in common use. He objected particularly to the widespread custom of writing special doctrines into them. Many hymns are quoted in illustration. "Toplady," he remarked, "though he has written some of the sweetest hymns in our language, seldom rises on the wings of his muse that he does not carry his theological blunderbuss, ready cocked and primed, to discharge at the first shadow of Arminian heresy that comes within his range." In illustration he quoted the following lines:

And will the righteous judge of men
Condemn me for that debt of sin,
Which, Lord, was charged on thee?

Complete atonement thou hast made,
And to the utmost farthing paid
Whate'er Thy people owed:

How then can wrath on me take place,
If sheltered in thy righteousness
And sprinkled with thy blood?

In the same strain, he quoted two lines used by Spurgeon in a sermon on the atonement, representing the results of the sacrifice of Christ:

At one tremendous draught of love
He drank damnation dry.

Isaac Errett objected to this sort of thing on the ground that it is an entire perversion of the design of sacred song. "It is singing a theory," he said. "It is foisting that theory into the solemn services of the sanctuary. It is smuggling the contraband wares of controversial theology into the temple of God."

TENDENCIES SHOWN IN HYMNS.

During the last fifty years the Disciples have published many hymnals and song books of various kinds. It is interesting to note the tendencies with reference to the theology of the period as shown in the hymns in common use. I shall mention the treatment of only one feature, namely, trinitarianism, but similar studies would be of interest concerning the atonement, the Holy Spirit, conversion, missions, social service, et cetera.

Great freedom has been employed by various religious bodies, particularly in the liberal denominations, in changing the words and phrases of hymns to suit their doctrinal tastes. The Disciples have been particularly free in this respect. Alexander Campbell complained, when publishing our first hymn book, that it was so difficult to satisfy the churches of the movement in the selection of hymns and in their wording as to make such publications precarious. We are not surprised, therefore, to find in all our hymnals certain lines modified to fit our plea.

ALTERATION OF PHRASES.

In the familiar hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," the last line of the first and fourth stanzas was, in the original, "God, in three persons, blessed Trinity." In all of our publications it has been changed to read, "God over all, and blest eternally." In the hymn, "Crown Him With Many Crowns," the fourth line of the third stanza in the orthodox hymnals is, "From yonder Triune throne!" But we sing, "From yonder glorious throne." In the hymn, "Oh, Thou before whose Presence, nought evil may come in," the last line of the fourth stanza is "most holy Trinity." In the hymn-book "Gloria In Excelsis," the last line is changed to read: "In heaven's eternity." In the old hymn, "Oh, Day of Rest and Gladness," the last stanza in the original form reads:

New graces ever gaining,
From this our day of rest,
We reach the rest remaining
To spirits of the blest;
To Holy Ghost be praises,
To Father and to Son;
The Church her voice upraises
To Thee, blest Three in One.

In our hymnal, this stanza is modified as follows:

New graces ever gaining
From this sweet day of rest,
Type of the rest remaining
For spirits of the blest,
There we shall be in glory
With all the saints above,
And sing the wondrous story
Of Jesus' dying love."

In the well-known hymn, "Come Thou, Almighty King," the first two lines of the fourth stanza, are:

To the great One in Three,
The highest praises be,
Hence evermore!

In our version, it reads:

Oh, Lord, our God, to Thee,
The highest praises be.

In many instances, instead of modifying the lines of the stanza to avoid the use of trinitarian terms, an entire stanza is omitted. In the hymn beginning, "Soldiers of the Cross, Arise," the fourth stanza concludes with the lines:

Godhead One in Persons Three,
Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

This entire stanza has been dropped from the hymn in our collection. A similar omission occurs in the hymn:

Oh Lord of Hosts, whose glory fills
The bounds of the eternal hills and again, in the hymn, "Lift Up, Lift Up Your Voices Now." Another instance is, "The Church's One Foundation." The fourth stanza in other hymnals begins:

Yet she on earth hath union,
With God, the three in one.

This entire stanza is omitted from our hymnals. In the Standard Hymnal, the hymn beginning,

The peace which God alone reveals,
And by His word of grace imparts, omits the last two stanzas both of which enumerate the persons of the Trinity. But perhaps, most striking of all the omissions is the fact that the familiar doxology, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and also the "Gloria Patri" are omitted from all of our hymnals. The doxology is objectionable in the last line: "Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost;" and the Gloria Patri begins: "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost."

TRINITARIAN ALLUSIONS ABSENT.

Although it would require very careful investigation to determine it, there is good reason to believe that the words, "Trinity," "Triune God," and similar expressions, do not occur in any of the older of our compilations of songs.

The reason for these modifications and omissions is not far to seek. They were due to a deep-seated conviction that the words and phrases involved were not scriptural. They belong to the language of Ashdod. They were current in the speech of the sects. There was no authority for their use since they were not biblical. It is difficult to convince oneself that this aversion to trinitarian terms did not also carry with it a deep suspicion of the trinitarian doctrines. When one pursues this question into the writings of Alexander Campbell, Isaac Errett and other representatives, the evidence increases to show that these men were in reality antagonistic to the theology of traditional orthodoxy. It is possible that their opposition was directed more against the form than against the content. They were determined to avoid, if possible, the partisanship and distractions which prevailed in other communions.

They were, of course, not in sympathy with Unitarianism for Unitarianism was scarcely known to them. It was not yet

An Open Questionnaire on the Recent Action of California's Convention

Fourth and Final Installment of a Discussion Participated in by Many Readers of The Christian Century.

FIRST CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., was excommunicated from the state missionary convention of Northern California in July for receiving into its membership unimmersed Christian people who brought credentials from various Protestant evangelical churches such as Presbyterian, Methodist and the rest.

This is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the past fifty years, perhaps in their entire century of history. I wish with the most dispassionate purpose to secure a consensus of the opinion of our brotherhood, including both laymen and ministers. I have prepared this questionnaire for that purpose, and I will welcome from any reader of The Christian Century a frank expression on the issues involved. In order that the reader may have clearly before him the material facts of the situation let me state them, concisely, as I understand them:

BERKELEY'S PRACTICE AND POINT OF VIEW.

Berkeley church insists that it is loyal to every fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ and that the step in question is nothing at all but a further logical and fraternal application of both the principle of Christian unity and that of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

It affirms that these persons whom it receives into its fellowship are Christians, members of the Church of Christ: that Christ has already received them into his Church, which being so, a church of Christ has no choice save to receive them also. To refuse to receive them, the Berkeley church says, is essentially a sectarian act and a violation both of the will of Christ and the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The church holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience.

In the dismissal of an unimmersed member the church gives back the letter he brought with him, together with a letter of its own, commending the Christian character of the bearer and stating the established as a significant movement, and the adherents which it did have were not within the area of the brotherhood of the Disciples. In the few instances where a discussion of Unitarianism is presented in our earlier literature, it is treated in very much the same way as Trinitarianism, i. e., its form of speech is not biblical, and therefore is to be avoided. It would be unwarranted, therefore, to conclude that the modification or the omission of trinitarian terms from our hymns indicates sympathy with Unitarianism, but it does show an attempt to carry out the simple, primitive Christian speech of the New Testament, with a view to avoiding the controversies which arose in the later history of the church.

During the last few years, however, in which the development of the "liberal" theology has penetrated even into the camp of the Disciples, there have been some significant changes in the attitude of our theologians which have been reflected in the latest compilations of hymns. It is well-known that the conservatives have applied the term "Unitarianism" to liberal theology. They have seemed to feel that the most damaging characterization which they could apply to views which they could not accept nor understand was "Unitarianism." Gradually, the disciples have been drawn into attitudes with reference to Trinitarianism and Unitarianism which are inconsistent with their earlier non-committal position.

REFUSE LABEL, ADOPT DOCTRINES.

At the present time, while still refusing to accept the label of Trinitarianism, they do virtually avow its doctrines, and explicitly repudiate both the name and the teaching of Unitarianism. The Disciples have thus gradually come to regard themselves on the side of the orthodox, evangelical Trinitarian denominations. Although this is a radical change from the position of the fathers it has been so gradually accomplished that we have scarcely been conscious of its implications. One of the most striking evidences of this quiet departure from our earlier cautious and conscientious rejection of trinitarian formulas is the fact that these formulas have begun to appear without opposition or remonstrance in our hymnology. It was with no little surprise that I discovered that the hymnal "Gloria in Excelsis," from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, first printed in 1905, departs from the traditional usage. In Hymn 426, the first line of which is, "Hark, the sound of holy voices," the concluding lines are,

> Love and peace they last forever,
> And all truth and knowledge see
> In the beatific vision
> Of the blessed Trinity.

In Hymn 732, occurs the expression, "Glory to the Father, Son, Blessed Spirit, Holy One." In Hymn 31, which by the way, is given the good orthodox name, "Grafton," occur these lines:

> Teach us still to turn to Thee,
> Ever blessed Trinity.

This tendency to use the tabooed terms is still further illustrated in some of the collections of popular gospel songs for use in the Sunday-school, Young People's societies and evangelistic services. In such a collection bearing the imprint of the Hackleman Music Company, the doxology is printed without qualification or apology. In a similar collection edited and compiled by Charles Reign Scoville, not only the doxology but the Gloria Patri appears in regular standing and full fellowship.

LOSING EARLIER MORE CATHOLIC POSITION.

This tendency seems to me to indicate a lessening hold upon the more catholic position which the earlier leaders of the churches held so conscientiously and so tenaciously. Even if they were entirely naive in dong so, and were controlled by an altogether erroneous idea concerning the value of New Testament terminology, they yet occupied a position which it would be of great value to our movement to maintain in the days of its sophistication. It is, indeed, a bit tragic after the pioneers have so explicitly blazed a way free from the language of tradition, to see our devotional literature blighted by the use of phrases which are now not only objectionable on the ground which they proclaimed, but also upon much more vital and significant religious grounds. The new movements in religion are away from the old theological distinctions and doctrines. The Disciples historically have not been Trinitarians. Even the vocabulary of that way of thinking was discarded for nearly one hundred years. To have it introduced now, at this late hour, and on the eve of developments which are destined to obliterate all of that old nomenclature is discouraging.

UNCONSCIOUS DRIFTING.

The fact is, that in these matters we are sadly drifting. This terminology has not been taken over from principle but simply through our submission to the common usage of other churches. In all probability, the question was not raised when the "Gloria in Excelsis" was compiled. The editors were probably as unconscious of surrendering a principle and custom once vital in our history and still capable of being significant, as are the reverend elders among us who are deliberately engaged in the sad endeavor to formulate creedal constitutions for our educators.

I will close by calling attention to the pathetic little piece of humor which appears on the fifth page of the preface to the "Gloria in Excelsis." You will find there recorded among the names of the executive committee responsible for this hymn-book, the following: D. R. Dungan, W. F. Richardson, B. J. Radford, A. M. Harvout, E. V. Zollars, T. E. Cramblett and A C. Smither. On the same page, among the names of the advisory committee, occur the following names: G. B. Van Arsdall, P. J. Rice, F. L. Moffett, C. A. Lockhart, J. J. Haley, W. C. Payne, E. L. Powell, W. E. Garrison, Austin Hunter, C. H. Winders, and H. L. Willett One is compelled to ask: If these men cannot be trusted to safeguard the faith of the fathers, from what quarter are we then to expect deliverance?

fact as to his manner of being received into Berkeley church. The purpose of this is to avoid confusion or embarrassment to other churches of Disciples which might not wish to receive an unimmersed person into their membership.

The Berkeley church and its pastor, H. J. Loken, hold, as I have no reason to doubt, the generally accepted evangelical views of the Bible and the Divinity of Christ and are in all respects faithful to the missionary imperative of our Lord, even to the point of extraordinary generosity. I do not know Mr. Loken personally, but he is described as a preacher of unusual power, and a humble and gracious Christian man.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

REV. C. H. WINDERS.

1. Inexpedient, but not wrong. The local church must determine such matters for itself and the Berkeley church is to be commended for guarding so carefully the rights and practice of other Disciple churches by the character of the letter granted to those not immersed. This answers the second question.

3. A gross violation of the principles and spirit of our movement. If this is to be our policy we should have a written and rigid creed prepared and all ministers and officers of churches should be required to subscribe to it.

Make it definite and clear-cut and rigidly enforce it. Of course we will have no men in the future like Proctor and Lamar and Jones and Longan and a host of others—but that is of small consequence. We may not even have unity—that is not important. We will have uniformity!—that is of supreme importance!

4. Nothing can be done except to personally express our disapproval. I hope no official action will be taken anywhere by any body of people. If that is what a delegate convention leads to, infinitely better we never had such a thing.

Indianapolis.

REV. W. H. HAMPTON.

1. Wrong—because the pastor assumes that the unimmersed are Christians. Does becoming a Methodist mean becoming a Christian? Is an unimmersed Methodist a Christian in the Bible sense? Admit that they are Christians and you knock out the foundation of the Christian denomination.

2. A fatal departure from our teaching.

3. But the California association was wrong in its action as it takes away the independence of the local church. Its action is ecclesiasticism personified.

4. Don't know. Keep quiet.

Rising Sun, Ind.

REV. VERLE WILSON BLAIR.

1. I find it most difficult to answer yes or no. My sympathy is strong toward the church in its sincere efforts to solve the hard problems, but I feel it did wrong, as results show, for I cannot see how such a position contributes anything to the final solution of the problem.

2. I do not regard the church's action as a grave departure from the essentials of the Disciples. Congregational autonomy is fundamental with our people. Let Berkeley do as she pleases, and let other people keep silent. Although I do not personally know any in that church, I feel greatly humiliated that I have brothers and sisters in Christ who would treat them with less courtesy than Methodists or Presbyterians.

3. The California convention's action is non-fraternal and inconsiderate to say the least. I feel that its action has introduced a divisive element in our unity effort. It appears to me to be bald ecclesiasticism.

4. Why not refuse to seat the California delegates in our national convention at Atlanta! Seriously speaking, it is a matter for prayer on the part of all for a most tactful leadership of this direct concern. Let there be "watchful waiting" rather than precipitate action.

May I congratulate you upon the continued supply of "meat" in your editorials and other articles in the "Century."

Eureka, Ill.

MR. J. W. WEST.

The subject does not merit the attention of real men—to say nothing of actual Disciples of Christ—further than to say: Of course the Berkeley church has a right and duty to associate with itself any Christian.

The days of cant, mysticism and symbolism are beginning to pass away.

We are at least seeing men as trees walking and, by and by, pray God, we may see only our great pattern, "The Man Christ Jesus"—see Him not dimly through hereditary religious superstitious eyes, but as He is, a great, sinless example. Arithmetic is easy, if you study it. The life of Christ is "so plain that the way-faring man, etc." Oh, for the day when we shall get the meat from the nut and stop wounding our brothers with the burr.

Philadelphia, Pa.

REV. RICHARD W. GENTRY.

1. I hold that the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people, if it denies that they are Christian people. This seems to me to be the whole crux of the matter. If we admit that they are true followers of Jesus, how can we refuse them a Christian place within our midst? The only possible justification I see for such action would be to assert that they are not spiritually sound because they have not been immersed.

2. I do not. I consider it a, perhaps, immature attempt to put into practice the platform of the Disciples of Christ.

3. To me the action of the California convention has exactly the flavor we used to call "sectarian." The spirit of that convention was not the spirit of Thomas Campbell, and to me it violates the very essence of our plea.

4. I can suggest no better step than that being taken by the "Century" at the present time, the courage of speaking out one's convictions, publicity, and united protest from hundreds in our brotherhood. The California convention and the editor who deserted the good ship Zion, to help them launch their ecclesiastical ship of state, will be quick to feel the pressure of a public opinion like this.

Winfield, Kan.

REV. WALTER S. GOODE.

1. I feel that to ask the question is to answer it. It is certainly always right for a church to receive into its membership Christian people. The action of the Berkeley church then was right. Whether it was expedient the future will determine.

2. Such action is no departure from our essential principles. To refuse to receive Christians is to be sectarian. We plead for the full fellowship of all Christians everywhere.

2. I think the convention made a grave mistake in becoming a court of orthodoxy. The excommunication of Christians for doctrinal differences is a dangerous weapon to wield. Long ago the Disciples decided they would have none of it. Indeed this decision is the very genius of our plea.

4. The next California convention should pass a resolution repudiating the action of the last convention with regard to Berkeley, and inviting the Berkeley church to brotherly fellowship in all the counsels of the convention. This is the only remedy. Our brotherhood should urge the California brethren to this action.

Lakewood, Cleveland, Ohio.

REV. JOSEPH L. THOMPSON.

1. The Berkeley church is doing wrong. Its action is inconsistent with the practice of that body of Christ's followers of which it professes to be a member.

2. In its departure from the principles of the Disciples, it exceeded all New Testament authority in the undue exercise of its liberty.

3. I certainly concur in the action of the California convention. It did not violate the principles we have so long held dear. It emphasized the authority vested in the church of our Lord to correct the errors of those who forsake the faith.

4. The action of the convention in no way suggests ecclesiasticism. It would be much better for the church and the ministry if the convention would exercise its scriptural prerogative in such matters.

Kansas City, Mo.

REV. B. B. TYLER.

The present practice of the Berkeley church was the practice of the South Broadway Christian Church, during almost the entire period of my pastorate of 13 years. Persons coming from evangelical churches with letters of commendation were received as "associate" members. In the course of time they saw that they ought to be immersed. They were, of course, then immersed. They are among our most intelligent and useful members.

Denver, Colo.

JUDGE CHARLES P. KANE.

The program of the Berkeley church lacks consistency and candor. According to your statement it "holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience." Why? Because baptism can be administered by immersion only? If so, why recognize anything else as baptism? If not, why hold inviolate the practice of immersion to those who seek to enter the church by primary obedience? Is there any superior virtue in sprinkling when administered by one not a Disciple? If not, why say to an unbaptized postulate for membership, you can enter here only through a burial in water, but if you will cross the street and submit to a substitute ceremony, a certificate to that effect will admit you. This is achieving by indirection a membership which is directly denied. It may be suggested the Presbyterian accepts the substitute in all good conscience. This may help the Presbyterian but not the Berkeley church.

More ingenuous is the program of the "Unity Church," which allows the seeker to

THE QUESTIONS.

1. Do you hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people? If so, please state why.

2. If you disapprove of Berkeley's practice do you consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, or is it one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation?

3. What is your opinion as to the action of the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of the church and to excommunicate it from their missionary cooperation? Does the convention's action, in your opinion, constitute a violation of any fundamental principle held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity? Can you see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did?

4. If you disapprove of the action of the convention what do you suggest should be done by the brotherhood outside of California to induce the California brethren to remedy their error?

In answering the above questions it is not necessary to re-write the questions. They may be referred to by number. Replies may be as brief as is consistent with clearness.

decide for himself what is Christian baptism and administers it as he would have it, in any church he desires to enter. Even this in time may be held too narrow and dogmatic and all water ceremonials be discarded by the church, as has been done by some, and as bread and wine have been excluded by others from the Eucharist, the literal emblems being deemed too material for obtrusion into a spiritual communion between the worshipper and his Lord. Such may be the ultimate conclusion of the Christian Priesthood, but if it be within the genius of our movement it has remained in effectual concealment for a hundred years.

In a sense a local congregation is independent, and entirely within its rights if it convert itself into a church of Latter Day Saints. None may say nay, but by so doing the local body may seriously disturb the fraternal relations and the religious fellowships it formerly enjoyed, thereby engendering divisions and strife. This is perfectly natural, is it not? Witness the dreadful excommunication of the Berkeley church by the California convention.

Springfield, Ill.

REV. E. P. WISE.

1. I question whether it is wise at this time for us to disturb so seriously the equilibrium of church life by receiving the unimmersed. I think we need more education on the subject.

2. I think this belongs to the category of Christian liberty, although I could not justify teaching or practicing anything but immersion for baptism.

3. I do not think the California convention should have excluded this church from its deliberations. It would have been far better to have exhorted them to a wiser course if such were thought necessary. But to exclude them was wrong. This is opposed to the genius of the plea of the Disciples.

4. I think plain but kindly protest is the only thing that can be done. We must be careful not to violate the principle of Christian courtesy even in trying to show others their mistakes.

East Liverpool, O.

REV. JOHN RAY EWERS.

I hesitate to express an opinion concerning the so-called excommunication in California. I would want to know all of the facts and the temper displayed on both sides. Many of us had hoped that the Disciples were becoming increasingly broad-minded and this hope is certainly not without foundation, as the replies to your questionnaire indicate. As I understand the situation the Berkeley church has been loyal to our unwritten (?) creed. There has been no disloyalty to Christ and so long as he is unreservedly exalted the majority will be quite satisfied. We will not endure any compromising or juggling when it comes to the divinity, or if you please, the deity of Christ, but when we are assured of unreserved loyalty at that point we breathe easily. And so far as immerson is concerned I cannot find that anything else has been taught and practiced. We may not believe that associate membership amounts to much but certainly it is not a thing for big men to quarrel over. It may even be an unwise thing, from a purely practical point of view, to maintain associate membership, but excommunication seems rather drastic. I would want to know all the factors in the case before I would become frightfully "het-up" over the situation. I imagine that the Berkeley church is not much concerned. This is a gloriously free country and it does one good to realize that fact. The Berkeley church will go on and prosper. We call no man Lord and while co-operation is delightful—when it is delightful!!—the world is wide.

Pittsburgh.

MR. S. B. TRESCOTT.

1. Yes. Because they misrepresent a vast majority of the Disciple people. It is a short step from a lost faith in baptism to a weakened faith in faith and repentance, a giving up of an ordinance most surely believed in by our people.

2. Such liberty concedes to individual congregations would doubtless lead to many other irregularities that would weaken the confidence of the truly pious in what we belive to be the apostolic church.

3. I should have been better pleased if the convention had passed a resolution condemning the action of the Berkeley Church or regretting its departure from our custom. The actions of the convention reached out far toward ecclesiasticism.

4. Disavow their action and let them alone. I am quite confident these good Christian people of Berkeley would have so far yielded their preferences as to comply with our custom if our plea had been forcibly presented to them, and they were earnestly desirous of uniting with us.

Cleveland, O.

REV. PETER AINSLIE.

Regarding the reception of unimmersed persons into the membership of the Berkeley church, it is a matter that the Berkeley church must decide for itself. For myself, I think it would be inexpedient for the church of which I am minister to receive the unimmersed into its membership, because it would be a revolutionary step. It would inflame both sides—both those who advocate immersion only, and those who advocate the pedobaptist side. It would precipitate the baptismal controversy, which, as a general thing, has not been a very helpful discussion, for both sides have been led to say very hard things about each other and quarrels do not prepare the way for peace. Revolutions have been the immediate predecessors of division. If the Berkeley church does not ally itself with some other communion, it may enter into an association with churches that have similar practices and form a new communion. That is the history of denominationalism. Christian union does not come that way; neither can it be forced. It must come by evolution rather than revolution.

Regarding the action of the California convention, I am inclined to think that they exceeded their authority, although I am not acquainted with the articles of their charter. Excommunications, however, have been the history of the church through the centuries, but they do not make very good reading for these times, especially in the history of the Disciples.

Baltimore, Md.

REV. T. L. LOWE.

I am profoundly convinced that discussion of the subject will only result in dissension. Whatever may be true of the future, it is very evident that the great majority of our churches now look upon the actions of the Berkeley church as being a radical departure from the practice of the Disciples of Christ.

Columbus, O.

MR. W. HUME LOGAN.

1. It is my opinion that the Berkeley church with good intentions is making a serious mistake. They are inconsistent to say the least. Their refusal to receive one into membership by primary obedience without immersion, while receiving with open arms the same party without immersion if he came through the Methodist or Presbyterian church, subjects them to ridicule. He is not good enough to come in the front door, but they will take him in the back way. By what process of reasoning do they determine that the candidate is more fit for the Kingdom if water be sprinkled by a Methodist or Presbyterian divine than if applied by a Disciple? Their primary action shows they know what is right but are willing to deviate in order to increase their membership. My belief, my hope, and my prayer is that not only many Methodists and Presbyterians will be saved, but millions also of others (who have not had the opportunity to learn) without either faith repentance, or baptism, but this does not excuse us from any one of the three.

2. I consider it a grave departure.

3. I believe the convention acted right and proper. The convention did not consign the Berkeley church to hades, it merely stated to them that they could serve Christ better in the camp of our allies who believe in and teach sprinkling. The Disciples, for the sake of union, have removed every non-essential plank from their platform, and it is dangerous to whittle on the supports.

4. Remedy let the Berkeley church get into the Methodist Conference or Presbyterian Assembly where they can doubtless do splendid, conscientious, consistent, Christian service.

Louisville, Ky.

MR. CLARENCE B. KESSINGER.

Religious differences are on a par with those of a political nature the result of environment, early teaching, and too often of unreasoning prejudice. I would personally like to belong to such a church as the Berkeley church is trying to be, if the congregation was ready for it. I would rather wait than to precipitate a controversy. A sensible way to view the situation is in the light of the tendency of the times. What will twenty-five years from this date behold as to a union of God's forces. I trust in the great union that must surely and necessarily come with the years, we of all people who have justified our separate existence on the claim of the union of God's people may not, as is often the case, be so self-centered and controversial that we shall fail to be an effective force. I greatly fear this may be the case. I prefer not to pass judgment either upon the Berkeley church or the California state convention. One probably forced an issue prematurely. The other acted with an assumed authority that broad minded people in the light of the twentieth century will not approve or follow.

Vincennes, Indiana.

REV. E. L. POWELL.

1. From my personal standpoint regarding immersion as having its only significance in the authority of Christ I could not waver in my insistence upon it in the preaching of the gospel. On the other hand, I must positively believe that Christian character should be the only test of Christian fellowship. If the pious unimmersed, as we describe them, should wish to take membership with one of our congregations and such congregation should favor their reception on the ground of their Christian character it would unquestionably be within the right of the congregation thus to do. In so doing the congregation would express what it considers to be true loyalty to Christ as understood and construed by themselves. As a matter of congregational independence there would be only the claiming of this universally recognized fact of congregational independence among us. I cannot bring myself to see, therefore, that the Berkeley church has done wrong or has in any wise violated the spirit and genius of the Disciples of Christ. I must say, however, that I am persuaded that the Berkeley church in so doing has put itself out of sympathy with the Brotherhood, for it is the introduction of a precedent certainly not recognized among us, and inviting criticism in regard to an issue which, as I see it, need not have been raised.

2. This answers both the first and second questions. I do not regard the Berkeley church as having made a fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, although there has been a departure from the universal practice of the Disciples in the matter of church fellowship as distinguished from Christian fellowship. With congregational independence accepted I cannot see that there has been any departure from "those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty, conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation." I think the Berkeley congregation has made a mistake and has brought forward an issue which is not of sufficient prominence as yet to justify itself as commanding an outstanding issue.

3. In regard to the third question, as to

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

BETTER THAN GOOD JOURNALISM.

FROM the purely journalistic standpoint this issue of The Christian Century is anything but satisfactory to its editors. The extraordinary proportion of space devoted to one feature—the questionnaire—makes it an object of deserved criticism from any fellow-craftsman. But we have devoted so much space to that one purpose in the belief that our readers will be glad to have spread out before them in a single issue so wide a range of representative opinion.

Even so, scores of replies to our questionnaire will not see the light. They are coming in in increasing volume as press day approaches, and no doubt will continue for some time. We could fill the entire paper with these communications. Those that have not been published are as representative as those that have been published.

But all good and interesting things must come to an end. It seems best to bring the questionnaire to an end now.

Next week the editor will make an analysis and interpretation of the responses received.

IMMERSION AND CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY circulates among denominational bodies as well as among Disciples of Christ. One of its chief purposes as a religious newspaper is to represent the ideals and plea of the Disciples to the Christian world. The Christian world has very inadequate and, too often, false conceptions of the thing we Disciples of Christ are striving to do.

On this account the editor took the liberty of interpolating a comment of his own in the text of two of the replies appearing in previous installments of the current questionnaire. These editorial comments referred, in each case, to statements representing the Disciples as holding that immersion is a condition or prerequisite of Church membership.

Such statements of the Disciples' position we cannot allow to come uncorrected under the eyes of our Christian brethren to whom our plea for unity is addressed. The Disciples do not so hold. They believe that Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists and the rest are members of the Church of Christ, even though they have not been immersed, just as truly members as are Disciples and Baptists who have been immersed.

Whatever importance Disciples attach to immersion, they do not regard it as a condition or prerequisite of membership in the Church of Christ.

On this point, The Christian Century cannot allow its pages to be used to convey, uncorrected, any utterance to the contrary.

DR. TYLER'S TESTIMONY.

THAT awful bugaboo described by a speaker on the floor of the Northern California Convention last summer as follows:—

> Suppose a congregation should adopt the open-membership plan, then suppose the immersed members should decrease in numbers through death and removal while the unimmersed increased until they were in the majority; and then suppose the congregation should adopt sprinkling as the form of baptism!—

is laid low by the brief testimony of Dr. B. B. Tyler, in this issue of The Christian Century. Dr. Tyler is the venerable pastor-emeritus of South Broadway church, Denver, Colo. He says that South Broadway has been doing for thirteen years what Berkeley church was excommunicated from the California convention for doing. And he testifies that all the unimmersed Christians received into the church up to now who have not moved away have asked to be immersed.

That result is inevitable in any church that practices immersion only.

There will be varying degrees of value set upon the fact testified to by Dr. Tyler. Some will regard it as of great importance that the unimmersed should come to see "the way of the Lord more perfectly" and submit to immersion. To others it will seem of no great consequence. But whether important or not it is inevitable that the constant non-sectarian administration of baptism by the beautiful symbol of immersion, in receiving converts by profession of faith, will make its impression upon followers of Christ who have not been immersed, and they will wish to be immersed also.

The practice of immersion is the most effective argument for immersion.

Mr. Loken reports that he is continually being called upon to rebaptize those who have become dissatisfied with their earlier mode of baptism. Dr. Ames, Mr. Van Arsdall, Mr. Jordan and others report the same thing. The Vacaville church, in Northern California, was not excommunicated with Berkeley because, at the time, it had no unimmersed members in its congregation, all such received into its membership having been in the meantime immersed!

The fear of the practice of Christian union leading to the practice of affusion is an unreal bugaboo. It betokens a lack of belief in the beauty and intrinsic appropriateness of immersion.

Those who actually believe all they say in praise of immersion will not be afraid to let it speak for itself without the aid of sectarian or dogmatic support.

THE VOICE FROM THE PIT.

DIVES in torment was not permitted to go with a message to his five brothers; but the convicts in the Eastern Penitentiary of Pennsylvania have uttered their voice which is addressed, not to their brethren, but to their lawmakers. It is a plea for state wide prohibition. The convict editor of the prison paper, "The Umpire," himself a victim of drink, started the movement on July 4th, and on that day and the Sunday following, this petition was circulated:

> "To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met:
> "Your petitioners, representing the major portion of the inmates of the Eastern State Penitentiary of Pennsylvania respectfully aver:
> "That they believe fully 70 per cent of crime within the State is indirectly attributable to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and
> "That many of them have a personal knowledge of its debasing influence as exemplified in their own lives; and
> "That, believing if the sale of intoxicating liquors was prohibited by the enactment of laws by your honorable body, the effect would be to reduce crime at least 50 per cent, if not more, they therefore

> "Respectfully pray that you will favorably consider the introduction of any measure, having for its object the curtailment of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and use the great power with which you are clothed to secure the passage of an act to prohibit the sale of such intoxicating liquor anywhere within the bounds of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.
> "We further pray that you will give due consideration to this petition, coming to you as a voluntary deed of a body of earnest men and women, acting entirely on its own initiative, without suggestion from others."

The petition met with some strong opposition, The Philadelphia North American says:

> "A number of those who thus evidenced their stand on this vital question did so in the face of threats and intimidation which would have kept them from exercising their free will under ordinary circumstances. For while the circulators of the petition observed their instructions to use no persuasion and avoid all controversy, certain inmates of one of the prison blocks organized a militant opposition movement.
> "These liquor advocates preceded the clerks and did all they could to keep the men in the block from signing. They resorted to threats and warnings; but in spite of these tactics—the force of which can hardly be appreciated by persons not familiar with certain phases of prison life—only 20 per cent of those they sought to hold in line for rum were won over.
> "This feature adds weight to the result, which greatly exceeded the expectations of the prison officials and those outsiders who had heard of the project. One prison officer had predicted it would be impossible to get 500 names to such a petition."

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

Notwithstanding the hostility aroused by the petition, and the attempts to prevent prisoners signing it, a total of 1,008 out of the 1,478 prisoners signed the document.

The prison paper printed some personal letters from prisoners, including such as this:

"For fifteen years I worked as a tradesman and maintained a family. I met bad company and began to drink. One night while intoxicated I went home. My good wife remonstrated with me, and in a moment of anger I killed her. I am here for life. My children will to their dying day bear the stigma of my wrong-doing. In the name of God, do what you can toward checking the evil! Good luck to you, comrade. I may never live to leave these prison walls, and in fact, do not deserve it; but, believe me while I am alive I will do my share toward putting an end to the curse."

We regard this petition as one of the most significant human documents ever issued. It is a voice out of the horrible pit. May the makers of our laws listen and heed!

THE NAME, PLEASE?

SEVERAL times in the answers appearing in our questionnaire, statements like this have occurred, in different wording but with substantially the same meaning:

> The practice of Berkeley church is, of course, not wrong in the sense of violating the will of Christ; indeed it is clear that it is his will that all his people should have fellowship together; but it seems to be an unwise departure from the universal practice of the communion of which the church professes to be a member.

Of what communion does the Berkeley church or any church of Disciples profess to be a member except the Church of Christ?

HAWTHORNE NOT AN IMMORTAL.

BOSTON has been choosing 100 immortals. Perhaps half of them did something which the world outside of Boston knows about. In the list as finally made up, the name of Nathaniel Hawthorne does not appear. The reason given is that he lived in Salem, not Boston. But Salem does not love him, and neither does Concord, where also he lived, and it may be doubted whether the reason assigned is the real reason, or if real, whether it is a good one. Boston was one of his many homes—he had at least seven. The seven cities that now pass his name across to other cities will one day strive for the honor of claiming him, as

> "Seven cities strove for Homer dead
> Through which the living Homer begged his bread."

Hawthorne can wait. Boston will yet revise its list of immortals, and one of several very respectable gentlemen will be dropped in order to make a place for him.

WHAT IS A LIBERAL?

IN a series of lectures in Mt. Morris Baptist Church, New York, Rev. John Haynes Holmes, a Unitarian, attempts to define the differences between the orthodox and liberal churches. He says:

"As a matter of historic fact, of course, there is a dividing line, on the one side of which we find the so-called liberal churches, and on the other side the conservative, or evangelical, or orthodox churches; and again, of course, the line of division is very largely theological. Here are these great historic churches, which unite on certain great essentials of religion. They believe in the unique inspiration of the Bible, in the unique leadership of Jesus, in a certain conception of the character of deity, in a certain interpretation of the organization of the Church and the character of the Christian life.

"Upon the other side of this theological line are the so-called liberal churches, which are distinctive in the fact that they do not accept these traditional doctrines. They do not accept Jesus as their distinctive leader, or the Bible as the distinctively inspired Book of God, or the Church in any sense as a distinctively religious organization apart from other great organizations of society. It is because of such differences of opinion as these that we have come to speak of the orthodox churches on the one hand, and the liberal churches upon the other."

This is a more nearly accurate definition than is sometimes given, and we have no serious fault to find with it. Mr. Haynes goes on:

"But I feel, as I have just indicated, that this distinction is purely artificial, and to that extent it is not accurate or proper at all.

"Why, as I work here in this city, I find men, ministers and laymen alike, in all denominations and churches, whom I would describe as liberals, men and women I regard as my brothers in spirit and purpose and ideals, if not in the exact details of thought. When, on the other hand, I turn to many of the ministers and laymen in my own Unitarian Church, I find some of the most hard-shelled, fossilized, hopelessly orthodox conservatives that can be found in all the world of religious life. In fact, on certain great matters of religion, I want to say to you in all frankness tonight that I find myself infinitely nearer certain of the ministers and laymen in the Episcopal and Baptist and Methodist churches than I do with certain of the ministers and laymen of my own church. New issues are coming to the front in this age and generation. The old divisions between the churches and denominations along theological lines are sinking into utter insignificance.

"The liberal in religion is the man whose standpoint is that of life as contrasted with that of organization. Fundamentally, this means that the liberal apprehends this fact to be true—that nothing is sacred in all the world, excepting the human soul. The Bible is not sacred, excepting as it is the revelation of some of the greatest souls that the world has ever seen. Jesus is not a sacred personality, excepting as his soul stands supreme among all the religious prophets of the past. The Church is not a sacred institution, excepting as it is the organization and reflection of the consecrated souls of men and women. No practice of religion is sacred, either of worship or of prayer or of song, excepting as it is the free pouring forth of the soul of man. The liberal, in other words, believes not in any organization, not in any distinctive book, or prophet, or form, or ceremony, or creed, or doctrine, nothing that is fashioned by the soul or expressive of the soul; but he believes fundamentally in the soul itself. In other words, in its larger expression, he lives not in organization, but in the life of which organization is the more or less imperfect expression."

Without criticizing this statement in detail, we express our hearty agreement with one thought in it, namely, that the negation of orthodoxy does not guarantee that a man should be in any true sense liberal. To be liberal is to be free, open minded, loyal to truth. A man may be thoroughly orthodox and at the same time in the true sense liberal. Even conservatism is not opposed to true liberalism. To conserve is to save; and it is he who has conserved something who has something to be liberal with. We do not agree with Mr. Holmes that "nothing is sacred in the world except the human soul." but we do agree with him in the discovery that many devoutly orthodox men are nobly open minded, and that narrowness, bigotry and dogmatism are entirely possible to a man who prides himself on being "liberal."

SAY not, "It matters not what men may think.
But 'tis the deed avails." As flower to seed
Is deed to thought; and as the seed foretells

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON ARSENAL.

WHETHER you are an active Sunday-school worker or not you cannot help sensing the enhanced value of The Christian Century in the recent addition of Rev. John R. Ewers to its staff. His article on the uniform Sunday-school lesson will prove to be a little bit the most suggestive and helpful piece of writing on that weekly theme that can be found anywhere.

Mr. Ewers approaches the lesson from the standpoint of a practical pastor and experienced teacher. He does not tangle up his article by the treatment of problems of mere academic interest. He vitalizes each lesson. And he writes with fine spiritual insight and with what the professionals call "punch."

We predict that with the careful exegetical background furnished by Rev. C. C. Buckner, and with Mr. Ewers interpretative treatment our Sunday-school page will become a sort of arsenal whereto teacher and students will find themselves habitually repairing for ammunition of the most effective sort.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Deean Sumner May Leave Chicago.

Dean Walter T. Sumner, churchman, social service leader, educator, of Chicago, has been called to serve as Episcopalian Bishop of Oregon, to succeed the late Rev. Charles Scadding. The Chicago leader has not yet accepted the call. Rev. Mr. Sumner has been dean at the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul and superintendent of the city missions of the Episcopal church since 1906. Before that time he was rector of St. George's Church, and earlier was secretary to the bishop of Chicago. For several years Dean Sumner has been a national figure in social service work. He was chairman of the Chicago vice commission, and is now a member of the board of education, an officer of the United Charities, and active in the work of several other charitable and social service organizations. He was born at Manchester, N. H., in 1874, and was graduated at Dartmouth and the Western Theological Seminary.

Gives Million to Methodist School.

The gift of a million dollars to the new Methodist University at Atlanta, reported in a recent issue of The Christian Century, has directed attention to the career of the donor, Mr. Asa G. Candler. A daily secular paper which evidently knows Mr. Candler writes thus of him: "The liberality that now finds its climax is characteristic of the man. He has always done his share, and more. 'Doing his share' has from his youth up been a passion with this wonderful man. As a young $40-a-month drug clerk he was proportionately liberal in aiding any worthy cause as he has ever been since. It is axiomatic among those who know him that at every upward turn of his life he has followed the policy of giving every penny he was able to spare toward human betterment. Many of his acts of charity, many of the enterprises he has aided, will never be known save to himself and a few friends."

Methodists to Aid "Christmas Ship."

One of the silver linings to the black cloud of war that is now darkening much of the earth is the spirit of sympathy and service that is manifesting itself in many ways. One of the most spectacular of these Christianly movements is the Christmas Ship enterprise, which has been inaugurated by the Chicago Herald and adopted by fifty or more other papers over the land. The plan is to load up a ship with clothes and other articles that may be needed by the children of the war-oppressed lands of Europe, and to send this gift over at the Christmas season. Many organizations have joined the Herald in this unique enterprise. The latest and largest ally to report is the Sunday-school Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which pledges the help of its thirty thousand schools, with four million members. As outlined a few days ago by Rev. Edgar Blake, corresponding secretary of the board, the plan of action comprehends four mediums of instruments through which the work will be carried on. These are: 1. The church press. 2. The church pulpits. Thirty thousand pastors will preach the Christmas ship gospel from 30,000 pulpits. 3. Circulation—appeals and instructions will be printed in leaflet form and distributed broadcast throughout the nation. 4. Institutes and conferences. A stated portion of all such meetings will be devoted to the advancement of the Christmas ship work.

Mr. Blake commenting on the adoption of the ship plan, says: "We are no longer content merely to tell the children the story of the good Samaritan. We now aim to teach them how to practice it. No one can understand the truth of this parable until he has played the part. We are constantly seeking ways therefore by which we may stimulate and train the children and young people in good deeds. We shall use the Christmas ship for a great educational as well as benevolent appeal to our young people. If the 20,000,000 of American children from five to fifteen years of age could be enthusiastically enlisted in the Herald's Christmas ship enterprise there would be unloosed a benevolent force in America the educational value of which would be incalculable. "The board which I represent will cooperate with the Herald in every way possible. We shall do our best through our church press, from our pulpits and platforms, in our institutes and conferences, and by personal circularization of pastors and Sunday-school workers to obtain an enthusiastic response from the 30,000 Sunday-schools and the 4,000,000 Sunday-school scholars in our church."

Dean Walter T. Sumner, of Chicago, who Has Been Called to Serve His Church As Bishop of Oregon.

War Cripples Salvation Army.

War is necessitating the interruption of the work of the Salvation Army, especially in European countries. According to General Bramwell Booth, the Salvation Army in Europe will be bankrupt and its equipment ruined if war continues six months. All stations in France and Germany have been turned over to the use of the soldiers; the army shelter houses in England have been tendered to the British government for war uses.

Church Growth in North and South.

From 1890 to 1913 Southern Baptists in the United States increased from 1,280,066 to 2,471,389, a gain of 93 per cent; Northern Baptists increased from 800,450 to 1,176,615, or 47 per cent; Southern Presbyterians increased from 179,721 to 300,771, or 67 per cent; Northern Presbyterians, from 788,224 to 1,402,533, or 78 per cent; Southern Methodists, from 1,209,976 to 1,996,877, or 65 per cent; Methodist Episcopal from 2,240,354 to 3,415,768, or 52 per cent.

Methodists Erect Unique Building.

Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Los Angeles, Cal., has just completed what is said to be one of the largest buildings of its kind in America. It has nine stories and a roofgarden. The auditorium seats 2,300. The second and third stories are given over for social halls, ladies' parlors, library, and other similar uses. The other six stories are to be used as a first-class men's hotel, with 325 rooms. This building, which combines facilities for worship, evangelistic and social service in an unusual way, was dedicated Sunday, September 20. Dr. Matt. S. Hughes is pastor of Trinity Church.

Bible Chairs for U. P. Colleges.

The children and young people of the United Presbyterian Church are soon to have placed before them the plan of the Board of Education providing for a Chair of Bible in each of the Church colleges. The last General Assembly directed that the Sunday school contributions "not included in the congregational pledge or otherwise designated, shall be divided among the four mission boards and the Board of Education." The Assembly also granted the request of the Board of Education for "an approach to the youth of the Church through the Sunday-schools and Young People's societies not less than one month out of twelve." The secretaries of the boards have arranged that the educational interests of the Church shall be presented before the above named organizations from September 20 to October 11, inclusive.

Dr. Gladden Defends Peace Palace.

Dr. Washington Gladden, Congregational preacher, said to his people in a recent sermon: "Do not sneer at the Peace Palace at the Hague; we shall have abundant use for it erelong as the meeting place of humbled and contrite nations, where they may gather to reduce the armaments and prepare the ways of peace."

Catholics Become Episcopalians.

The very unusual transition is reported of enough Italians to form a congregation leaving Roman Catholicism and going into the Protestant Episcopal church. On June 28 at Hartford, Conn., a congregation of 108 Italians, all of whom had been baptized and confirmed in the Roman Catholic church, of whom eighty-seven were men and twenty-one women, were constituted a Protestant Episcopal church. The converts had not been dissatisfied with Catholic doctrine so much as with the political aspects of Roman Catholic church life.

George Whitefield to be Honored.

The Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America asks that all churches observe Sunday, December 13, the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Whitefield. It is hoped to make this a stimulating occasion for considering the importance of evangelistic effort.

An Open Questionnaire

the action of the California convention, I can answer without the shadow of a doubt, that the convention has done that which is in open violation of a fundamental principle of the Disciples of Christ. The convention has no authority which it has not received, and certainly it has received no ecclesiastical authority from the churches. No sort of resolution, no kind of action having to do with Christian fellowship can be tolerated on the part of any convention, or board, or society, or committee, save as such action meets the absolute surrender of that which is fundamental in the teaching of the Disciples in their traditions and in their universal practice. No convention, whether it be a delegate convention or a mass meeting, has any authority whatever in matters of doctrine or conscience over the churches or any individual in the church. If the action of the California convention should be approved generally by our churches or our leaders, it would mean the acceptance of ecclesiastical authority, a thing which all of our churches together could not confer upon any organization and which if they could confer would mean to write "Ichabod" on the face of the religious movement which has for a hundred years most clearly and definitely fought against ecclesiastical authority and vigorously contended for the Protestantism which has as its very life blood Christian liberty within the limitations imposed by the authority of Christ—that authority self-imposed by the individual soul or by the local congregation.

4. In regard to your last question I can only say that we should use every influence to persuade the California convention on some other convention occasion to rescind its action and to disclaim any intention on its part of excommunicating the Berkeley church from missionary co-operation.

In this whole issue there can only be brought to bear the spirit of love and persuasion, while at the same time there must be no uncertain sound in regard to this whole question of authority.

The fundamental error of Roman Catholicism consists in substituting ecclesiastical authority for the supreme, exclusive and only spiritual authority, which is to be found and is embodied in the Christ of God. Let us beware lest we lose our heritage of Protestant liberty and the candle-stick be removed.

Louisville, Ky.

REV. AUSTIN HUNTER.

1. I think the Berkeley church did wrong in receiving the unimmersed. It is not a question as to whether these people were Christians or not. Our people represent a movement to reproduce the basic elements of the Christianity of the New Testament and in doing so we have understood from the beginning that immersion was one of these elements. This position has been held with practical unanimity among us. I think this fundamental characteristic of our movement is right, and therefore, that the Berkeley church is wrong. It is wrong furthermore, because entirely inexpedient, creating trouble and division. It confuses the issue to say that when we decline to receive the immersed, we dechristianize them.

2. The above answers the second question.

3. It is difficult at this long range to pass upon the wisdom of the convention's action. There were probably aggravating causes. Some years ago, when the Cedar Ave Church, of Cleveland, received the unimmersed and was criticized, Rev. Harris Cooley, the minister, declared that their standing would be approved by the missionary societies in receiving their offerings. Mr. Rains, representing the foreign society, returned their fifty dollar check, stating that they could not accept it since it would amount to an indorsement of the church. If it was understood by the Berkeley church that by the seating of those delegates, it amounted to an indorsement of the church in its departure from our principles, then I can not see how the convention could well do otherwise. I have understood that it was the policy of this church to try to draw other churches into the same practice and so promote a divisive movement among our churches on the coast. It is certainly far fetched to interpret the action as ecclesiasticism.

4. The best way to remedy the difficulty is to quit agitating the matter and keep sweet. Our cause on the coast has perhaps suffered more by the action of the Berkeley church, than the Berkeley church has suffered by the action of the convention.

Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago.

MR. A. E. JENNINGS.

1. No. It is a question of time when all of our churches will practice the same thing.

2. It is a question very decidedly within the field of Christian liberty.

3. (a) I do not believe the California convention had any right to take the action they did. (b) The action of the convention violates the fundamental principles of our movement. (c) In my opinion, it is ecclesiasticism going to seed.

4. I have no suggestions as to a remedy for the difficulty. A little light on the question, a little free discussion, and the convention will be ashamed of its action and will in due time remedy it.

I think I have covered the ground.

Ann Arbor, Mich.

MR. F. COOP.

[The following is an excerpt from a gracious personal letter to the editor from Mr. Coop, in which he calls attention to an aspect of the discussion well worthy of prayerful consideration.]

Our hearts are torn asunder over this calamitous war, but more especially over the infidelity of all the nations involved. I pray America may be saved from international intanglement and the Church of Christ from a conflict which might be as disastrous for her religious life as this horrible war threatens to be for our national well being. I fear there is an unconscious sectarian spirit, both in our churches and others, which invests and applies church covenants, intended only to meet the requirements of state and the theological ideas of those who frame them, with a potency which belongs exclusively to the great Head of the church, forgetting that the real Church of Christ is a spiritual body with limits definable only by God and beyond finite jurisdiction.

Southport, Eng.

MR. BRYANT W. GRIFFIN.

Possibly, the views of one who is not a Disciple might be of interest. I am a Baptist by birth, but a "Disciple-in-law" and in spirit; I believe in church consolidation and I admire the modern methods of the denomination.

I belong to the church here, which is a real union church. The strongest elements are Baptists and Disciples; and Methodists, etc., are admitted by letter from other churches without imposing immersion, not, however, without objection from the older generation of Disciples.

While the Disciples have broadened, they need to broaden still more before they furnish a platform broad enough for all Christians. While I believe in immersion, I do not think that it is the water that saves but rather the spirit of obedience and acceptance. Those Presbyterians and Methodists who were accepted at Berkeley had accepted Christ and followed Christ in baptism, as they saw it. For us to say they were not baptized because theirs was not the scriptural method as we see it is to hold up the bar of a creed. Immersion is the last fond relic of a creed to which the Disciples still hold. As long as immersion is the distinctive feature of the creed the denomination should call itself Baptist and not claim to be the Church of Christ.

Supposing Christ were immersed by John's baptism? He drank wine and ate unleavened bread at the last supper, and took things generally as he found them. He was the last to stand out for mint and cummin. He brought what selfish man could never have evolved for himself: the divine element of kindness, a consideration for others: and why append baptism, necessarily by immersion? To make immersion the sine qua non is against the spirit of the religion.

I think I should join it, if there were a Berkeley church in Boston.

Keuka Park, N. Y.

REV. W. D. WARD.

1. No. I do not hold that the Berkeley church did wrong in receiving unimmersed Christians, but I do believe profoundly that their action was inexpedient, and that one certain result of it must be to hinder the realization of the union which we, as a people, desire to promote.

2. To be more specific, I disapprove of the practice of the Berkeley church because it is a radical departure from the program of the Disciples of Christ, that has been followed for about a century, which has had for its object the restoring of the name and ordinances and ideals and spirit of the New Testament church as a basis upon which to persuade all Christians to unite, to the supreme end that the whole world might be speedily won to Christ. If we are to adhere to the program, we can not recognize affusion as Scriptural baptism, nor those as co-workers in the movement in which we are engaged who have not been baptized according to Scriptural teaching and practice.

3. On the other hand, I emphatically disapprove of the action of the California convention. The situation created by the action of the Berkeley brethren calls for earnest prayer and for earnest seeking after light, but not for excommunication. The ties of brotherhood are far too sacred to be broken by any section of our communion. It is not essential that we shall all see alike on such matters, but it is vital that the spirit of Christ shall dominate all of our deliberations.

4. I know of nothing that we can do except to bring to bear the pressure of sentiment as felt by the great mass of our people, with the hope that the brethren in California will see their mistake and change their attitude.

Newark, Ohio.

MRS. CELESTE B. GIVENS.

When we as individual Christians have caught the real spirit of the "Prince of Peace" there can be and will be no such incidents as that of the Berkeley church. I do not know the personnel of this church except to know that Brother and Sister H. H. Guy are among its members. And knowing so well the deep consecration, lofty spiritual ideals, and splendid scholarship of these two, besides the things accomplished by them on the foreign field as our representatives, for them to be "cut off" from any one or any thing Christian is unthinkable. "By their fruits ye shall know them" was surely given us as the keynote of the Christian life. When much of dogma and custom has been torn away, and the true value is placed upon life and living, then can the people foremost in this kind of strength be fitly prepared to lead the world toward Christian unity. Until we, as a people, can do this in deed and in truth, we can make no claim before the world to such leadership.

Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.

REV. GEORGE A. MILLER.

1. I hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong by receiving unimmersed people into its church membership and still claiming to be one of the churches of our brotherhood. It should apply for fellowship with that body known as the "Christian Connection." It would be in entire accord with the genesis and practice of that communion which began with the movement inaugurated by Barton W. Stone of Kentucky, which afterwards came, with Mr. Stone, into entire accord and harmony with us in that state but in Ohio remained true to the principles of their beginning and now advocated by the Berkeley church. These principles however have led them into various paths and have caused them to become rather "a disappearing brotherhood."

2. It is certainly a grave and fundamental departure from the principles of the disciples. A local congregation has the right to become Roman Catholic, or any thing else it may desire, but should enter into work and fellowship with that body if it becomes such.

3. If a delegated body has the right to receive persons into its membership under certain conditions it most certainly has the right not to receive those who do not comply with these conditions. Whether it is always wise in doing so is another question but the right must certainly be conceded. I do not think the word "excommunicate" expresses the action of that body. By origin and fundamental meaning that word is misused in your question. There is a vast difference between the common and accepted meaning of the word "ecclesiasticism" and what this convention did. It seems as though by the using of these terms, which are very unpopular with our people, out of their common accepted meanings you are trying to scare people and confuse the issue. The California convention is not an ecclesiastical body and could not excommunicate any one. The action of refusing the delegates to be admitted to sit with them to plan certain forms of work was not an ecclesiasticism.

Washington, D. C.

MR. W. F. HOLT.

I hesitate to even express views on questions of as serious a nature as these, feeling that there are a great many who know so much more about these matters and whose opinion would be worth so much more than mine, that I hardly feel competent to make statements on matters of so grave a nature. However, I will gladly give you my feelings and views.

1. I believe the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these people. First, because under the conditions at Berkeley and for that matter in nearly all other places there is no good reason why they should do so. I would not for a moment think of going into the question as to what was right or wrong in the mode of baptism and I am free to confess that there might be places in the world where I might feel it was all right for our people to follow a procedure of this nature, but at Berkeley or any other place where there are plenty of churches that people who have not been immersed can go to, there is no good reason for one of our churches starting a procedure which in the minds of at least the most of us there is a question as to whether or not it is all right, and also where it is sure as it has done in this case, to alienate a lot of our own people as well as raising serious discords among our people even outside of the particular church directly affected, so that outside of the question of what mode of baptism is right, even if I believed that it made no difference about the mode, I do not believe that any of our churches should do as the Berkeley church is doing as I feel certain that the harm they will do is vastly more than any possible good that can come from it.

2. I believe very decidedly that it is a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the disciples.

3. I do not feel that I would care to venture an opinion on this matter as I feel that I am possibly not as well informed on this particular part of the situation as I would like to be to even express an opinion. I will say, however, that I have some feeling of doubt as to the wisdom of the action of the convention in doing what they did. I have a feeling that some less drastic action and possibly the exercising of some patience and brotherly love might have been better.

4. The brotherhood everywhere I believe should try to induce the Berkeley church to give up the practice referred to and return to the present principles that have always been held by our people in this matter.

Redlands, Calif.

REV. CHARLES S. EARLY.

1. No, in the general sense of wrong. If you mean is the policy of the Berkeley church advisable, in answering this, I would want to write a chapter.

2. Inasmuch as the formation of the local congregations or churches as practiced by the Disciples, and so far as I know, practically all other Christian communions, is an extra-scriptural matter without Bible precept or precedent; if it be legitimate at all such matters as the one in point should be left entirely with the local people. No outside people have any more right to interfere with their policy in a matter like this, than in the organization of their Christian Endeavor Society.

3. I consider the action of the California Convention (1) illogical, (2) un-scriptural, (3) un-Christian, (4) unbrotherly, (5) undemocratic, (6) unfaithful to the traditional principles of the Disciples, and (7) wholly outside the province of a missionary organization, being a gross assumption of ecclesiastical authority, against which every loyal Disciple must revolt with all his soul.

4. If we wish to resolve the General Convention into an ecclesiastical body, let it excommunicate the California convention, for the heresy of excommunicating the Berkeley church.

If we wish to continue our fidelity to Christian principles and practice, let our General Convention wholly ignore the action of the California convention, and give the Berkeley delegates their rightful place in the "general assembly" of the saints at Atlanta.

Oskaloosa, Ia.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH A. SERENA.

Your questionnaire finds me trying to do what apparently others have done who have tried to answer it, write much and say nothing. If I may be permitted a personal introspection and analyze my mental attitude toward this question there would be discovered the theological and religious self. Theologically I condemn the Berkeley church for meddling with form and doctrine, religiously I would go as far as it went and farther, in calling men my brothers. None of us in our better moments, denies the marks of a Christian in the lives of the pious unimmersed. In every fold, Catholic and Protestant, there are those whose lives of sacrifice and devotion put me to shame, and I count myself honored in the fellowship which binds our hearts and lives in Christion love.

When it comes to any organizations setting up standards of orthodoxy, whether they be our national, state or educational secieties, it is time to call a halt. Our liberty has been bought too dearly to permit it thus to be threatened. We must safeguard the privilege of the least congregation to deal with matters pertaining to their welfare in Christ as He may lead them into the light. The action of the late convention in California threatens this liberty. I hope these brethren may be brave enough to right the wrong done the Berkeley church.

Keuka College, New York.

MR. ERNEST O. KOOSER.

In my opinion the Berkeley church did the only thing it could do to apply the principles that we profess. We should do our part to overcome the ecclesiastical exclusiveness and sectarianism that has blighted Christianity almost from the beginning; and we should remove from our particular division of the general Church the erroneous impression which prevails in many quarters that we are one of the most narrow of the sects in maintaining, before all things, by unwritten but inviolate creed, one chief tenet—salvation by mechanical operation. The whole spirit of what we call the restoration—its origins, teachings, history, and communion—denies any such impression. It is not our attitude. In fact we do fellowship with all Christian people, and always will. And we may as well frankly acknowledge we are not ordained with special authority to enforce terms of admission to the church of Christ.

Every argument that was ever made in the pulpit of a Christian church against the promulgation of any creed by any convention, synod, or conclave, is perfectly valid against the action of the California convention that undertook to read the Berkeley congregation, or any of its members, out of the church. Assuming superior insight and divine authority, as is always done, these convention brethren have prescribed the limits of the kingdom, and proceeded to exclude the mistaken faithful. This is not for them to do. Don't worry. The pope's bull did not change the laws of the universe, nor can this convention start the world revolving backwards.

Somerset, Pa.

REV. L. J. MARSHALL.

I believe the practice of the Berkeley congregation in fellowshiping all other Christians, is in acord with the teachings of the New Testament, and in harmony with and essential to the genius of the Disciples' movement. I also believe that the action of the convention was ecclesiastical and contrary to the letter and spirit of the New Testament, and therefore opposed to the fundamental principle of the restoration movement. Unless we stand fast in the freedom for which Christ set us free, and recognize the right of all others to do the same, we shall hinder Christian union, and crystallize into a sect contending for a uniformity of opinion which will never prevail.

Kansas City.

REV. F. L. MOFFETT.

1. No wrong was done in receiving these people as they did. There was no disloyalty and could be no confusion as to the teachings of the church or the status of said members.

2. The practice of the local congregation on a matter of that kind should be determined by said local congregation in such a way as shall best serve the Kingdom of God.

3. If I thought the Berkeley church was doing wrong, I would still think that the convention did wrong in refusing missionary fellowship with them. If we cannot have missionary fellowship with our own, how can we plead for fellowship, or Christian unity with others? The action of the convention revealed the ecclesiastical spirit quite fully. Such revelations have value.

4. The brotherhood should assure the Berkeley church of its belief in Christian liberty, and that its prayer for the unity of God's people is sincere, and that they desire the fullest fellowship possible in all missionary enterprises.

Springfield, Mo.

REV. ROY B. BOWERS.

I want to enter my protest against this unprecedented, un-Christian outrage of the California brethren in ex-communicating the Berkeley church. I bow my head in shame.

Instead of being "a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples," the action of the Berkeley church is an expression of loyalty to the principles which gave rise to the Disciple movement. If the Disciples refuse this liberty to the local congregation, then we take our place with the rest of the denominations in insisting upon conformity to established dogmas.

Who has made the California convention a judge as to the orthodoxy of the Berkeley church or of any other church? If the California convention has set itself to pass upon the right of a church to be called Christian, then Rome should be informed of this fact, and be saved the trouble of electing another "vice-regent of God."

Ocala, Fla.

DR. THOMAS J. SUGG.

1. No Berkeley church has practiced what I believe many of our churches are ready to do when they have a leader in sympathy with the plea for Christian unity.

2. It seems to me the local church has the liberty to do as Berkeley church did and it could be the practice of the whole brotherhood without departing from essential principles.

3. The action of the California convention need not surprise any one familiar with church delegations. Evidently that convention was controlled by a bigoted church press and ministers of the "old school."

4. Disciples schools in connection with the university, church papers such as The Christian Century, the tendency to limit the number of churches in small towns, the laymen's movement, foreign missionary work and common sense will remedy such conditions as obtained in the Santa Cruz convention.

Carrollton, Mo.

REV. W. F. MEYER.

1. It is my candid opinion that the present position of the Berkeley church is more logical and Christian than it was before it received unimmersed Christians into full fellowship. How can we consistently call the unimmersed Christians, and co-operate with them in Christian enterprises, and then refuse to fellowship with them in church membership.

2. If the Berkeley church did wrong in adopting this program or method of receiving unimmersed Christians into fellowship; if there is a higher tribunal than the local congregation in our brotherhood; let us no longer pose as undenominational and as the most democratic religious people, but let us erase from our brotherhood publications that sacred motto, "In faith, unity; in opinion and methods, liberty; in all things, charity."

3. The action of the California (North) convention certainly was out of harmony with the fundamental principle of the Disciples of Christ. It will not only be a set back in our own brotherhood, but from its publicity in the secular press we are losing that greater influence outside of our brotherhood. My warning from the convention floor was: "Brethren if you do this thing, it will leave a stain in your records which you will some day regret."

Ukiah, Cal.

REV. J. H. McCULLOUGH.

I do not wish to enter at length into the discussion. Will say a few things. The word "excommunicated" is too strong. The Berkeley brethren could have stayed and participated in the discussions the same as the others; only the privilege of voting was not allowed them. Our people generally think that the movement at Berkeley is an attempt to reform the reformation, for which we have been pleading for more than one hundred years. The League and the paper they are publishing look that way. We are nearly unanimous in the opinion that we don't need reformation as an organized church of Christ. We believe we can practice Christian union in the Communion—the Lord's Supper. We have always taught that this is open to pious unimmersed people. This is the test of fellowship rather than baptism. When I was minister at Irvington, there came an old brother to live with his daughter. He was a member of the Congregational church some place in the State of Maine. He attended church with us. One day he said to me, "I enjoy the worship here, I enjoy hearing you preach, and I would like to be known in this community as a Christian."

I asked him if he was acquainted with the origin of our people as a separate church? He said no. Then I told him of the work of Thomas Campbell, his union communion service in 1809, held in the Monongahela Valley where Pittsburgh now stands. I told him how the pious people of various names recognized each other as Christians at the Lord's table; how this idea grew and spread; how finally, we became a separate people; told him how the Campbells—father and son—saw it to be their duty to be immersed, by a careful study of the Word of God; told him that there were other things we held the Word taught, but that we had always held that believers in Christ who were living a holy life, had a right to commune, and that he would be welcome to commune with us, and to worship with us, and enjoy our fellowship. He thanked me and said he would be happy to do this. I told him to come the next Lord's Day, and I would introduce him to the brethren, and make a statement of his desire. He came and I asked him to rise.

I explained to the church his desire and that I had invited him to come and present himself. I now said all the members of the church who wish to join me in inviting this brother to attend and worship with us to rise to their feet. They arose unanimously. Then I gave him my hand as a sojourning Disciple of Christ, and promised to give him a letter commending his Christian conduct, if he lived worthily, while with us.

I submit this example as an answer to your question as to how we can practice fellowship with these good people of other churches whom we acknowledge as Christians.

When we are looking for the ground on which the United Church of the future shall stand we must insist on the divinely appointed ordinance of baptism to bring the Kingdom which is within us into the sight of men.

Santa Cruz, Cal.

REV. JAMES M. PHILPUTT.

The Berkeley church is undoubtedly right in the course it has taken. The world is passing from the formal to the spiritual in religion. Forms are to have less and less hold upon the conscience. The great emphasis of Jesus was against the formal and for the spiritual. Forms are mere shadows and symbols of truth. It is a blind devotion to a mere form that actuates the opposition to receiving good Christian people from other bodies into our fellowship. It is conceded that they are no whit behind us in moral and spiritual attainments. God has put his seal upon them, enriching them with all the gifts of His spirit. What more do our brethren want? Surely a great people seeking the unity of all Christians will not block their own path by refusing to make such a concession as this. If we do this then our plea for unity has the ring of insincerity.

2. I would have every church proceed cautiously in taking this step. Unless there is general unanimity, it would not be wise. Peace is necessary to real progression in the congregational life. When there is general consent any congregation, of course, has a right to take such a course.

3. Perhaps the California convention was within its rights as an organized society to do as it did but it was a great mistake none the less. It certainly has the form of ecclesiasticism if not its spirit.

4. Nothing can be done from the outside but to use moral suasion and such measures for enlargement and enlightenment of vision as The Christian Century has set on foot with its Questionnaire.

Central Church, New York City.

THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD'S VIEW.

[In its last issue the Christian Standard prints a letter from a Northern California minister, Rev. T. J. O'Connor, of Hanford, who voted in favor of the excommunication of Berkeley delegates and who after a discussion of the whole matter with the editor, now announces that the editor has converted him. The Standard publishes an editorial reply to Mr. O'Connor. The two articles may appropriately be attached to our questionnaire. Omitting certain portions not relevant to our present interest the statements follow]:

REV. T. J. O'CONNOR.

The Standard has convinced me that the excommunication of the Berkeley Church "was virtually an ecclesiastical act." I say "excommunication," for it was not a question of receiving to its fellowship, but of excluding a church that already had a place in the fellowship of the conventions of California North Churches.

I heartily agree with the Standard that "the New Testament recognizes no authority above that of the congregation." I thought about this at Santa Cruz. I was of the opinion then, and I am now, that the Berkeley church was not Scriptural in the matter of receiving unimmersed persons to membership, but I did not think the passage of the resolution would be a wise thing. I voted for the resolution as a protest against what I believed to be an exceptional practice, rather than as a disciplinary measure aimed at the Berkeley church. Afterwards I could not help but think that I had sat in judgment upon the Berkeley church and condemned them because their opinion did not agree with mine. Now I am convinced that I was a party to one of the most "spectacular ecclesiastical stunts" ever pulled off in California. Would that the convention had accepted Bro. Breeden's amendment! On that hysteric—hold on, I mean historic—on that historic day at Santa Cruz, after Bro. Smither's fine address, which flowed as readily and easily from his lips as though it had been prepared weeks before and repeatedly rehearsed, the war of words raged loud and long, until the commotion rivaled the thunderous dashing of the ocean waves against the rocks a few blocks away. Then, for the first time that day, Bro. Breeden arose and opened his mouth. During five hours' hot conflict his voice was not heard. (Yet Bro. Smither wrote: "H. O. Breeden led this fight.") And when he spoke, it was not to fight, but to suggest, to counsel in the interest of peace and good-will: "This is a convention solely for missionary purposes. We are not an ecclesiastical body. I therefore am not in favor of excluding the Berkeley First Church delegates. I move as an amendment to the resolution that we disapprove the practice of the Berkeley First Church in receiving unimmersed to membership, and allow the delegates to take their seats in the convention."

Even this smacks of ecclesiasticism, but the passage of this amendment was the one way out of the difficulty, for it was the right way into peace and goodwill.

FROM THE STANDARD'S EDITORIAL RESPONSE.

Undoubtedly this necessary act of the convention was an "ecclesiastical act," for it was an act of individuals representing "ecclesias" or churches. There is no room for opinion at this point; it is a mere matter of fact.

Actually, however, it meant no more than a spontaneous uprising of individual Disciples against Lokenism. Bro. Breeden saw that it was an ecclesiastical excommunication, and sought to prevent it. The people saw an opportunity to rebuke the thing that had so long troubled them and hindered their work, so they disdained leadership or counsel and "let drive."

So Bro. Breeden was right in seeking to keep our people from presuming to exercise ecclesiastical prerogatives, and Bro. O'Connor was right in his desire to swat the Loken fly, but both were wrong nevertheless. Bro. Breeden well knows that every organization, or organism, must be granted the right of self-defense—that if it is not allowed this, it must not be allowed to exist; he knows also that a company made up of representatives of churches can have no other means of preserving a given status and character save the right to refuse or unseat those who come as delegates; and he knows that the fitness of delegates can not be determined without reference to the churches from which they come. And Bro. O'Connor, while right in his desire to disapprove of Lokenism, was wrong in allowing himself to be so placed that he could not do so without having part in an ecclesiastical performance.

Both Bro. Breeden and Bro. O'Connor, and all who held with them respectively, were wrong in becoming members of an ecclesiastical organization, or a voluntary organization ecclesiastically organized. Their confusion and difficulty rises from this. Both of them, and all who are concerned in this affair, should join the Christian Standard and protest eternally against the formation among us of any sort of assembly with the local church as a unit. All such organization Alexander Campbell designated as "the man of sin, the son of perdition," and he was right, as this incident conclusively proves.

Disciples Table Talk

Religious School Opened.

All over the country interest is manifested in the venture which Gary, Ind., is taking in an attempt to solve the problem of religious education. As has already been noted in The Christian Century, at a certain period during each day all pupils in the public schools are released and the various churches are given opportunity to supply religious instruction. Myron C. Settle has charge of the school for the Disciples. A school room has been fitted up in the second story of the church. On Thursday, Sept. 10th this religious day school was formally opened with a good attendance. If this venture is successful other communities will no doubt follow in the organization of religious day schools.

Quarter of Century With One Church.

Very seldom among the Disciples or any other religious bodies does a minister remain as the pastor of one church continuously for twenty-five years. P. H. Duncan has for that period of time been the minister of First Church, Ludlow, Ky. He has tendered his resignation to the Ludlow church and preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. Previous to entering the ministry Mr. Duncan was state senator from Owen County, Ky., and made his home at Glencoe. When he went to Ludlow the church was weak and housed in a small frame building. He began at once a campaign for a new and more suitable structure. The present substantial building was erected and paid for. Mr. Duncan in resigning retains the high esteem of his own people and those of all the other churches. He will take up literary work to which he has already given considerable attention.

Des Moines Wants Conventions.

Our churches in Des Moines will come to Atlanta with a very urgent invitation for the national convention to meet with them in 1916. The delegation from Des Moines will be headed by President Hill M. Bell of Drake University who is also president of the convention this year. Some may think that Des Moines is somewhat previous in the urgency of this invitation but that should not be the feeling because the city is reaching far out into the future in order to secure large religious gatherings. Already an invitation has been extended to the Methodist general conference to meet in that city in 1924.

W. R. Motley Called to Richmond, Ind.

Central Church at Richmond, Ind., has called W. R. Motley to the pastorate. For nearly three years Mr. Motley has been pastor at New Castle, Ind. During his pastorate there he has made a lasting impression on the community for good. The call to the church at Richmond is an evidence of Mr. Motley's success during these three years because Richmond is only a short distance from New Castle. The Richmond church has had good opportunity to observe the character of Mr. Motley's leadership.

Dallas Church Plans Work.

A. E. Ewell recently resigned at Beaumont, Tex., to accept the call of the Oak Cliff church at Dallas. Oak Cliff is a growing residence section of the city where many of the better-to-do class are building their homes. There is much promise that this church will be one of the strongest in the state eventually. Mr. Ewell is already on the field and has projected an aggressive program for fall work. The first Sunday in October will be a great "home-coming" day for the church. Like many other churches this congregation is recognizing summer vacation absences and the plan is to gather all the people back into the activities of the church.

"Medical Science Will Offset War."

During the past few years Dr. Burris A. Jenkins of Kansas City, Mo., has submitted to several surgical operations for a chronic ailment of the knee. He has just recovered from his latest experience in a Kansas City hospital. His first sermon at the Linwood Boulevard church indicates that he has not lost confidence in the medical profession. A Kansas City paper reports his sermon as follows: "Medical science will save enough lives to make up for the losses of the present war; Louvain will be rebuilt, all Europe will struggle back on its feet and the world will be as it was. The present war is similar to crises in every human life. There are times when the sky is overcast and it appears that nothing can save everything from sinking to the lowermost depth. Then the sun comes out, dispels the clouds and all is forgotten. In the last century medical science discovered that appendicitis can be cured by an operation. Since that discovery several hundred thousand human lives have been conserved. The war can not do much more than offset this gain. Nature heals wounds quickly and in a generation or two the great European war will be only history. Its effects on the countries over which it was fought will have been obliterated."

Minister Promotes Athletics.

Harold E. Monser, minister at Lincoln, Ill., is organizing an athletic association. A building, formerly occupied by a business college, has been secured and will be transformed into a gymnasium. Membership in the athletic association will not be confined to the members of the Christian church but will be open on equal terms to all who reside in the community.

Why the Extra Six?

Since the days of the Apostles fishermen have been preachers and preachers have been fishermen. This is the time of the year when the minister is expected back in his pulpit to proclaim the truth and to tell his fish stories. George B. Van Arsdall has just returned to Central, Denver, Colo., with the announcement that in one day he caught a string of 1006 fish. Why the extra six? A thousand would satisfy most fishermen.

New Church in New York State.

A small congregation of Disciples at Carthage, N. Y., was gathered together last winter and organized into a church with 38 charter members. During the year new strength has been added and a house of worship secured. The church building will be completed this month. Dedication services will be held the first Sunday in October.

Educational Work of Disciples Reorganized

An entire reorganization of the educational work among the Disciples of Christ was effected the first week in September, at a meeting of college men, held at the Jefferson Hotel, St Louis, Mo. The old organization known as the Association of Colleges, was amortized and a new organization known as the Board of Education of the Disciples of Christ was brought into being. President

Prof. Charles E. Underwood, Secretary of the New Board of Education of the Disciples.

R. H. Crossfield was made president of the new organization; President T. E. Cramblett, of Bethany College, vice-president, and Prof. Charles Underwood, of Butler College, secretary. The new organization will be much broader in its scope and operation than the old one, which it succeeds. In addition to recognizing all colleges and universities under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ, institutions doing sub-freshman work will be admitted. Indianapolis has been chosen as the headquarters for the new board and offices will be opened in that city, manned with the proper secretarial force for the purpose of carrying out the enlarged program outlined at the St. Louis meeting. The executive committee, of which Dr. Crossfield is chairman, is charged with the responsibility of selecting a secretary for this educational board, whose position and duties will correspond closely to those of the secretaries of the Foreign Missionary Society, the Home Missionary Society and other missionary and benevolent organizations conducted by the Disciples. Under the new arrangement the territory of the United States is divided into some nineteen divisions and the college or colleges in each of these divisions is made responsible for the cultivation of the territory so far as the development of students and financial support is concerned.

Following are the names of the various colleges and territories alloted to each:

Keuka College—New York, New England and New Jersey.

Virginia Christian College—Virginia, Maryland and Delaware.

Atlantic Christian College—North Carolina and South Carolina.

Bethany College — West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Milligan College—Tennessee.

Lamar College—Georgia, Florida and Eastern Alabama.

Southern Christian College—Mississippi, Louisiana and Western Alabama.

Transylvania University and the College of the Bible—Kentucky.

Hiram College—Ohio, Michigan and Ontario.

Butler College—Indiana.

Eureka College—Illinois and Wisconsin.

Christian University, Missouri Bible College, Christian College, William Woods College, Camden Point College—Missouri.

Phillips Christian University—Oklahoma, Arkansas and Southern Kansas.

Cotner University—Nebraska, Northern Kansas, Colorado and South Dakota.

Drake University—Iowa, North Dakota and Montana.

Texas Christian University, Carr-Burdette-Carlton and Midland College — Texas and New Mexico.

Spokane University — Washington, Wyoming and Idaho.

Eugene Bible University—Oregon, Nevada and Utah.

Southern California College — California and Arizona.

The two graduate schools, the College of Missions, Indianapolis and the Divinity House, of Chicago, together with Johnson Bible College and Phillips Bible Institute, were assigned general territory.

President Crossfield has called a meeting of this new board in connection with the Atlanta convention, at which time the observance of Education Day will be fully outlined and launched.

Fresno Church Will Build.

Dr. H. O. Breeden will lead First church of Fresno, Cal., in a building enterprise. The new structure will cost approximately $75,000 and upon completion will be one of the finest church edifices in the San Joaquin valley. The congregation has just chosen a board of trustees which will have charge of the building operations.

Union of Churches Planned.

At Ottawa, Kans., three churches, the First Presbyterian, the Congregational, and the Christian, have been negotiating for several months and there are now excellent prospects for these organizations to unite their forces in one federated congregation. The Christian church at Ottawa has never been able to gather any strength. For a number of years it was sustained in part by help from the state missionary society. Probably the reason these three churches named above have found it difficult to succeed is the fact that Ottawa is the seat of a strong Baptist college. The Baptists have the forces to minister well to the religious needs of the community. The proposed union of churches seems to be brought about more by the feeling of fellowship produced through commonness of failure than anything else. Necessity can be counted on to force the union of many struggling local churches. The Congregational and Presbyterian congregations have already approved the union. The Christian church will make its decision very soon.

Churches of Christ Getting Numerous.

When two churches of different denominations unite it is interesting to note that invariably the name Church of Christ is used. Articles of federation have been adopted by two congregations at Cannonville, N. Y., in which they agree to call their church the "United Church of Christ." The two local churches are the Methodist and Presbyterian.

No Peace in A Great Army.

Judge J. N. Haymaker, of Wichita, Kansas, is one of the prominent laymen of the Disciples. He has always taken an active interest in the affairs of both church and state. He is now president of the Brotherhood of the Disciples. On a recent occasion he delivered an address before a Sunday night audience in Wichita, upholding the Christian ideals of peace. An excerpt from his address follows:

"There is no more reason why the Germans and the English should hate each other as people than there is that the German people of Union and Attica Townships should hate the English people in the townships adjoining. There is no more valid reason for England and France to be at war than there would be for the states of Kansas and Missouri to be at war. The truth is, there is no such thing as racial hatred unless it be fostered, stimulated and cultivated by interested parties." Judge Haymaker said there are many rays of hope that a sentiment of peace is growing in the world despite the war between European nations. Among these hopeful signs he named the federation of the churches, the attitude of President Wilson toward Japan and Mexico, the twenty-two peace treaties procured by Secretary Bryan and above all, the promise of God that there shall come a time when wars shall cease.

Church Refuses to Accept Resignation.

J. F. McMahan has been trying to resign as pastor of East End Church, Quincy, Ill., but the congregation likes him so well that thus far the resignation has been refused. This church is only three years old and has been making rapid growth under Mr. Mahan's leadership.

School of Methods at Kansas City.

Our churches at Kansas City have always been an example to other groups of city churches in co-operative work. There are some tasks which all churches working together can accomplish. An as illustration, the Kansas City churches are this week holding a school of methods at the Independence Boulevard Church. The classes begin at 4 o'clock p. m., and continue in session until nine. The best leadership in each church is thus being made available to all the churches.

Lawrence Church Offers Teacher Training.

Lawrence, Kansas, is the seat of the state university. The church and the Kansas Bible Chair and some members of the university faculty have combined their abilities and faculties to offer training to the Bible school teachers of Lawrence. While this undertaking will be under the direction of First Church and its pastor, E. T. McFarland, the advantages of advanced training are thrown open to Sunday-school teachers in all the churches of the city. Classes were conducted with success last year. Larger plans are being formulated for this season.

Chattanooga Anxious for Visitors.

Chattanooga, Tenn., is making a concerted effort to get delegates to the national convention in Atlanta to stop over either in the going or coming trip. Ira M. Boswell, pastor of First Church and C. E. Jackson, pastor at Highland Park Church, are both active in extending the invention of Chattanooga and sustaining the reputation of the South for hospitality. The chamber of commerce will make provisions for the entertainment of visitors who may stop over.

Reliable Statistics Needed.

At the annual convention of the Kentucky churches recently held at Ashland, the report of the state missionary society revealed the fact that reliable statistics are not available for the annual year book of the Disciples. The report at the Kentucky convention showed that there are 1,206 congregations in the state, but only 198 reported during the year. There are 993 preachers and the total membership of the church is supposed to be about 165,000. The other thousand churches probably have more than a hundred thousand members. As long as they do not report some one has to guess at it.

Church Making Survey.

At Little Rock, Ark., First Church has started a religious canvass which will embrace the whole city both business and residence districts. The first duty of a church is to know its community. This knowledge cannot be had except by the social survey method. The information to be gathered by the Little Rock church will be used. J. H. O. Smith, the pastor, is very enthusiastic concerning the survey. He says: "We may need more religion in business, but we certainly need more business in religion. Why should a political party be more interested in voting the last man than the church of Christ in endeavoring to reach and save for a happier life every man, woman and child in the community! The churches of the country have not seating capacity for half the people. If the facts were before us, they would be a challenge to Christians which would jar us away from our formalism and inspire us to undertake a campaign, which would bring hope and good cheer to thousands of hearts and homes. The men of the church are leading in the work here at Little Rock. It is a man's task and demands the best of business ability, as well as unselfish consecration to the welfare of others."

Keokuk Church Left in Flourishing Condition.

On August 1st R. W. Lilley closed his pastorate at Keokuk, Iowa, with First Church, and removed to Kirksville, Missouri, to begin a pastorate there. During the time Mrs. Lilley was with the church at Keokuk, it was greatly strengthened numerically. Of far more value to the congregations, however, was the development of definite plans of church work, and the progress made toward carrying out these definite plans of work. The congregation became a "living link" missionary church by supporting Miss Gretchen Garst at Akita, Japan. The Sunday-school was greatly strengthened in teaching force, organization and members. The average attendance in the Sunday-school near the close of his pastorate exceeded the church membership in numbers. Every department of the church was in like manner greatly strengthened by being taught to follow a definite plan of work. Practically every department of the church was freed from debt during his pastorate, or plans were devised to meet all debts at an early date. The Sunday-school alone remained in debt and that is due to the recent installation of a motion picture machine, which is the equal, if not the superior of any machine in the city. J. O. Boyd, superintendent of the Sunday-school, expresses the sentiments of the Keokuk church in paying this tribute to Mr. Lilley: "He is a student, a clear thinker, a prophet of no mean order; he speaks with burning eloquence in denouncing the ways of sin; he took a hand in every municipal activity in which the good or ill of the city was at stake—supporting actively the cause best adapted to secure moral improvement and unflinchingly exposing municipal ills. One of the many good tributes was the statement of a professional gambler and illicit liquor seller, who said, 'Well, we are mighty glad Lilley is going.' Those who had the welfare and moral growth of the city at heart with one accord regretted his departure. He has made good as a pastor, a civic worker and a platform lecturer. He has delivered far and near his missionary lecture 'The Mountaineers.' Kirksville gains a unique, courageous and brilliant pastor."

Annual Meeting in Edgar County, Illinois.

The Christian churches of Edgar County, Ill., held their first annual meeting, September 11-13, in First Church, Paris, Ill. The Rev. John R. Ewers, of Pittsburg, who is contributing Sunday-school lesson talks to the Christian Century and The Conquest.

following brethren took part in the program: President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College; State Secretary John R. Golden; State Bible School Superintendent Clarence L. DePew; President A. McLean; Rev. Victor W. Dorris; and Z. T. Sweeney. Mr. Sweeney delivered two great addresses. He began his ministry with the Paris Church, forty-four years ago. His return was a great home-coming. The people were more than pleased with his messages. The evidence of this is seen in the call extended to him to return for the annual meeting next year. The churches have formed the Board of Christian Churches of Edgar County and steps will be taken at once to make the work of the organization effective in the strengthening of weak churches and the establishment of new ones. "Co-operation" is the watchword.

Oklahoma Church Calls Missouri Minister.

C. E. Wagner has closed his work at Webb City, Mo., and has accepted the call of the Lawton, Okla., church. The Webb City papers speak flatteringly of Mr. Wagner's work in that city.

Former Minister Running for Congress.

A. W. Jackman, of Attica, Ind., is making the race for congress from his district on the Prohibition ticket. His friends think he has good chance of election. He was formerly pastor of the church at Rossville, Ill., where he had a prominent part in putting the saloons out of business.

Budget Committee Apportions $600,000.

Last week the advisory and executive committees of the general convention met at Indianapolis. These two committees resolved themselves into a "budget committee" to make the 1914 apportionments. The total amount for missionary work will be $600,000, to be raised by the 8,000 or more congregations. The plans of this budget committee will be submitted for the approval of the Atlanta convention.

School of Methods at Frankfort.

The First Church of Frankfort, Ind., arranged for a modern school of methods for the third week in September. It was along the lines that such schools are conducted at Winona, Bethany and other places. Arrangements were in the hands of Garry L. Cook, superintendent of Bible-school work for the state of Indiana. Lectures were given on various lines of church and Bible-school work. Among the instructors were Miss Muriel White of St. Louis and F. E. Lumley of the College of Missions of Indianapolis. The former gave lectures in elementary Bible-school work. Mr. Cook also lectured on Bible-school work. The course lasted for five days, from September 14 to 18 inclusive. All the Christian churches of the county participated in the school.

Cornerstone Laid.

August 23 was a significant day for the church at Worthington, Ind. The cornerstone for the new church building was laid with impressive ceremony by the pastor, W. B. Morris. The address of the occasion was delivered by Judge J. B. Wilson of Bloomington, Ind. Local ministers were present and participated. The exercises were held in the Methodist church until the time for the cornerstone laying.

A Large County Convention.

One of the largest county conventions of Christian churches reported this summer was held the last week in August at Pleasant Hill, Ky. There are a large number of Christian churches in this county. Bowling Green is the county seat. There was an attendance of between three and four hundred reported. This is larger than many of the state conventions.

Active in Politics.

"We do not want politics in the church but we do want the church in politics." This is the announcement of C. K. Titus, pastor of the church at Gooding, Idaho. Mr. Titus is taking an active interest in the politics of his community. He is leading his church and the good citizens of the town in an effort to elect good men to office.

A FINAL WORD.

This is the final word from the Foreign Society for the current missionary year. The books close September 30th. A great number of offerings are expected in the next two weeks. Last year the receipts amounted to over $80,000 during that time. We are hoping for even more this year.

There has been a gain of over $4,000 in the first half of this month. The gain on the year up to this date is about $20,000.

Let us hear from every church, and every Sunday-school, and every Endeavor Society and every friend that has not remembered the work with an offering. Let us close up the ranks. We ought to receive $100,000 in the next two weeks.

Send offerings to F. M. Rains, Sec., Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A. McLEAN, President.

Could Have Been a Millionaire.

The death of Rev. B. E. Utz, leading spirit in the founding of Spokane University, has called out the following editorial from the the Spokane Chronicle under the title, "Now That His Life Work Is Ended, Was His Choice Right Or Wrong?"

"He could have been a millionaire."

He chose the other path. He turned to a life of service—not the service of gold. He wanted to make men happier. He wanted to make them better. He wanted to make them wiser. To feed the hungry; to help the neglected; to turn the faces of men and women toward higher ideals; to train boys and girls of the northwest for clearer thinking, deeper knowledge, broader usefulness—these were the things to which he gave the best years of his life.

"He could have been a millionaire."

Near the center of the city a great church rises in lasting testimony to his faith, his energy, his patience, his strength. Half hidden in the groves east of the town the foundations of a young university tell of his vision and of the high resolve, the courage, the tact, the skill, the sacrifices, the unwearying labor which made that vision true. Scattered through Washington and Oregon are thousands of men and women who can still feel the firm handclasp, see the cheering smile, hear the word of comradeship that were his. You who have fought with the vampires that hover around the family of every man with money: you who have stood by while drunken heirs scattered the treasures their fathers had hoarded; you who have seen rich man after rich man borne to his grave without the record of one grand deed done, one public service rendered, one sign that he knew the talents loaned to him by the great Father were not his, but were held in trust for his brothers and sisters—tell us: Was the choice right or wrong?

PRAYER TO AMERICA.

By Mary Louise Dawson.

America, be calm, be great,
Whilst warring kingdoms totter, fall;
Reach out thy mighty arms in peace,
Let naught of hatred thee enthrall.

America, be calm, be great,
A Christian nation ever be,
And help thy sister nations find
The way to peace and liberty.

America, be calm, be great,
And in this most perilous time,
When millions die and millions mourn
Let sympathy all hearts refine.

America, be calm, be great,
Thou land that loveth liberty,
Reach out to all the wide, wide world
The spirit of true charity.

America, be calm, be great;
Then in wisdom, grace and power
Thou shalt live to help the fallen
In this the world's most crucial hour.

America, be calm, be great,
Lift thy mighty voice in prayer,
Till peace shall triumph o'er the world,
And every life its blessings share.

THE LAST SUPPER.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR OCTOBER 11.

Mark 14:12-25. Memory Verses, 22, 23.

Golden Text.—As often as ye eat this bread, and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come. 1 Cor. 11:26.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(12) And on the first day of unleavened bread, when they sacrificed the passover, his disciples say unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and make ready that thou mayest eat the passover? (13) And he sendeth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him: (14) And wheresoever he shall enter in, say to the master of the house, The Teacher saith, Where is my guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? (15) And he will himself show you a large upper room furnished and ready: and there make ready for us. (16) And the disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

(17) And when it was evening he cometh with the twelve. (18) And as they sat and were eating, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you shall betray me, even he that eateth with me. (19) They began to be sorrowful, and to say upon him one by one, Is it I? (20) And he said unto them, It is one of the twelve, he that dippeth with me in the dish. (21) For the Son of man goeth, even as it is written of him: but woe unto that man through whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had not been born.

(22) And as they were eating, he took bread, and when he had blessed, he brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take ye: this is my body. (23) And he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave to them: and they all drank of it. (24) And he said unto them, This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many. (25) Verily I say unto you, I shall no more drink of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER

v. 12. On the first day of unleavened bread: The feast of unleavened bread continued for seven days, beginning on the fifteenth day of the first month (Nisan). The day really began at sunset of the fourteenth day. When they sacrificed the passover: The paschal lamb was selected on the tenth day, and was kept up until the evening of the fourteenth day when it was killed. See Ex. 12:3-6. It was required that the lamb be a male, not more than one year old and without a blemish. Where wilt thou that we go and make ready: they asked this question for the reason that the city was crowded with people and places suitable for such a purpose were no doubt scarce. Then they must bring tables and couches to the room selected if it were not provided with such. Eat the passover: The passover meal. See Ex. 12:15-17.

v. 13. And he sendeth two of his disciples: From Luke 22:8 we learn that these disciples were Peter and John. This is only one of many times that the Lord indicates great confidence in these two men. Go into the city: Jerusalem.

v. 14. Where is my guest-chamber? Jesus had been in this home before. Indeed he must have been quite familiar with the master of the house, for the gathering for the eating of the feast was, no doubt, prearranged.

v. 15 There make ready for us: The master of the house had furnished the tables and couches but the food had not been brought together. The lamb, the bitter herbs, the unleavened bread and the wine must be brought to the house.

v. 16. And the disciples went forth: They did just as they had been instructed to do. The Teacher had given them explicit directions and they confidently went forth to do as they had been told to do.

v. 17 When it was evening: It had been quite a walk from Bethany to the city of Jerusalem and then to the house where the feast was to be celebrated. They were tired and their sandals were soiled. They were quite ready for the couches.

v. 18. One of you shall betray me, even he that eateth with me: Judas' couch must have been beside that of Jesus.

v. 20. He that dippeth with me in the dish: Jesus will leave no doubt as to the person to whom he was referring. Some writers seem to think that Jesus was purposely leaving their question unanswered but it seems to me that the very shock of the assertion left them all so dumfounded that they simply failed to observe how clearly Jesus was indicating the person who was to betray him. John has Jesus indicate the betrayer unmistakably in Jn. 13:21-26.

v. 21. The Son of man goeth: To his death Even as it is written: Isa. 53:7-9; Dan. 9:26. Jesus was familiar with the scriptures. He had often taught the scriptures to his disciples, renewing them with his vitalizing interpretations. Good were it for that man if he had not been born: "The woe pronounced on the traitor is not favorable to the view that all will finally be saved. If a man is saved at the long last, whatever he has passed through, it is good for him that he was born" (Horton).

v. 24. This is my blood: Some literalists have stumbled over these words. In the absence of a Hebrew word which expressed the meaning of our words signify, represent, etc., Jesus could express the thought in no other way. Of the covenant: Jesus is saying that his blood is poured out to ratify an agreement of forgiveness, between God and the many.

"Remember Jesus Christ"

The Lesson in Everyday Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

WE all want to be remembered. It was this natural trait in Jesus that made him institute that which we call "The Last Supper." How few names persist. In a hundred years the world will not know that we ever lived and wrought. Not a single memory will remain!

FORGOTTEN.

The head of one of the leading departments in Harvard recently came across some remarkable work which a former professor had done. Only seventy-five years had elapsed since this once famous man had made his contributions and yet at a meeting in which was gathered a large number of the heads of departments of that university he found only two men who had ever even heard of the man or his work! It is not a pleasant thought—this idea of being utterly forgotten. But you see there is no real reason why most of us should be remembered. Oblivion is a fine thing!

In addition to the natural human instinct which called for continued remembrance there was, in Jesus' case, the knowledge of the good that would be accomplished by remembering him. He knew how the memory of his life, love, service, brave death and uncompromising spirit would inspire those who thought of him. "This do in memory of me," he said, and our hearts are warmed.

"REMEMBER JESUS CHRIST."

I count as one of the priceless experiences of my college days the going with other Y. M. C. A. fellows to Northfield, Mass. It was great to sit at the feet of Moody. It was heartening to meet the other men from more than a hundred colleges and universities but the one thing that stands out above all others is an address by Robert E. Speer upon, "Remember Jesus Christ." He told us how he was traveling slowly on a ship in China and an old missionary was reading from Second Timothy. Finally he came to the eighth verse of the second chapter, reading from the King James version, while Mr. Speer was following with the revised. The old version reads, "Remember that Jesus Christ," but the new reads simply, "Remember Jesus Christ, risen from the dead——" Suddenly the vast difference in these readings flashed over Mr. Speer. How different the remembrance of facts about Christ and the memory of the person. And then, in that wonderful address to young men, he showed how the memory of the very Christ would help us when we were tempted, when we were misunderstood, when we were called upon to suffer for righteousness' sake. For every period of life, for every experience in life there was something to correspond to it in the life of our Lord. "Remember Jesus Christ."

THEOLOGY AND PERSONALITY.

Among the notable contributions to theology in recent years is that of President King of Oberlin College. He interprets everything in terms of personality. It is needless to say that he has brought a wonderful richness into this realm. There is a vast difference between a series of dry facts and a living, growing person. King makes Jesus real. He takes away what he calls the "seeming unreality" and a Supreme Person stands before you ready to receive you into the circle of his matchless friendship. One series of Yale lectures this very year was devoted to this same idea—"Personality." The lecturer went the full limit and grounded the universe in personality. He called Christ the "Supreme Person." This is theology with a meaning. When we come before people high or low talking in terms of personality they understand and are interested. All the great doctrines can be explained in terms of personality. For example, the sin of the prodigal son.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

Members of other churches often say to us, "It would seem that with you the communion would become a dull commonplace." There is such a danger. We remember how Jesus despised formality. We must abhor and detest any half-hearted celebration of a fixed form. We must teach people to think about Christ during the sacred moments of the celebration. There is a great difference in the spirit of the communion in various churches. In our East End church we observe the communion after the sermon. It is remarkable that rarely does anyone leave the church. All remain and the moments are charged with an intense devotion. We are asked to compare our lives with Christ's. We are taught to be silent and deeply reverent. There is nothing superstitious about it. It is all quite natural: we are remembering our Saviour. It is a beautiful service. Once a week is not too often to think of, and commune deeply with Christ if the week has been filled full of exhausting service, of bitter experience, of misunderstanding, of heroic toil, of generous giving. It is then that one welcomes the opportunity to bow with fellow-disciples in remembering Jesus Christ. Do not forget him.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 7.

Pioneer Studies; Alexander Campbell. Rom. 8:1-4; Jer. 6:16.

It was the province of Alexander Campbell to elaborate and defend principles which had been enunciated by his father. His opinion of his father's work appears in the statement that the "Declaration and Address" contains what may be called the embryo or rudiments of a great and rapidly increasing community. It virtually contains the elements of a great movement of vital interest to every citizen of Christ's kingdom." In the elaboration and defense of the principles he held to be fundamental, he proved himself to be a great writer, preacher, educator, and expositor.

THE WRITER.

Few men have written more than Alexander Campbell. His name is on the title-pages of sixty volumes. He did not write to please the fancy of the idle. He wrote that he might confirm the faith of men. For seven years he edited the Christian Baptist. "All men competent to poise a lance were freely invited into its arena, and they came from every quarter—Baptists and Pedobaptists, Congregationalists and Episcopalians, Calvinists and Armenians, skeptics and infidels." For more than thirty years he edited the Millennial Harbinger.

THE PREACHER.

Of Alexander Campbell the preacher, Jeremiah S. Black wrote: "As a great preacher he will be remembered with unqualified admiration by all who had the good fortune to hear him in the prime of his life. The interest which he excited in a large congregation can hardly be explained. The first sentence of his discourse 'drew audience still as death,' and every word was heard with rapt attention to the close. It did not appear to be eloquence; it was not the enticing words of man's wisdom; the arts of the orator seemed to be inconsistent with the simplicity of his character. It was logic, explanation, argument so clear that everybody followed without effort, and all felt that it was raising them to the level of a superior mind. Persuasion sat upon his lips. Prejudice melted away under the easy flow of his elocution. The clinching fact is always in its proper place, and the fine poetic illustration was ever at hand to shed its light over the theme. But all this does not account for the impressiveness of his speeches, and no analysis of them can give any idea of their power."

EDUCATOR AND EXPOSITOR.

In his corner-stone address of Bethany College, Mr. Campbell said: "In this corner-stone we deposit a copy of the Holy Bible, not to bury it in the earth, but as a monumental symbol of the fact that this book, this everlasting document ought to be the true and proper foundation of every literary, scientific, moral, and religious institution—that it is of right Divine, entitled to be, and ought to be, the basis, the sub-basis of every public and benevolent institution—essential to the perfect and complete development of man in his whole constitution—as a citizen of the commonwealth, a citizen of the kingdom of heaven, an heir of the universe through all the cycles of an eternal future." Bethany College was founded that it might prepare men to expound the Bible. Mr. Campbell believed that it required an intelligent man to understand the Bible. He believed that God spoke to the human understanding. He was therefore the foe of all methods of interpreting the Bible that were not based on reason. Emotion had a place in his study of the Bible, but it was the emotion of the man who had been trained to think.

Do you wish to teach the principles of

to your adult class? If so, you will want to use as the basis for your work. This is a monthly magazine, edited by Dr. Josiah Strong. In this little publication is given the most vital, timely, thought provoking, reverent and satisfying treatment of the big problems of the social order that has ever been offered to Sunday-schools. Rev. S. G. Buckner, pastor at Somerset, Pa., who uses this literature in his great men's class of 150, says it is absolutely the best thing published for the men's Bible class. The subscription price—50c a year—makes it less expensive than the usual adult lesson literature. Pastors and church leaders who wish to put into their church work new zest and inspiration will recognize at once the value of starting their classes in the study of Social Reform. Send 5c in stamps for a single copy of the magazine.

The Gospel of The Kingdom

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this fall. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. Character Talks

By Rev. George A. Campbell, Pastor of First Church, Hannibal, Mo.

G. A. Campbell.

DON'T DRIFT

I have two neighbors who have very different gardens. The one has a chance garden; the other a designed one. The peach trees in the former sprung from stray pits; those in the latter were bought from a reliable nursery. There is a wonderful difference in the peaches gathered from the two gardens. :: Two boys left my city the same year to attend the university of the state. Both left with the intention of being physicians. The boys came from poor families and knew that they must make their own way. The one was graduated last year with honors; the other soon gave up the struggle, and is now on a small salary and working at a task he does not like. His whole ability will never be called out. The other day I met a boy friend of Mark Twain. "I was a heap smarter boy than Mark Twain," he said to me; and those that knew the two say he was. He thinks Mark succeeded in fooling the people. Mark Twain is known the world over and his boy friend is not known beyond his own small town. How is the difference explained? During those very critical years of older youth Clemens learned the lesson of directing his labor and his life; the other simply drifted.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

Two Letters

New Berlin, Ohio, Sept. 3, 1914.

My dear Mr. Morrison:

I have been reading the editorial in The Christian Century of August 20, entitled "A Missionary Enterprise," in which you show that Christian people ought to give of their money outright to support their religious newspaper.

I think your editorial is very much to the point and very timely. As one of the subscribers to the bonds of the Disciples Publication Society, I think you know that my primary and main interest in this matter is a missionary interest and not at all commercial. I believe that most, if not all, of your bond subscribers regard the matter in the same way.

I do not wish to weaken your confidence that The Century will some day become a self-supporting institution and even pay from its profits a goodly sum to philanthropy and Christian education. I know of no reason why it may not turn out so. But I do not like to see the paper mortgaging its future by issuing bonds. For the present and for some time to come the friends of this work ought, it seems to me, to regard it as a great missionary enterprise to be supported by their direct gifts.

Do you not think if the truth were generally known about the hard struggle you have always had to maintain The Century on its limited financial resources, that there would be many men and women in all parts of the country who would be glad to share with you and Doctor Willett a burden which I know is greater than you should be allowed to bear? Only a few of us know anything at all of the sacrifices that go into The Century from week to week, and I doubt if it has occurred to any of the scores of your business men friends that they could have fellowship with you in it, and in making it an even greater paper than its limited means have allowed it to be.

I would like to see you abandon all further sale of bonds and put The Century as a real missionary proposition upon the hearts of those who believe in its ideals, and appeal to them to support it with their gifts. If it is possible, as I understand it is, for their gifts to be used to increase the subscription list of The Century, I believe they will be glad to have them so applied.

I believe such a plan would be more frank, more satisfying to your friends who participate in it and more fruitful of good results than for you to continue to allow us to think of our part in it as a commercial investment. I offer this suggestion only for what it is worth.

I believe our business men of progressive principles ought to be enlisted in the support of this paper, and I believe they will respond with greater liberality if you ask them for gifts rather than for investment.

One thing is sure: the cause of progress among our people must have The Christian Century, and to allow it to be crippled for lack of money in these very important days, not only wrongs the paper and the cause, but wrongs the friends who love both the paper and the cause which it so ably pleads.

Very truly yours,

W. H. Hoover.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 10, 1914.

My dear Brother Hoover:

I thank you very heartily for your generous letter received some days ago. The thing we most need in The Christian Century just now is the counsel of business men who have warmly at heart the great cause which the paper represents and who sense the fast rising tide of opportunity which is being borne in upon us today. I think we need this counsel more than we need money. Since the death of our business manager, two years ago, it has devolved upon me both to edit The Century and to practically manage its business. The latter is an uncongenial task to me. I am not a business man. I know very little about business affairs. All I can say for myself is that I have done the best I could. Recently a group of business men here in Chicago have become conscious of the service they may render us by their advice, and they have enabled us to improve our plans in several important particulars.

It is interesting indeed that your position on the matter of selling bonds should coincide precisely with the advice of these other friends. It seems to be the unanimous judgment that it is both inexpedient and unnecessary to sell bonds; that our policy should be to lay The Christian Century close to the hearts of those throughout our brotherhood who believe in the spirit and principles that it represents, and give them a chance to have fellowship together in building up the paper and widening the range of its influence. As a consequence of this advice, you will be glad to know that we have decided not to sell any more bonds, but to go to our friendly public with confidence that the funds necessary for the development of this work will be forthcoming just as funds for any other good cause are forthcoming when people are informed of the opportunity.

It took me some time to adjust myself to this point of view, for, as you know, I had secured subscriptions for over $20,000 of our bonds, and we had received, in August, 1913, the first cash payments on these subscriptions amounting to something over $6,000. When August, 1914, came around we greatly needed the second installment, and, to be perfectly frank with you, it has been a hard struggle to get through the summer without calling it in. Our situation was relieved by a number of our local business men and some ministers and college men providing a neat fund to sustain the paper until we could have time to bring our change of plan to the attention of our friends. Our present stringency is not due to any disappointment in the patronage given us. The circulation of the "Century" has increased something like 30 per cent in the past year. This is far beyond any growth we have ever made before. The business of our Sunday-school department has increased 25 per cent, and our orders from the Sunday-schools for the new year beginning October 1, point to an even greater gain for the coming year. We are doing a modest business. We are, you understand, just beginning. As yet we have no grounds for boasting of the enormous volume of our business. But we do take satisfaction in the encouraging gains we are able to report. A newspaper that stands for progressive ideals naturally requires a little more time to get itself well established than does the other kind of a paper.

Our problem is simply this: to find capital to maintain the "Century" while the society works out its own self-support. Like all our Disciple papers— and nearly all religious papers—the "Century" is published at a loss. Our present Sunday-school business, modest as it is, helps appreciably to cut down the loss on the "Century," but it will take probably four or five years to work out complete self-support by wholesome business methods. To provide capital for this "growing period" we cannot sell stock for there is none to sell—the Disciples Publication Society is not a stock company. And now that it has been decided to sell no more bonds it appears that the only way left is to open the door for our friends to come in and, as you word it, to "have fellowship" with us in this work.

I am glad that it is so. With Doctor Willett and myself—and I may now include Mr. T. C. Clark, who has been with us long enough to prove his deep loyalty —the work has always been a missionary enterprise, a work of love and of faith. But the fellowship of this task should be shared by our substantial business men and women, and the friends of the cause among ministers and teachers also. I am grateful that you have led the way in expressing what I have for some time known was your deep desire. I believe there will be many others who will supplement your generous expressions of good will. I have just as much faith in my brethren who believe in the higher ideals for our people as I have in the ideals themselves.

Very sincerely yours,

C. C. Morrison.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The President and the War

HAS it occurred to your mind, gentle and comfortable American reader, as you watch from day to day the unfolding of the ghastly war-drama, how much this nation and your own unperturbed self have to be thankful for in your Christian President, Woodrow Wilson?

Lest it may not have occurred vividly enough to your mind, suppose we pause right here at the threshold of The Christian Century and look at certain facts.

It is an uneasy pillow that any ruler's head lies upon when the nations about him are at war. In the olden time it was not so serious a matter so long as one's own nation was not directly involved. The nations were more isolated, more independent, more self-contained.

But today the nations are interdependent. There is an almost exquisite interweaving of their interests in industry, in culture, in commerce. No nation liveth unto itself any more.

So there are problems of infinite delicacy that our President has had to solve—problems connected with the sudden tearing apart of this finely woven fabric of international relationships, problems of subterranean diplomacy but few of which have ever come to the knowledge of the public. And our President has wonderfully met and solved these problems—or is solving them—with quietness, sanity and complete absence of the dramatic.

The nation has confidence in him. It is going on about its business. There is no hysterical inflation of prices. The first flurry in the markets has been practically stilled. Equilibrium has been resumed. The nation is getting itself in trim to enter into its new opportunities. We are beginning to manufacture things we used to buy from Europe. Our "infant industries" that were supposed to be dependent upon a protective tariff are suddenly leaping into full-grown stature and vigor, and our economists tell us that a new and brilliant day is at hand for American industry, while our prophets cannot cease proclaiming the acceptable year of our Lord for the American ideals of liberty and democracy, not alone on this continent but all the world over.

Humanly considered, all this has been made possible because we have had in Washington a President who loves peace, and has proved that he will stretch to the limit that pagan thing called national dignity in order to maintain it.

It was good for this nation that our Mexican experience came just when it did. Had the President succombed to the jingo clamor at the time and declared war against Mexico the United States would have been this day in a pitiable plight.

The President got our confidence for his handling of the present situation by the way he handled the Mexican tangle.

He had an ideal chance to get us into needless and fruitless trouble when Belgium the other day made her protest on the alleged German atrocities and Germany stated her side of the case to him. But with a statesmanship remarkable no less for its adroitness than for its ethical sternness he flung back responsibility upon the disputants and warned them of an inexorable day of reckoning.

His secretary of the treasury is conducting the most brilliant and successful policy in handling the financial affairs of the nation that any such official has ever conducted. Mr. McAdoo has made the American people feel that he knows his business and that he has at his command and knows how to use the resources necessary to maintain business conditions reasonably stable and healthy and to defeat and punish those who would make selfish gain out of whatever disturbance of conditions they might attempt to induce.

This leads us to consider the grateful fact that the important items of the President's corrective legislation were, practically, carried into law before the war began. The tariff was adjusted, the new currency system was inaugurated, the trust policy was well on the way to definition. The nation is in no mood now and will not likely soon be again to consider problems of constructive legislation with due deliberation. Whatever is to be said by conflicting parties as to the merits of this legislation, every open mind will agree that it is well this legislation is out of the way so that action upon the basis of it may go forward. To the President's promptness and persistence the nation is in deep debt.

But after all that he has done has been set down, it remains to be said that it is the President himself that, more than all else, commands our confidence. What he is imparts assurance to all his fellow-countrymen. He seems to walk constantly upon firm reality. He makes no spectacular gestures. He does not cry or lift up his voice in the streets. He bears an awful personal grief with amazing poise and courage. He seems so evidently at home amid the perplexities and distractions of these taxing hours!

What can be the secret of his genius?

At the bottom of his soul, do you not think, gentle and comfortable reader, that it is just this:

HE COUNTS GOD IN!

If you doubt it, read again that beautiful message from his pen calling the people to prayer next Sunday. No man could write that way to whom God is stranger.

So when we come together in response to his call to pray for the nations at war, for peace and for justice, let us not forget to pray thankfully for Woodrow Wilson, our Christian President.

God bless our President!

What the Questionnaire Has Shown

A Review, an Interpretation, a Bit of the Background and Some Comments.

BY CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.

NOT since I became connected with The Christian Century, more than six years ago, have I taken up my pen with more joy than I now feel in setting down what seem to me to be the important facts disclosed by the questionnaire on the Berkeley church and the action of the Northern California convention. Through four successive issues The Christian Century has been publishing the sentiments and convictions of one hundred leading laymen and ministers of our brotherhood on what every one feels is the most sensitive subject ever raised among our people, a subject about which men are peculiarly timid in giving expression to their opinions, and whose proposed discussion brought to me a body of inhibitive correspondence like which, in fearfulness and caution, I have never received before.

BACKGROUND OF THE QUESTIONNAIRE.

What has appeared in the columns of The Christian Century is but a part of the correspondence elicited by the four questions. The first announcement of the questionnaire brought a few answers for publication but the same mails brought many private letters marked "not for publication," pleading against the open discussion of this problem. "You will only make a bad matter worse," said one. "The breach will be widened by the harsh opinions you will receive," said another. "Your questionnaire will lead inevitably to a split in our brotherhood," solemnly wrote a cautious and consecrated pastor. "My views on this subject are clear enough but they are not for publication, and I do not think anybody's views ought to be published now," wrote a teacher in a college. A clear and deeply earnest reply to the questions came from a prominent official of one of our national missionary societies (not a secretary or salaried employee) accompanied by a personal letter calling my attention to the possible effect upon the receipts of the society if the communication was published, but leaving its publication to my discretion. I replied in part as follows:

> I do not want you to feel that at this present moment it is your duty to speak out publicly on the present issue. There are not many instances where I could give such comfortable advice as this. There are too many of our church leaders who have no pangs of conscience, no sense of strain, in taking the position which I feel in your case it is quite right to take. Our people have suffered, I think, greatly by the complacency of our leaders. We have too often allowed our essential mission to be quite forgotten on account of the interests of our organizations. This has had a baneful ethical effect upon us as a people. We are not like our fathers in this respect.
> It is possible that when the company of those who have expressed themselves as holding to the more generous ideals has become large enough your word could be spoken without hazard to any of the great interests that hinge upon you. However, I do not think there is so much at stake on the practical side as you and some others seem to fear. I feel that the issue is a live one just now, and the discussion may be more or less heated but it will not be long until our people will come to tolerate the more generous practice, even if they do not all share in it.

I received many letters whose tenor was like this one: "Of course you know where I stand on this matter, but I am in a position where it is impracticable for me to speak out. Our people are growing toward freer relations with other Christians, and I feel that my function is to work quietly by educational methods rather than to 'get in bad' with the conservatives. I am glad you have opened the matter up and hope you will be able to get replies to your questions, though I doubt it." One, a college professor and a constructive leader in our brotherhood's life, declared his sympathy with the Berkeley church and his protest against its excommunication from the convention, but felt that it would be a species of "egoism" to give publicity to his opinions. "So much of our money," writes another college man, "comes from a rich man who is known to have very narrow views on these matters that I feel torn between my duty to the college and my duty to help along the movement which Berkeley church and other such churches represent. I really do not know which is the more important duty." "I cannot tell you" writes a pastor who sent an article for publication, "what it may cost me to have given expression to my convictions in this frank way. It is likely to alienate my leading elder from me, though the whole church, with this single exception, would find no fault with my stand." Needless to say his article was not published.

OTHER POINTS OF VIEW.

These are but samples of the correspondence which, with the published replies, form the body of experience out of which I am writing this review of the questionnaire. A counsellor whom I most highly esteem and whose courage has proved an inspiration to less courageous souls at every point where tradition or prejudice has joined issue with ideals during all the years of his public leadership, confessed that his courage failed him in the presence of this issue. "Of course," he said, "the Berkeley church is right, and ultimately the Disciples must come to a truly non-sectarian practice, but there is only one subject upon which our people have a fixed conscience: it is not higher criticism, or delegate convention, or missionary societies, or liberal theology: it is baptism. Any proposal to practice Christian unity which can possibly be construed as reflecting upon the Disciples' traditional position on baptism, even though it does not actually do so, is fated to fail, in this generation at least. If the next generation wants to take up the delicate task it is welcome to it." "All this talk about practicing Christian unity is buncombe," writes a university trained man in a comfortable pastorate whose church is the leading church in his city. "We Disciples are a denomination, a sect, just like the others, and growing faster than any of them, thank God!, and the only thing for us to do is to co-operate with others along the lines of Federation and make ourselves as decent and respectable and efficient a denomination as we can."

MANY REPLIES NOT FOR PUBLICATION.

Of such a character were the replies that came at the first announcement—a few for publication, many not for publication conveying sharp criticism, plaintive and inhibitive counsel, personal but unpublishable sympathy, and, in nearly all, confident expressions of doubt that even those with convictions on the subject would respond in any considerable number or with any degree of candor.

But from the date of the appearance of the first installment the replies for publication increased steadily and the criticism and doubts ceased altogether, while on the two days the forms were closing for the last installment I received as many responses as had been printed in the first two issues, and they have been coming in ever since. The spirit of these replies, both those opposing and those favoring or tolerating the Berkeley practice, is quite as comforting to me as are their contents. Our foreboding correspondent who predicted that they would be "harsh" was wide of the mark. It has been an ideal discussion. The Christian spirit has shone in it all. The replies have been earnest, for the most part candid, and hardly one but has thrown light upon the situation. I wish each correspondent to be assured, and I do "hereby" assure him, of my sincere appreciation of his contribution to the questionnaire.

I.

The first result of the questionnaire for us to set down, therefore, is that, at last, a question that has always been smothered, denied a hearing on the pages of our journals, discussed only in whispers in secluded "retreats," or carried about upon the secret conscience of those who took our plea for unity seriously—that this question has been brought out into the open air and actually talked about calmly by our church leaders, and put in a position where it can continue to be talked about without prejudice or hazard to those who express their honest convictions upon it.

This alone is a great accomplishment. I do not judge nor criticize those who decline to publicly express their convictions on this subject. I strongly sympathize with them in the position in which they are placed. I would not set my conscience in the place of their consciences, nor would any other man who has spoken his convictions presume to judge those that have not. This is a matter in which each must be persuaded in his own mind. But this I do feel, that the reason it has been so delicate a subject to discuss is because it has never been allowed to be discussed. But since it has now been opened up to the light, we may expect a freer, a less constricted, attitude to be taken by those on all sides of the problem.

II.

As to the consensus of opinion on the questions themselves we may begin with the last question first, namely, What can the brotherhood outside of Northern California do to induce the California convention to remedy its error?—assuming, of course, that the convention's action was an error.

The answers have made it clear that no formal thing can be done, and that no one wishes any formal thing done. The suggestions to take the case to a "higher court"—the convention at Atlanta—I interpret as either facetious or simply a strong way of uttering the writers' protest. The General Convention is not related to the state conventions as higher to lower courts. There is no technical or formal relation at all between them.

I believe the raising of this issue in the Atlanta Convention would be most unfortunate, and I have not the slightest fear that it will be raised there, unless by some irresponsible delegate whose motion would, no doubt, be overwhelmingly declared by the body of delegates to be out of order.

Nothing could kill the General Convention quicker than for it to begin to meddle with questions like this.

GENERAL CONVENTION AND BERKELEY

And it would be quite unwarranted to interpret the acceptance of the Berkeley delegates by the General Convention at Atlanta as a reversal of the action of the California convention. The only bearing the presence and participation of Berkeley delegates in the General Convention can possibly have upon the California situation is a moral bearing. It would show no more than that the General Convention is not actuated by the same conceptions that, for a moment in last July, dominated the California convention.

What can be done, however, is precisely what we have been doing: we can clear up the ideas of our brotherhood generally upon these issues by free discussion and the forming of a substantial body of public opinion.

Our questionnaire has brought into clear relief the real character of our missionary conventions, that they are not heresy courts, that they are not interlinked with other conventions in a hierarchy of inferior and superior authority, and that the membership of one convention is limited to that convention only, and determines nothing as to the membership of its successor the next year.

It is therefore not necessary—though love may constrain them to do so—for next year's California convention to take any action whatsoever toward undoing the act of exclusion of this year. Next year's delegates from Berkeley church will be passed upon by a new convention which will have had the advantage of the illuminating discussion aroused by the action of this year's convention.

III.

Taking up now the answers to the third question of the series—Does the convention's action constitute a violation of a fundamental principle of the Disciples?—I must say that while from the beginning I believed profoundly in the clearheadedness of the great majority of our leading pastors and laymen, I hardly expected so nearly unanimous a condemnation of the convention's action in assuming to judge of the orthodoxy of Berkeley church and in excluding it from its missionary fellowship as the questionnaire disclosed. Men who were timid or noncommittal on the practice of the Berkeley church were outspoken in condemnation of the convention for excluding it. And a great majority even of those who disapproved of Berkeley's practice stood four-square and strong against the ecclesiasticism of the convention.

This is the most heartening fact in the whole situation. Whether or not the churches of the Disciples ought to practice unity with all Christians, or with but a selected portion of Christ's followers, is a question that may be left to education and experience and the leadership of God's Spirit to determine. But if the Disciples had reached the place where they could tolerate complacently the policy of excommunication which even the "creed-bound denominations" are fast leaving on one side, all hope of our taking even a second place in the mighty enterprise of Christian unity would have perished.

SOUND ON CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

The questionnaire shows how sound the heart of our people is on the subject of Christian liberty. The half dozen voices that approved the exclusion proceedings did but echo the confusion of the editorial leadership which they follow, instead of thinking clearly for themselves. The rank and file of our people seem clearheaded enough, while our editors are in a lamentable mental confuscation on this whole business of organizing our churches for missionary efficiency and the propagation of our great ideal of Christian unity. Here, for example, are two illustrations giving us a measure of the depth and clearness of their thinking. The editor of one of our national papers told the California convention that they were perfectly right in proceding as their resolution proposed BECAUSE THEY HAD THE RIGHT TO DO SO! The editor of another national paper takes the position that if we have conventions composed of representatives from the churches such conventions must, IN SHEER SELF-DEFENSE, take action excluding from representation in their body those churches held to be irregular in respect to local customs.

This kind of thinking, it is obvious, proceeds upon the denominational plane to which, alas! so many of our leaders have fallen.

It forgets who we Disciples are!

Both editors forgot that our passionate desire is for inclusion, not exclusion; for joyous welcome to all churches of Christ, not finical suspicion and scrutiny; for breadth of mind, of love and of fellowship, not sectarian constriction and isolation.

We do not wish to organize ourselves on the basis of our technical RIGHTS, but on the basis of our love to Christ and all his churches and followers.

And to talk of "self-defense" against a church of Christ that desires to co-operate with us in doing his work, is to insult us, and to wound Him!

DR. POWELL'S DECLARATION.

All this has been clearly discerned by our questionnaire respondents. It shows how much more discerning they are than our editors! On the subject of Christian liberty as related to the historic position of the Disciples there is probably no man among us who possesses an insight and an intelligent grasp equal to that of Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville. In his answer to this third question he voices ringingly what I believe is the sentiment of ninety-five out of every hundred of our informed churchmen. He says:

> If the action of the California convention should be approved generally by our churches or our leaders, it would mean the acceptance of ecclesiastical authority, a thing which all of our churches together could not confer upon any organization and which if they could confer would mean to write "Ichabod" on the face of the religious movement which has for a hundred years most clearly and definitely fought against ecclesiastical authority and vigorously contended for the Protestantism which has as its very life blood Christian liberty within the limitations imposed by the authority of Christ.

Of no thing am I more certain than this, that the Disciples of Christ never will tolerate in their movement an organized court of orthodoxy, neither one frankly avowing itself as such nor one disguised under the title of a missionary convention. If my faith on this point needed strengthening it has been decisively confirmed by the questionnaire.

IV.

As to the practice of the Berkeley church itself, dealt with in questions 1 and 2, there is so much to say, and so much more is quite certain to be said in future days, that I think I shall say but little here and now. I, of course, feel that the keeping of an open door to all Christians is the nub and essence of the practice of Christian unity. It is not all of Christian unity, by any means, but without it any plea for unity is contradicted before it leaves our lips.

The most significant sign of a new day of power, and of a new kind of power, among us Disciples is the dawning of this perception upon our churches and ministers. I use the word "dawning" advisedly. The vision of the larger fellowship and the richer life for our people is coming to us very gradually, has been coming for two decades very silently, but its reality and imperativeness are now indisputable. We Disciples have received a commission which we have never fully delivered. Becoming absorbed in a single detail, or a few details, of the commission, we forgot the heart of the message and the task. We are awaking in these latter days to a consciousness of an incomparably larger and more significant function for our movement than we have been previously aware of. The new consciousness brings with it a certain disillusionment, and there is not lacking, too, a sense of shame. I have thought again and again of the statement by Mr. J. B. White, one of Iowa's most prominent lawyers, who in replying to our questionnaire declares frankly and flatly:

> I must say, however, that I regard our insistence upon Christian unity in so far as we have demanded conformance to "our" doctrines and practices as a condition of such unity, as essentially insincere and dishonest, and I think the masses of our people are getting ashamed of it.

I believe Mr. White comes nearer describing the state of mind of our people than does the statement of my friend, quoted above, who speaks about the singular acuteness of the Disciples' conscience on the baptism question. I do not believe the traditional position of the Disciples in making immersion a condition of fellowship is a matter of profound conscience to our people at all. In the heart of us we are ashamed of it. And it is the conflict of pride and shame that makes it a sensitive subject. Our sermons on immersion are, to the initiated, becoming more and more perfunctory and hollow. We have no passion for it any more. Our pastors, for the most part, relegate the preaching of it to the imported evangelist. The men and women of our churches are interested in vaster problems, more human tasks, more divine imperatives. And the new spiritual life of the age is making us Disciples ashamed of every formal or technical thing that separates us from any of God's children.

Reading not only the explicit statements of our respondents but between the lines of many of their replies, I take profound satisfaction in the fact that The Christian Century has afforded the first channel through which this dawning conviction of an infinitely greater commission for our people has expressed itself. We are coming to see that the Disciples do not stand for an ordinance, nor a doctrine, but for a fellowship—a fellowship as wide as the fellowship of Christ.

In Prison

How a Christian Chaplain Does Christ's Work.

BY ROBERT BARTON.

THERE is a little park outside the Indiana State Prison, carefully laid out and well tended. It must appear wonderfully beautiful to the men who enter it through the broad gate that leads out from imprisonment. But there are flowers inside the walls; wherever a bit of ground could be spared there shines a little plot of grass or a bed of pretty flowers. Two green-houses furnish fresh blossoms for the sick in the hospitals. But flowers cannot make up for the difference between liberty and its loss. They cannot supply human companionship.

THE DREAD OF A NEW EXPERIENCE.

A school trustee, a good man, in a moment of weakness defaulted and for his misstep was sentenced to serve a term in prison. He had never visited a penitentiary, and the word to him connoted stripes, damp, dark cells, bread-and-water. When the prison chaplain talked with him in the receiving cell, he found the man terrified with the thought of what lay before him. A friendly conversation eased his mind, a glance about disillusioned him concerning the stripes and the other imaginary horrors. But still he was afraid and the chaplain knew why.

"Are you afraid to stay in the cell alone tonight?" he asked kindly. The man admitted that he dreaded the experience, and the chaplain promised him a companion.

A COMRADE FOR A LONELY MAN.

From a list of several who might have qualified, he selected an inmate who he knew would be of comfort to the new arrival, and the two men spent the night together in the cell. It was a surprise and a relief to the ex-trustee to find his companion a man of intelligence, clean, and in spite of his position, self-respecting. They were together for several nights, and when the newer man went to his own cell he went with courage to face his sentence manfully.

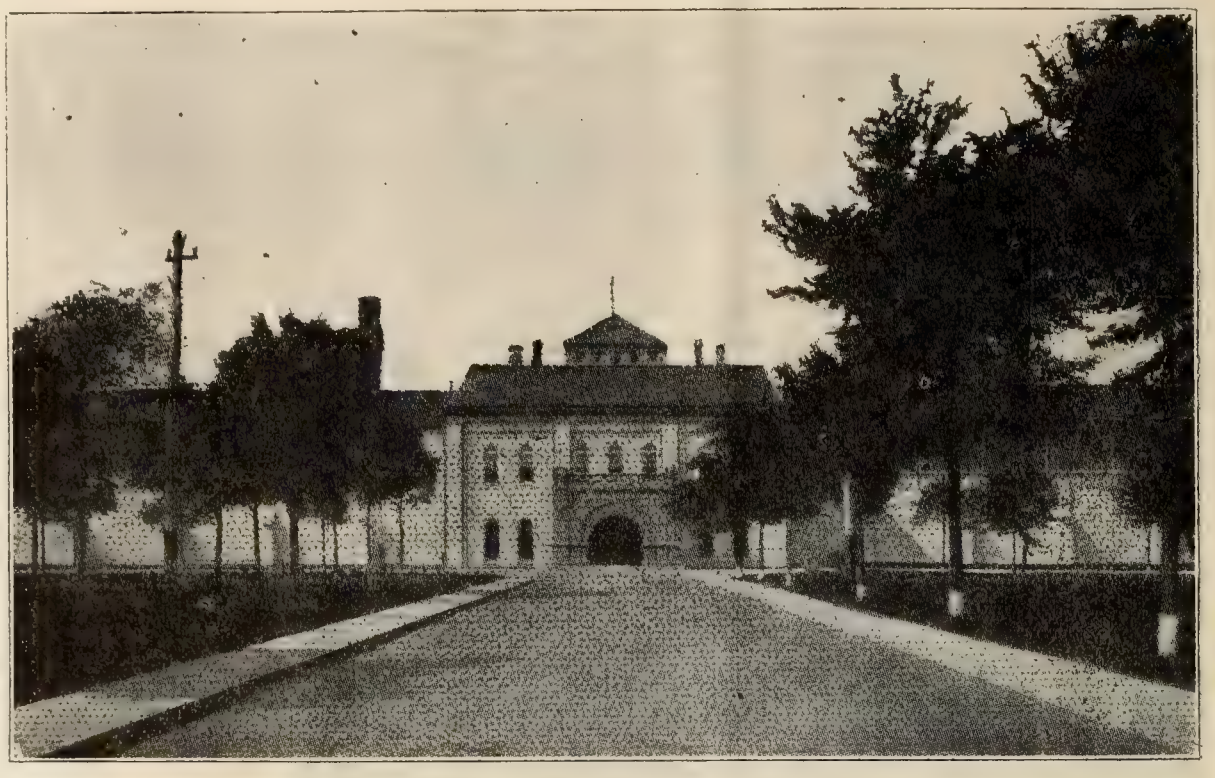
It was a little thing to do, this bringing of a companion to a lonely man. It was a little thing, to anyone but the man. He never forgot it, and in each letter to the chaplain he mentions it gratefully, for the chaplain is still there, but the man is not. He is ably filling a position of trust and respect. Many of the things that fill the chaplain's day are "little things" but no prisoner would admit them to be.

THE PRISON CHAPLAIN.

In the warden's office there hangs a large chart, classifying the prisoners according to counties, nationalities, creeds, and in every possible way. There are two Congregationalists in the prison, although the chart only shows one. This is because the chaplain can get out whenever he pleases; but in the eight years he has been there, Orville L. Kiplinger has not found much time to be outside. His days are very full and his duties many.

Perhaps his most important task is to change the mental attitudes of the prisoners as they arrive, for he is the first man to interview each incoming man. It takes patient and friendly argument to prove to an arrival that the institution is in no way responsible for his coming, that it can derive no benefit or pleasure from his imprisonment, and that it has only his betterment as its purpose.

"If I can convince him of this," said Mr. Kiplinger, "I can be sure that he will do his best to obey the rules and that he will leave with the determination to stay outside. That is why we put all the men in the first grade at once, because we believe that they are going to make their best effort toward a new start. It is only when a prisoner breaks over the regulations that we reduce his grade, and you can see from the figures how it works. Of the 1,139 here, only 37 are in the second grade, and most of those will prove themselves worthy and be put back in the first."



Indiana State Prison, Main Entrance, Michigan City, Ind.

It is greatly to a prisoner's advantage to be in the first grade, for he must serve in that standing for three months before his application can come before the Parole Board. When his rank is reduced, he remains in the second grade six months before he is reinstated, and the process defers his parolment nine months. The only apparent difference between the two ranks is the difference between the blue uniform and one of dull grey plaid, but beneath the cloth is a difference the prisoner feels and tries to remove. He feels the glances of his fellow inmates, and the disappointment of the chaplain, for none knows the men better than he. He passes among them at their work and in their cells; they come to him and talk with him, and when he says, "I'm glad to see you back in first, Jenkins," the prisoner murmurs, "Thank you," in a way that means appreciation and a determination not to fall again.

A PART OF THE CHAPLAIN'S DAY.

The men come to Mr. Kiplinger on every possible errand. The "professional interviewers" who come merely to talk and thus to gain a respite from their work are soon recognized, and the privilege is denied them. But these are comparatively few, for the men who come to the chaplain's office come with a heart story. A life prisoner who committed his crime in boyhood and has served twenty years comes to tell his story and to ask for a good word to the Parole Board. Next comes a big negro, serving his third sentence.

"Ah's no mean man, Chaplain," he explains, "co'se Ah's done a few things, but that was when Ah was agitated and ma haid was in an uproah." To him the chaplain gives words of encouragement and friendly advice to guard his temper.

A young college graduate, a spoiled son, comes to complain that his work is too hard and that his officer "has it in for him." The chaplain points out the eleven hundred men who never need a reprimand and frankly tells him to quit his whining and be a man.

And there are cases like that of the man who comes to the chaplain in despondency. "I haven't heard from my family in over two months," he says. "I'm afraid that something has happened and that they don't want me to know." The chaplain knows the real situation but all he tells the prisoner is a cheering message. The inmate's family are all in positions of prominence and they shun him as one unclean. Only they and the chaplain know that no letter has ever come to him except those for which the chaplain has written and pleaded.

There was an element of sad humor in the case of the man who wanted to write a book and have the chaplain correct it. An examination proved him insane.

INDUSTRY AND PSYCHOLOGY.

The chaplain's first visit with the prisoner brings out many facts that are of value, both as a matter of record and as an aid to the man. Mr. Kiplinger keeps a card index of each inmate and his advice is frequently sought by the Parole Board. From each prisoner he learns his record, his own statement, his occupation and individual details that help in a personal understanding of each case. Of course each man cannot be put at his own trade, but those who cannot be so placed are taught another before they leave. The progression from rough stone chipping to tomb-stone engraving and polishing is rapid, taking into consideration the unskilled condition of the men who come to work in the big building where monuments are made. Other men work in the kitchens, tailor shops, and different parts of the institution, but the great majority are divided between the monument works, the furniture factory, twine mill and rat trap factory.

It is an odd occupation for prisoners, the making of rat traps, but it should breed philosophers. "If a man can preach a better sermon, or write a better book, or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he live in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door." The authorship of the quotation is still a matter of dispute, but its wisdom is universally accepted. They make good rat traps at Michigan City; not the kind with a spring, crashing down like a guillotine, but the good old-fashioned wire cage rat traps with a prison door that swings only one way. What do the men think as they twist and bend the strong wires? Do they see any analogy between the steel wires and the twenty-foot stone walls? Do they leave any loose wires or any weak hinges? It is doubtful if any rat ever escaped from a prison-made trap.

WORK AND PLAY.

The dexterity of the furniture makers is interesting to see; the fastest man in the factory is a negro murderer in whose hands the big coils of rattan assume the shapes of porch chairs and swings. The twine mill is a great dusty building where an incessant roar like a giant waterfall drowns out all other sounds. Here an army of men work making and reeling binder twine for harvesting machines. More pleasant is the work of the members of the band, who have as their task the learning and playing of music for all occasions. There are twenty-three men, fourteen of whom are in for life. The leader is a murderer as well as a musician and composer. The band played before the annual gathering of the Indiana society held in Michigan City this year, and their concert was heartily applauded. They have a repertoire of about 400 pieces of assorted classifications, and they play their numbers well. The men enjoy playing and count their performance a large part of the weekly ball game.

THE DRILL GROUND.

At one end of the prison enclosure is a large drill ground, and each Saturday afternoon the entire population of the penitentiary witnesses a game of major league ball between two of the four prison teams. The teams are designated by the color of their socks, and each is loyally supported by a crowd of hoarse voiced fans who yell for the Red Sox or the White Sox. There is more batting than in a major league game; the onlookers like long hits, greeting each fly with choruses that echo between the buildings and the grey wall. For the White Sox the battery is Miller and Darling; for the Blue Sox, Fisher and Doughty. Though the Blue Sox fell before the White Sox with the ignominious score of 17-8, both teams played good ball, and it was a game worth watching. Once the ball, flying in a wide arc, hit the high wall, and the warden, laughing, explained that over the fence was not "out" in any sense of the word. When the game is over the men come down from the bleachers and fall into military formation with soldierly regularity. The band plays while they march back to their cell houses, and in five minutes the field is deserted.

One of the best features of the present prison system is the adult probation act, under which a prisoner, upon recommendation of the Parole Board, is permitted to leave the prison, and is found a position with some employer, who, knowing that the man has served a sentence, still is willing to give him another chance. The paroled man, for a year, is required to be steadily employed, to be strictly temperate, to avoid questionable people and places and to render a monthly cash account. Where under the old system seventy per cent were back in prison within a year, under the new method seventy-four make good permanently.

MODERN PRISON METHODS.

There remains in one of the cell houses a cell such as was used before penologists conceived the idea of treating prisoners as men. It is dark and unhealthy, but it is the only one in the whole institution in that condition, and it is never used. The men respond in a convincing way to the opportunity given them to prove themselves worthy members of society. To some of them there comes a sense of the need of spiritual guidance; these make up a long list of names waiting for admission to the chaplain's limited Bible class. Knowing that membership is voluntary, and that no shortening of their term or other reward will come as a result of attendance, yet the men eagerly seek the privilege. The men read their Bibles and study earnestly the printed sheets of questions distributed quarterly. Church service is well attended; in fact, most of the men go both to the Catholic mass early Sunday morning and to the Protestant service which follows. There is a night school at the prison, the capacity of which is crowded with eager learners. The library of 12,000 volumes is used by 900 of the inmates. The men appreciate the opportunities of their restricted environment, and make use of them.

But even were it possible it would not be good to breed in the prisoners a love for the institution that would make them want to stay. That the danger of this is slight is shown by the eagerness with which the prisoners welcome any connection with the outside world. High above the prison buildings reaches a water tower which supplies the institution. A long iron ladder scales its steep sides, and from its top the country for miles around is visible.

"The men would love to climb it if we would let them," Mr. Kiplinger said. "Every little while someone comes to me and says, 'Chaplain, don't you think the water tower needs painting?' They would like to keep it in a constant state of redecoration. But it is better for them to get outside and see the tower than for them to get on the tower and see outside."

THE VALUE OF WASTE.

In Italy, tomato packers remove the seeds before they can the vegetables. The resulting waste has been considerable. Now, after many experiments, chemists have found a way to make use of the seeds. They first dry them carefully in ovens, and then sift them, to remove the woody fibre. They next pass them between heated millstones, which reduce them to a kind of pulp. Hydraulic presses force the oil from the mass, and press the pulp into slabs of uniform size. Tests conducted at the Portici Agricultural Station show that the oilcake residue is nutritious, and that cattle thrive on it. The oil, too, has a commercial value, for vegetable oils of all kinds are in demand.

BASEBALL PITCHING MACHINE.

Automatic baseball, played on an inclosed court, is a novel game introduced on the Pacific coast this season, reports Popular Mechanics. It is played with the assistance of a mechanical pitcher which twirls regulation-size balls to the batter. In front of the player is an inclined canvas "field," marked into four bases. At the top of the canvas there is a spiral net catcher, which captures the balls and returns them to the machine. A bucketlike conveyor at the rear of this lifts the balls into position, so that by the operation of a lever the pitching arm picks up a ball. By means of a trip, the arm is released and the sum of the points earned by placing the batted balls in the various sections or divisions, known as first, second, third and home base. The batter's score is the ball thrown to the batter.

SEVEN YEAR OLD GENIUS.

Music lovers of England have been watching with incredulity and utter bewilderment the remarkable performances of Willy Ferrero, a seven-and-a-half-year-old boy who has been conducting one of the large symphony orchestras in London. Absolutely unconscious of his unusual ability, unable to read a single note and entirely unmindful of such things as scores, the boy, according to the critics of Britain, directs the great organization with the hand of a master. Taking London by storm, however, is not his first achievement. At the age of four years he conducted the imperial orchestra before the Russian court. While almost a prodigy of prodigies, he at the same time is 100 per cent boy, with sugar cakes, toy automobiles, blocks and tops foremost among his interests.

AUTOS OF PLASTER.

A French manufacturer of automobiles is making the bodies of his cars of plaster. He makes a framework of wood, on which he tacks wire netting. Then, with palette and trowel, he covers the wire netting with the plastic material, which he spreads smoothly. When the coating has set, it is dressed down with planes.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE CHRISTMAS SHIP.

IT is just like that versatile and far-visioned newspaper man, Mr. James Keeley, editor of the Chicago Herald, to conceive a unique plan of carrying substantial aid to the suffering and innocent children of war-stricken Europe and to drop his plan into the mind of the peaceful and prosperous American people right at the psychological moment. Nobody in this land of the free cares about doing anything for the crowned leaders and instigators of this insane war, but everybody will be glad to respond to the appeal of the children in devastated Belgium and Servia and France and Austria and Russia and Germany.

The very first announcement of the plan to send a Christmas ship, laden with clothing and money as a gift from America to the children of Europe, touched the heart of Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark, editor of The Conquest, who straightway arranged with Mr. Keeley for his paper to collaborate with the Herald in loading the great ship with Christmas gifts.

The Herald will enlist the philanthropy of the general public and The Conquest will organize the sentiment and enlist the gifts of churches and Sunday Schools, especially those of the Disciples of Christ. This is a large undertaking, but so obviously a blessed one that one cannot doubt that Mr. Clark and The Conquest will receive widespread support from all generous hearts of our brotherhood.

"A SEPARATE PEOPLE."

IN an apparently innocuous phrase occurring often in the literature of the Disciples of Christ there lurks a subtle suggestion which has acted with cumulative effect through the years until it has profoundly modified the earlier temper of this movement for Christian unity.

Certain writers are accustomed to speak of the time when the Disciples became "a separate people" and to refer to the movement as "a separate body." While they have always refused to use the term "denomination" as applied to this "separate body," they have recently fallen into the habit of referring to it as a "communion," and even "a separate communion," and to the denominations as "other communions."

The difficulties in the way of providing a satisfactory nomenclature for such an idealistic enterprise as the Disciples started out to be we freely acknowledge. The Christian Century is not without guilt with respect to the use of that term "communion." But the subtlest harm comes, we believe, from the phrase, "a separate people." For those whose high and single aim it is to practice and proclaim Christian unity to cultivate the consciousness of being separate from other Christians is sad irony.

But are not the Disciples a separate people? To look at us and at the things we are doing and, sad to say, at the spirit with which some of us speak of and act toward our Christian neighbors of various names, we surely appear like a separate people and, in some respects, an isolated people.

But in so far as we have conceived ourselves to be thus separate from and, in any sense, independent of our Christian brethren of the denominations we have failed to grasp and practice the essential principle of our movement for Christian unity.

The Disciples' movement is not a movement AWAY FROM other churches of Christ, but a movement TOWARD all churches of Christ—and toward vital and organic fellowship with them.

We are "a separate people" in the sense that we have separated ourselves from the denominational order; we are striving not to be a denomination.

But we have separated ourselves from denominationalism because to be implicit in denominationalism separates us from large sections of the Church of Christ. We are striving not to be a denomination in order that we may unite ourselves in the untrammeled practice of Christian unity with all churches of Christ—not alone with those churches which, with us, have consciously left the denominational order but with those also which are still implicit in the denominational order. We are at one with them because they are, like our own churches, churches of Christ. We are at variance with them only in those things which pertain to the denominational order.

This conception of our movement is elemental and historic. On any other basis than this our century of history and our present existence is either an impertinence, or a hypocrisy.

And this basic conception, clearly grasped and conscientiously lived up to, will create in us a more liberal spirit than we have shown toward other Christians and a freer practice of inter-congregational fellowship and intercourse with all churches of Christ.

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

To Friends of The Christian Century Attending the Atlanta Convention.

THE Disciples Publication Society is arranging to have its first annual meeting and conference during Convention week at Atlanta, Oct. 7-14 at the First Christian Church. Memberships in the Society have not yet been formally issued though they have been earned by many churches, Sunday Schools and individuals. To this first meeting of the Society the friendly public is cordially invited. All persons having the welfare of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society at heart, in however slight a degree, will be not only welcomed but are requested to attend.

In addition to the report of the business of the Society there will be speeches by C. C. Morrison, H. L. Willett, E. L. Powell, Peter Ainslie, H. D. C. Maclachlan and others. The affairs of the Disciples Publication Society are not private affairs. This entire publication enterprise is the public property of the Disciples of Christ. It has no capital stock, but is organized on the same basis as our missionary societies. It is, in truth, itself a missionary Society, doing missionary work in education and Christian unity and receiving support of generous people who believe in the importance of the work it is doing. It is fitting, therefore that its meetings should be held during the week of the great missionary conventions.

This meeting will be one of the most interesting of the entire week. The problem of creating a journalism that will earnestly and effectively interpret to the Christian world the Disciples' plea for Christian unity; the unique service rendered by The Christian Century to the spiritual life and thought of the Disciples; the extraordinary opportunity which The Christian Century today faces; and the privilege of our churches, Sunday Schools and forward-looking men and women to have fellowship with the editors and other workers in the unselfish ministry which The Christian Century is carrying on—these are some of the themes whose discussion will surely make a program in itself quite well worth going to Atlanta to enjoy.

Information as to the specific day and hour of the meeting will be given out at the exhibit booth of the Disciples Publication Society in Convention Hall, and announcement will be made from the platform of the Convention or in the daily bulletin.

THE PASSING OF THE BROTHERHOODS.

EXTREMELY drastic—perhaps not wholly fair, but certainly not without substantial justification—are the words of Mr. Charles Stelzle at the grave of the denominational Brotherhoods. These Brotherhoods were born to get men, as men, interested in religion and the Church. Many a pastor, and all the religious papers, hailed their appearance with enthusiasm and relief. Recently, however, the Presbyterian Brotherhood and the Congregational Brotherhood have died and the Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ seems to be about to follow them. Mr. Stelzle does not believe in speaking soft words at the funeral, but makes a diagnosis and a judgment as searching as his singularly intimate knowledge of their cases gives him the unique right to make. He says:

The Brotherhoods of the American Protestant churches have literally dug their graves with their teeth. Instead of being inspired by Mazzini's call, "Come and suffer," they were fooled by the swan song, "Come and eat."

It was almost pathetic how the Church sighed, "it is done," when these Brotherhoods were organized. Now all the problems of the Church would be solved, for had not the men of the Church said that the women had been faithful long enough—they themselves would do the job in real man fashion! But even while they yet spake, the women were lined around the walls of the banqueting hall, with trays and towels in hand, feeding these valiant soldiers, who took it all out in songs and speeches and sandwiches.

Scarcely a single National Brotherhood has made good. Here and there a local organization has accomplished a good piece of work, but even most of the local Brotherhoods have "flattened tires." Some are still being thrilled by inspirational addresses delivered by spell-binders who are great favorites on such occasions, but who never got within a thousand miles of the real job. They know the latest jokes, and they work out great schemes which are propelled by hot air, but nothing happens.

The problem of the masculine element in the Church still remains with us, Mr. Stelzle asserts. If a special masculine organization is not the solution we must still manfully face the problem until it is solved. "What, religiously, is to become of us men?"—that is the most important question he says.

The women can run the Church, and maybe the Church will continue to do the kind of work it (or she) has been doing for many a year, but what will become of the men who consider that they have done their full duty when they have permitted the women to wait on them at the Brotherhood banquet? The churches are facing a very serious situation in this particular. The men constitute just one-third of the membership in the churches today. The fact of the matter is, however, the men who are in the churches are for the most part middle-aged and old men. The young men are not being won or held by the Church. What will happen when the middle-aged men become old men and the old men die off?

No answer to this question is given by Mr. Stelzle. But it grows increasingly clear to the deeper students of modern Church life that not until the Church abandons the entertainment program and the delusive so-called "institutional church" program, and really and in dead earnest takes up the program of personal religion will men's loyalties be enlisted in her work.

ECCLESIASTICISM AND ECCLESIASTICISM.

EVEN the most charitable disposition finds it impossible to impute fairmindedness to the attempt of the Christian Standard, by the use of parallel columns, to play two editorials, appearing a year apart in The Christian Century, against each other. This is the way it was done:

And as to the cry of "ecclesiasticism" The Christian Century frankly says that it believes in ecclesiasticism. It believes that every local church of Christ is, and should regard itself as being, subordinate to the whole church of Christ.—Christian Century, Sept. 25, 1913.

Sec. Graham Frank's communication in this issue opens with this clean-cut declaration: "If the General Convention is an ecclesiasticism, I want nothing more to do with it, unless it be to help bury it." So say we all of us.—Christian Century, Sept. 17, 1914.

Readers of the Standard have no reason, after reading that and the editor's coarse comments upon it, to doubt that The Christian Century is indeed an inconsistent, loose-speaking and probably an insincere organ. But if the Standard had given just the very next sentence of the earlier editorial it would have put an altogether different light on the statements it did quote. The next sentence reads thus:

The kind of ecclesiasticism we are opposed to is denominational ecclesiasticism, the subordination of a local church of Christ to a part, and that an artficial part, of the Church of Christ.

Had these words been printed it would have been plain to every Standard reader that, to The Christian Century, the word "ecclesiasticism" is an ambiguous word: there are at least two "kinds" of ecclesiasticism. The kind to which Secretary Graham Frank referred was clearly defined in his article whose opening sentence we heartily approved. The "denominational ecclesiasticism" of the California convention both Mr. Frank and The Christian Century as well as the Christian Standard, and, we believe, ninety-nine per cent of the intelligent membership of our brotherhood disapproves. The Christian Century has not changed its attitude toward ecclesiasticism. In the issue of Jan. 1, 1914, we had this to say about it:

"Ecclesiasticism" it is a bugaboo word. It conjures up pictures of tyranny and autocracy and creed making and heresy trials. It revives memories of medievalism. It suggests the union of church and state as in Spain and in England.

It is unfortunate that the word has fallen into bad repute. It is in its make-up a good word and denotes a good thing. Like "Higher Criticism" which the late Professor McGarvey always stoutly defended as a legitimate and helpful science, it has come to stand in the popular mind for the abuse of the good thing which its proper use connotes. To say a man is a "higher critic" is, in certain circles to condemn him, notwithstanding Prof. McGarvey always insisted that he was himself a higher critic.

Likewise to classify a plan of church organization as an "ecclesiasticism" is in similar circles, to condemn it without regard to its inherent merits.

What, then, in its good and proper sense, does "ecclesiasticism" mean? It means that these free churches, or "ecclesiae" are and should regard themselves as being part of and subordinate to the whole Church of Christ. It means that they are articulated in an organization larger than any one of them, through which they are able to serve certain ends which they could not serve in isolation. It means that the local church accepts its place as a member of the social organism, the Church of Christ. It means that the idea of the Body of Christ is made real and visible in a practical co-operative unity.

The Disciples of Christ are committed to the view that the true ecclesiastical relations of a church of Christ should be had with the whole Church or Body of Christ, beginning with all other churches of Christ in its own community and extending in widening circles to the last church in the ends of the earth. Our protest against denominationalism is based upon the ground that it renders impossible this ideal ecclesiastical relationship. It divides churches into sets or sects, and those of one set have no ecclesiastical relations with those of another set.

The ecclesiasticism which our readers have been so vigorously condemning in the editor's questionnaire is denominational ecclesiasticism, the ecclesiasticism that says to a church of Christ: You cannot co-operate with "us" in Christ's work because you do not conform to "our" beliefs and customs.

The exclusion of the Berkeley church of Christ from the missionary fellowship of certain other churches of Christ in Northern California makes those churches of Christ an "ecclesiastical denomination," the very thing we Disciples set out not to be.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF THE SHINGLE.

SALEM, Mass., is to rebuild without using wooden shingles. She is convinced that in time of fire the shingle, light and dry, and carried afar by the rushing currents of air, is as dangerous an instrument of arson as could have been invented. But the shingle has its uses. There is a legend of a prince who cried for the moon. The queen said he must have it, so the king ordered the astronomers and all men with ladders to hand it down. But they failed, and the prince still cried, and grew ill. Then came the doctors, who failed to cure him, one by one, till the last, who ordered the prince to be treated with a shingle. Sorrowfully the king applied it, as the physician directed, and the prince forgot all about wanting the moon, and recovered. In time the prince became king, and he made a law that every family should procure and keep on hand a shingle. That was a long time ago, and the shingle has gone much out of fashion as an instrument of education. Perhaps we shall live to remember the shingle as something that once had uses, various and sundry, but which has become totally obsolete.

Religious Census of Warring Peoples.

The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate has been led by inquiries of a correspondent to give the religious census of the nations involved in the war. It finds that in the years named the figures were as follows: In 1910 the population of the German Empire was 64,925,993, divided thus: Protestants, 39,991,425; Roman Catholics, 23,821,453; Jews, 615,021. Austria's population in 1910 was 28,571,934: Roman Catholics, 22,530,000; Greek Catholics, 3,417,000; Orthodox Greeks, 666,000; Protestants, 588,000; Jews, 1,314,000. Hungary's population in 1910 was 29,886,487; Roman Catholics, 10,888,338; Greek Catholics, 2,025,425; Orthodox Greeks, 2,986,874; Protestants, 3,961,696; Jews, 932,406. France's population in 1911 was 39,602,258: Roman Catholics, 38,500,000; Protestants, 650,000; Jews, 75,000. England's (the United Kingdom) population in 1911 was 45,370,530; 40,000,000 are Protestants, 5,000,000 Roman Catholics, and 250,000 Jews. Russia's population in 1912 was 173,359,000; of these about 34,000,000 are in Asia; Orthodox Greeks, 87,123,600; Dissenters, 2,204,600; Armenians, 1,218,080; Roman Catholics, 11,468,000; Lutherans, 3,572,650; other Protestants, 194,280; Jews, 5,228,700; Mohammedans, 13,907,000. Belgium's population in 1910 was 7,423,784; Roman Catholics, 6,712,415; Protestants, 27,900; Jews, 13,200. Servia's population in 1910 was 2,911,701, most of whom belong to the National Church, which is Orthodox Eastern, or Greek Catholic. There are 8,500 Roman Catholics, and a small number of Protestants.

The Religious Citizenship League.

The Religious Citizenship League is described by the Watchman-Examiner as "a new militant organization, through which the religious people of the country will be invited to co-operate in the interest of good government." According to its constitution its aim is: "To interest, educate and unite men and women, especially the members of churches, synagogues and other religious or ethical bodies, in securing the enactment and enforcement of legislative measures for the industrial and social welfare of all the people." The movement is to be nation-wide in its membership and world-wide in its activities. Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, the president, is the author of "Christianity and the Social Crisis,' and professor in Rochester theological seminary. Among the vice-presidents are Dr. Josiah Strong of the American institute of social service; Dr. Washington Gladden, a veteran in Christian social thought; Bishop McDowell of the Northern Methodist Episcopal church, and Bishop Hendrix of the Southern. Other vice-presidents are Edwin Markham, the poet; Jane Addams and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman. The general secretary of the league is Dr. W. D. P. Bliss, who was the originator of the idea, and is the editor of the Encyclopedia of Social Reform. The treasurer is William Foulke, treasurer of the American Bible Society. Among other members of the league are Dr. Clark of the Christian Endeavor Society, Dean Robbins of the General Theological Seminary, Drs. Thomas C. Hall and Charles P. Fagnani of the Union Theological Seminary, Norman Hapgood, Rev. Jonathan C. Day and Drs. Percy S. Grant, J. Howard Melish, Henry S. Coffin, Frank O. Hall, John Haynes Holmes, J. Herman Randall and Christian F. Reisner. Dr. Stephen S. Wise of the Free synagogue has been active in it from the first.

New Zealand and Bible Reading.

New Zealand will have soon a referendum vote on the question of Bible-reading and religious instruction in the public schools. The bill to be voted on provides for the reading in public schools of selected Bible lessons from a reading book to be provided by the Department of Education, no sectarian teaching to be allowed. Provision is made also for religious instruction within school hours to children by a minister of their own denomination. Any parent will have the right, if he chooses to do so, to withdraw his children from the Bible-reading or religious instruction.

A Startling Situation.

Henry W. Adams, founder of the Christian Work, New York, now living in Chicago, writes in the Boston Transcript: "We find the following startling statement in the reports of a grand evangelical denomination: In one state alone 209 of their churches received not one member on confession during the year 1913, and sixty-one others received only one each. In our entire country, on this basis, there must be thousands of such churches. If these were cotton mills, in place of churches, the stockholders would put them out of business in short order."

Brooklyn's New Y. M. C. A. Home.

Plans for the new $1,000,000 building of Brooklyn's central branch of the Young Men's Christian Association have been completed. The building will be thirteen stories high, with living accommodations for 600. The auditorium will seat more than 700 persons. The plans also call for three large gymnasiums, which will be larger than any in the city. The site, on Hanson place, directly opposite the Long Island Railway station, was bought last year for $250,000.

Railway to Antioch.

It has been announced that an American woman, a Presbyterian, whose name is not disclosed as yet, has furnished the entire sum necessary to build a narrow gauge railway to ancient Antioch in Western Asia, and to carry on the excavations there. It is believed that these investigations will reveal much valuable information concerning New Testament history and times, and particularly concerning the travels of Paul.

Christianity in Madagascar.

A writer in The East and the West states that from Tananarive, the capital of Madagascar, 200 churches can be seen with the help of a field glass and 150 with the naked eye! A missionary organization of the Madagascar Christians called Isan-Emin-Bolana supports thirteen evangelists in the northern part of the island, and this is not the only such missionary society. Its meetings are held every six months at the capital and fully 10,000 delegates attend them. There are separate meetings for men, for women, for youths, for girls.

Chinese Christianity Thrives.

The Missionary Review of the world says that the latest statistics of evangelical church membership in the republic of China give 470,000. The churches are served by 546 ordained Chinese pastors and 5,364 unordained workers. There are also 4,712 Chinese Christian school teachers, 1,789 Bible women, and 496 native assistants in the hospitals, Chinese Christians contributed last year $320,900 for Christian work. There are 85,241 Chinese boys and girls in the primary and day schools of the Christian church and 31,384 students in the intermediate high schools and colleges maintained by the evangelical church.

Methodists to Push Social Service.

Bishop Hendrix, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been appointed supervisor of the Biblical Department of the Church and School Service Bureau recently organized in New York. He will have associated with him in this work President Hibben of Princeton, Dr. Josiah Strong and Dr. Edward Judson.

Congregationalists to Meet.

At the New England Congregational Congress to hold its fourth meeting in Boston November 1 and 2, the following topics will be discussed: The Vision of God, The New England Conscience, The Open Bible in the Heart, A Free Pulpit, The Standing and Tenure of the Ministry, a Democratic Church, Christian Democracy the Guarantee of Universal Peace, The Christian Commonwealth, The Promise of American Life and Responsibility for the World's Redemption.

Church Union in Western Canada.

Practical church union is making steady progress in Western Canada, and the second annual conference of the churches interesting was called at Regina, Saskatchewan, for September 15. The basis adopted is the statement agreed upon for the larger union of Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists, with an Advisory Counsel of representatives from these bodies and one from the union churches.

Stanley's Work Bears Fruit.

Thirty-six years ago, Stanley, passing through the Yakusa region of the Congo, was obliged to frighten the hostile flotillas of the natives, which attempted to bar his passage, with the reverberations of blank discharges. Recently two missionaries, leaving for England, passed through their river parish, 140 kilometers in length, on a sort of triumphal progress. At short distances all along the route, canoes would put out, the natives on which shouted messages of friendship and affection, as they accompanied the ship Endeavor on its course. These people were from the very numerous villages along the Congo at which the mission had stationed teachers. At Yakusa an enormous crowd awaited on a high elevation the arrival of the missionaries, filling up the time with the singing of hymns.

Christian World Comment on the Disciples and the California Excommunication

THE CONTINENT (PRESBYTERIAN.)

The Northern California convention of the Disciples of Christ expelled its congregation at Berkeley because the Berkeley people, although permitting no baptism but immersion in their own church, yet received unimmersed Christians from other denominations on letters of transfer. The congregation in question, when called on for its defense, said it was simply practicing Christian unity—the thing in which Alexander Campbell said his followers should be chiefly interested. But the convention quickly and plainly and by a very large majority showed that the thing it was concerned for was not unity with other Christians, but the building up of an exclusive immersionist denomination. The Christian Century, Disciple organ published at Chicago, has been very brave in saying that action like this in California makes absurd the claim of the Disciples to be pleading for the reunion of Christendom. The Christian Century is right in that judgment, but it has merely discovered in this one example the all-prevailing reason why the movement that Campbell began has never counted in the slightest for that reunion of churches which it has constantly proclaimed as its sole object.

THE ADVANCE (CONGREGATIONAL)

DISCIPLES AND CHURCH UNION.

Excepting only the Episcopalians, no denomination talks so much about church union or shows itself so remote from the spirit of it as the Disciples. Once again has the world witnessed the failure of an attempt to secure a more inclusive Christian attitude among the churches of the Disciples on the Pacific coast. It will be recalled by those who have kept in touch with this very interesting crusade for a wider fellowship that in March, 1912, the Church of the Disciples in Berkeley took action opening its membership to members of other churches whether they had been baptized by immersion—the mode of baptism practiced by the Disciples' churches—or not. This action of the Berkeley church was widely and vigorously condemned by the denomination and with especial vehemence in California. Recognizing the isolation, to which its devotion to the principle of fellowship had condemned it, the Berkeley church refrained until this year from sending representatives to the convention of Christian churches of northern California, with which it had always been connected, knowing the repulse which they would be likely to meet. But, hoping that the opposition might by this time have somewhat softened and believing that at least it was time that the principle for which they stood should be brought definitely before the convention, the church sent delegates to the annual meeting of the convention at Santa Cruz in July. The result was that after a strenuous discussion of the issue the convention almost unanimously voted to refuse to seat the Berkeley delegation. The ground of the refusal was that the Berkeley church, by its action with respect to immersion, had, as put by one of the leading organs of the denomination, "in receiving into its membership unbaptized people, voluntarily cut itself off from the teaching, the practice and the position of the Churches of Christ for more than a century."

Thus again we behold how the claim to be nonsectarian does nothing to protect the sect that makes the claim against the evils of a sectarian spirit. Our good friends, the Disciples, have much to learn.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

The battles of peace continue undiminished by the great war across the seas. This statement refers not merely to the mobilization of "Billy" Sunday's forces in Denver, Des Moines and elsewhere, preparatory to his assaults upon strongholds of unrighteousness, but to other conflicts. Among them is the battle for supremacy in the Disciples' fold between progressive and reactionary attitudes toward other denominations. An episode which may count as a great, decisive battle in this struggle occurred recently in the Northern California missionary convention of the Disciples, when it excommunicated the First Church of Berkeley for receiving unimmersed members of other bodies into its fellowship. A few weeks previous the local convention had taken the same action. According to Editor Morrison of The Christian Century: "It is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the last fifty years—perhaps in their entire century of history."

The methods which have given rise to this unprecedented action may be briefly stated in the words of the pastor of the excommunicated body: "The church is orthodox on baptism, practicing and teaching only immersion. Its open membership plan does not deal with the form of baptism, but with Christian fellowship. All Christians coming from other churches of Christ, with credentials of good standing in those churches, are received into full fellowship, regardless of the manner in which they were baptized. Such members, on leaving the church, are given their original letters, together with a recommendation from the Berkeley church." And yet this seemingly innocent and Christian procedure has caused this same pastor to be subjected to a two years' campaign of abuse and finally to excommunication with his entire membership a la medievalism!

It is indeed a crucial question for the Disciples. Whether they are to follow an official bureaucracy in building up a great sectarian institution, or whether they are to pursue their original mission of Christian unity and brotherhood, hangs on the outcome. It is noticeable that their prominent laymen, such as judges and the like, and their officials, editors—in short, the outstanding leadership—were preponderatingly in favor of excommunication. The rank and file were like troubled sheep, alternately dodging this way and that.

This is only one skirmish, however, in a battle line which extends along the whole frontier of progress and reaction. How seriously the conflict rages was vividly revealed in the launching of the Disciples' "Men and Millions Movement," the campaign which was to result in great endowments for their educational and missionary work. At that time the attempt was made to subsidize all sources of light, with a viewpoint so out of harmony with present-day Christian progress that the mere uncovering of it had a stimulating result. The struggle among the Disciples has an interest for all Christians, not merely because they form a great denomination, in the West chiefly, but because the issues must be shared by all. In the respective victories or defeats are effects that will influence the power of the whole church. The steady, uncompromising front which the forward-looking men among the Disciples put forward to the forces that make for retrogression is worthy of deepest admiration. That sometimes these liberty-loving pioneers have been forced out of the family which they yearn to aid, frequently into the fold of Congregationalism, is others' loss and our gain. But some day the great battle itself must result in the falling back of one or the other sides. Which shall it be—sectarianism or unity?

NORTHWESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (METHODIST.)

The Disciples of Christ in their convention in northern California recently expelled from the fellowship of their churches the First Christian Church of Berkeley, Cal. The Berkeley church had been receiving members by letter from other churches who had not been baptized by immersion, without requiring their immersion at the hand of a Disciples minister. The place of baptism in the church has been for some time earnestly discussed within the Disciples communion and no agreement between the representatives of varying views is yet in sight.

PITTSBURGH CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (METHODIST.)

NO FELLOWSHIP WITH THE UNIMMERSED.

An ecclesiastical event of considerable interest, and for those involved of crucial importance, occurred recently on the Pacific Coast, when the Northern California Missionary Convention of the Disciples "withdrew from the fellowship of"—that is to say, excommunicated—the Disciples First Church Berkeley, for receiving unimmersed members of other churches into its fellowship. A local convention had taken the same action previously. It was not because First Church had abandoned the doctrine that immersion is the true mode of baptism. It was simply another exhibition of the spirit which refuses fellowship to those who do not hold "with us" in all things. The pastor of the excommunicated church has this to say about the attitude of his church toward baptism and Christians coming from other churches:

> The church is orthodox on baptism, practicing and teaching only immersion. Its open-membership plan does not deal with the form of baptism, but with Christian fellowship. All Christians coming from other churches of Christ, with credentials of good standing in those churches, are received into full fellowship, regardless of the manner in which they were baptized. Such members on leaving the church are given their original letters, together with a recommendation from the Berkeley Church.

The editor of The Christian Century who has taken strong ground against the inconsistent bigotry of his fellow Disciples who plead for unity and yet refuse fellowship with those who have not been baptized by immersion—has this to say: "It is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the last fifty years—perhaps in their entire century of history."

The Christian Century teaches that immersion was the primitive mode of baptism, and ought to be chosen by all who believe in Christ; but it clearly recognizes the utter inconsistency and medievalism involved in making that teaching a dogma upon which excommunication of Christians can proceed.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ADVANCE.

[In a page editorial the Presbyterian Advance (Nashville) recites the facts connected with the Berkeley excommunication and publishes the full text of the resolutions adopted and comments as follows:]

Back of this action lies an interesting story of the effort on the part of a considerable number of aggressive ministers and laymen of the Disciples to broaden the platform of Christian fellowship and not make it wholly contingent upon the rite of immersion. A year or more ago we called attention to the action of the church at Berkeley which, under the leadership of Rev. H. J. Loken, adopted the plan of receiving into full membership, by letter, members of other Christian denominations who might desire to unite with the First Church, Berkeley, without requiring that they be rebaptized by immersion. The Berkeley church declared that it believed as firmly as ever that immersion was the only proper mode of baptism, but took the ground that it was contrary to the principles of Mr. Campbell, founder of the "Christian" church, to make immersion a test of Christian fellowship. This was on the ground that Mr. Campbell advocated Christian union and that the central "plea" of the Disciples is for such Christian union. Mr. Loken had expressed his views in the following homely but pertinent paragraph:

"Every denomination has its denominational hobble-skirt, which it must get rid of before it can talk business on Christian union. In our brotherhood it is close immersion, and it is perfectly obvious to everyone who has seriously faced the problem of union that our participation in the union of Christian people means the taking off of that obsolete and old-fashioned garment."

It should not be overlooked that, in the very year in which the Berkeley church adopted the plan referred to, the "Disciples Commission on Christian Union," of which Dr. Peter Ainslie is chairman, advised the union of Disciples and Congregational churches by the plan adopted at Berkeley, and this plan in the abstract met with much approval within the fold of the Disciples. According to Dr. H. H. Guy, professor in the Pacific Theological Seminary, but a member of the Disciples Church, the action taken by the Disciples at Berkeley was mainly due to "the fact that we as a brotherhood stand accused of teaching and practicing a scheme which really un-Christianizes all other Christians. Our plea for Christian union is regarded as in reality a propaganda for absorbing the other churches. It is charged that we would never consent to Christian union until all the Christians of the world had been rebaptized according to the mode which we Disciples practice. It was the intention of the Berkeley church to take a position which would forever make such interpretations of her position impossible. By taking the stand which it did Berkeley church said that, while regarding immersion as the only mode of baptism practiced in the New Testament days, and while feeling under compulsion to so practice the rite today, it held itself in duty bound to receive all Christians into its fellowship, with the understanding that its liberty to continue to teach and practice what it believes to be the doctrine of the New Testament is not infringed upon." However, in spite of the action of the Commission on Union, violent opposition to this more liberal policy soon developed and the Disciples are now facing an issue of far-reaching importance.

As might be expected, most of the denominational papers are against the broader policy inaugurated by the Berkeley church, but the new movement has strong support in the able journal of the more progressive Disciples, The Christian Century, of Chicago. It has been urging the friends of Christian unity to give their sympathy and encouragement to Mr. Loken, "who has the courage of his ideals." It says of this courageous pastor, "The custom of withholding the 'hand of fellowship' from a Christian person who 'comes forward' bringing a credential from a Presbyterian or Congregational church of Christ unless such Christian person has been immersed became intolerable to him. He could not be loyal to Christ and debar from his fellowship any soul whom Christ has received into his Church." Then, commenting upon the action of the convention, this paper exclaims: "The other day the missionary convention of Northern California—in the name of Christian unity!—excommunicated the church and minister from fellowship in its work! Their delegates—Christian women and men—were compelled to arise in the face of the whole assembly and walk out of the convention hall. Nothing like that ever happened before in a convention of Disciples of Christ. The decree of excommunication declared that the church had 'ceased to be a Christian church,' because it received Christians into its membership!"

All this is especially interesting to other denominations not only because our brethren of the "Christian" church have always stood for Christian unity, but also because they have always claimed that their church was not an "ecclesiasticism," that is, that it did not undertake to bind ministers or churches to the decisions of an ecclesiastical council. But surely the California convention was an ecclesiasticism if ever there was one. It cast out some of its own members. There is more to follow. The developments will be watched with great interest. They spell progress toward Christian union.

Of Human Interest

Dr. Abbott on the Sabbath.

The testimony of Dr. Lyman Abbott, recently given, shows the abiding quality of early religious training concerning the weekly day of rest. He writes: "I remember the Puritan Sabbath of my childhood, and the memory is almost wholly a pleasant one. Perhaps this is because the Puritan Sabbath of my childhood was pleasanter than that which is preserved in the recollections of some men of my generation; perhaps it is because I have formed the habit of remembering the pleasant and forgetting the unpleasant things of the past. I remember the grandfather's home in which I was brought up, the Sunday afternoon walk in the pasture, the Sunday evening singing after supper. I remember the great congregation in Plymouth Church, and the teaching which called me from the legal profession to the ministerial, and gave me the inspiration which started me on my life work. The friends who have kneeled at my side in the church services of the past kneel at my side again, and we unite our prayers, though they are invisible and inaudible." He adds, in the days of advanced age: "My Sunday is a 'day of rest and gladness.' I am glad to shut the door on all the busy activities of the past week, and all the projected activities of the coming week, and have one day of calm and quiet, free from the turmoil and the dust incident to daily duties."

Dr. Clark on Austria-Hungary.

Dr. Francis E. Clark contributes to a recent number of the Christian Endeavor World an article on some of the European peoples concerned in the present war. He writes thus of Austria-Hungary:

"That these people have more than once sounded the battle-cry of freedom is only a matter of history. Some of them have been conquered, but they have never been subdued, and their hopes and aspirations have never been crushed out. I need only to remind the older generation of Americans of the fact that Kossuth was a Hungarian, for no other man ever stirred the American public like the hero who fought for the freedom of Hungary. I felt it was a great honor some three years ago to address a Christian Endeavor audience from the same pulpit in Debreczin from which Kossuth proclaimed the freedom of Hungary. His spirit animates twice ten million men, women, and children in the Dual Monarchy. Whatever we may think of the part that Austria has had in precipitating this war, or whatever our opinion may be of the "unhappy house of Hapsburg," of whom the aged ruler of the Dual Monarchy, Francis Joseph, is the head, we cannot deny great qualities of mind and soul to the liberty-loving people whom he rules."

Dr. Holmes' Joke.

Dr. Oliver W. Holmes was small in stature. Upon one occasion he was present at a meeting which happened to be attended by large men, thus making his diminutive size rather conspicuous in contrast. One of these men—doubtless wishing to make him feel at ease—came up to him and said: "Well, Dr. Holmes, I should think you would feel rather small among all these fellows." "I do," replied the doctor. "I feel like a three-cent piece among a lot of pennies."

The Boy Was Disappointed.

One of the stories that President Wilson tells, says the New York Tribune, is of a small boy whom he encountered at Staunton, Virginia. The president was speaking to a crowd from the steps of the Baldwin Seminary for Girls. The boy pushed and shoved his way through the crowd until he found himself squarely in front of President Wilson, whereupon he shouted, excitedly:

"Where is it? Where is it?"

Mr. Wilson stopped his speech, and with a broad smile said, good-naturedly, "Well, my boy, I guess I am 'it.'"

"O pshaw!" responded the youngster, with a look of disgust. "I thought it was a dog fight."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

First and Fairest of Old Kentucky Homes

It is not hard to understand the lure of new and unknown regions to adventurous spirits like Daniel Boone and Simon Kenton, or to those to whom enrichment and betterment of their material condition was a prime necessity.

But it is difficult to know what was the magnet that drew Colonel David Meade, a man past fifty years of age, of large wealth and highest social standing, to leave his beautiful estate on the James River in Virginia, and bring his gentle, cultured wife and nine children, and great retinue of servants into what was still virgin wilderness. There must have been some imperious and mysterious impulse in the hearts of his generation, that impelled him to abandon what men ordinarily prize as the paramount values of life, and venture into untried and unexplored lands.

COLONEL MEADE ARRIVES IN KENTUCKY.

It was in 1796, only a little more than twenty years after the first white settlement west of the Alleghenies was planted, that this courtly Virginia gentleman came to Kentucky, and bought a large tract of land nine miles from Lexington; in his youth, he had lived ten years in England, and he devoted the rest of his long life to making a home there modeled after the country seats he had so admired in the old country. The natural beauties of this blue grass region lent themselves readily to the art of the landscape gardener; the gently rolling land, clothed in richest green, made the curving line of beauty everywhere, the superb forest trees of unequaled variety and size, the rich limestone soil, the mild climate, made an ideal setting for this first and fairest of old Kentucky homes. With characteristic modesty, Colonel Meade gave it a name suited to its sylvan surroundings, Chaumiere des Prairies.

A great-great-granddaughter of Colonel Meade loaned me recently a collection of family papers on Chaumiere, and in it are a number of descriptions of this beautiful place. One of them is by Dr. Horace Holley, president of Transylvania University from 1818 to 1827, who says:

"I went with a party of ladies and gentlemen nine miles from Lexington to the country seat of Colonel Meade, where we dined and passed the day. This gentleman, who is near seventy, is a Virginian of the old school. He was a long time in England in his youth, and brought home with him English notions of a country seat—though he is a great republican in politics. He and his wife dress in the costume of the olden time; he wears the square coat and great cuffs, the long court vest, knee breeches and white silk stockings at all times; the buttons of his coat and vest are of silver, with the crest of the Meades on them.

"Mrs. Meade wears the long waist, the stays, the ruffles about the elbows, and the cap of the past century; her dress is always of satin, with handsome laces and embroideries. She is very mild and ladylike, and though between sixty and seventy, plays upon the pianoforte with the facility and cheerfulness of a young girl; her instrument was the first one brought to Kentucky. Colonel Meade is entirely a man of leisure, never having followed any business, and only using his large fortune in adorning his place, and entertaining his friends and strangers. No word is ever sent him that company is coming; to do so offends him. Twenty of us went out one day without warning, and were entertained luxuriously on the viands of the country. . . This house consists of a cluster of buildings, in front of which spreads a beautiful, sloping lawn, smooth as velvet. From this walks and drives diverge in various directions, forming vistas, terminated by picturesque objects; a Chinese temple, seats, alcoves, and verdant banks are interspersed at convenient distances. The lake, over which presides a Grecian temple, that you may imagine to be the home of the water nymphs, has in it a small island, which communicates with the shore by a white bridge of one arch.

IDEAL BEAUTY.

"The whole place is surrounded by roses and honeysuckle, now in full flower. You enter from the road through a gate between massive columns, which winds through the noble park to an inner gate, the capitals to whose pillars are unique—being formed of the roots of trees carved by nature; there the rich glory of verdure and flower-capped hedges bursts upon you. There is no establishment like this in our country."

In 1825, Dr. Craik, rector of the Episcopal church in Lexington, describes a visit to Chaumiere in very much the same terms as President Holley. He says:

"Everyone who went to Lexington or any part of the blue grass country visited Chaumiere as a matter of course; the result was that for a time every day there was like a levee. . . Colonel Meade told me he had selected his present residence on account of the natural beauties of the country, and he pointed with enthusiasm to several groups of the sugar maple, with the lovely grass beneath them, as the most attractive features of the place."

AN INTIMATE DESCRIPTION.

One of Colonel Meade's granddaughters Mrs. Susan C. Williams, has left an even more intimate description of this paradise in the wilderness.

"The house was what might be called a villa—built in an irregular style of various materials, wood, stone and brick. The part composed of brick was a large octagon drawing room; the dining room was a large square room, wainscoted with black walnut, with very deep windows, where we children used to hide ourselves behind the heavy curtains. There was one large, square hall, and numerous lobbies, passageways and areas. The grounds were extensive and beautiful—at that time, there was probably not so highly and tastefully improved a country seat in this country. Distinguished visitors to Lexington were always taken there. . . And then, the walks! The serpentine, one mile around, the haw-haw, a wide straight walk with an echo, both with white benches at intervals, and in a secluded nook, a tasteful Chinese pavilion. The bird cage walk was cut through a dense plum thicket, excluding the sun, and led to a dell where were a large spring of water and the mouth of a cave. At this point was the terminus of the lake, and after a hard rain there was quite a waterfall, in which my grandfather much delighted. . . Both my grandfather and grandmother were all that their servants could desire as master and mistress; all that were capable of taking care of themselves were manumitted at his death."

The servants were indeed an important part of this spacious and sumptuous establishment. Seven men were kept at work on the grounds, mowing the grass, and tending the trees, shrubberies and gardens; not a twig or leaf was allowed to remain on the velvet turf.

COLONEL MEADE'S GRANDDAUGHTER'S DESCRIPTION.

Mrs. Anna Meade Setcher, a great-granddaughter of Colonel Meade, describes the house as follows:

"Most of it was but one story, but it contained a great number of rooms, which were richly and beautifully furnished. In the octagon drawing room hung four handsome mirrors, which were draped, as were the windows and light sides of the room with brocaded satin hangings. The pictures on the walls were mostly family portraits, some of them by famous artists. One of David Meade, at eight years of age, was by Hudson, the teacher of Sir Joshua Reynolds, and several were by Sir Joshua himself. One was by the celebrated Sully. When Edward Everett visited Chaumietre, just after a stay abroad, he pronounced the art collection there, though small, the equal of any private gallery he had seen in Europe."

Mrs. Setcher also tells of the many distinguished visitors to Chaumiere. Among them were four presidents of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, Andrew Jackson, and General Taylor. George Rogers Clark, Aaron Burr Blennerhassett, General Scott, and others too numerous to mention, partook of its generous hospitality.

Mrs. Setcher says, "Of all the noted visitors to Chaumiere, I have heard my grandmother talk most of Aaron Burr and Blennerhassett; at one time they were my grandfather's guests for several weeks. Next to these two, she considered Andrew Jackson the most remarkable man she ever knew. She has often described to me how he looked on his war horse, as he came through the gates of the porter's lodge, and rode up to the house."

LAFAYETTE AS GUEST.

But the most honored guest that ever came to Chaumiere was Lafayette, when he visited Lexington in 1826. It was to show his appreciation of the distinguished Frenchman, that Colonel Meade built the octagon drawing room, alluded to above. This is all that now remains of the old home, and is a room of noble and ample proportions, with lofty windows, and beautifully finished woodwork of black walnut; if its mute walls could speak, what stories it could tell of the courtly crowds that gathered there, and the spacious hospitality of those days that are no more!

And not a vestige remains of those superb "pleasure grounds," that were once the marvel of all who saw them. The place is but a beautiful memory—but a memory that has done much to make the phrase, an "Old Kentucky Home" an ideal and a standard of hospitality, famous in song and story. Happy the community and the state, that has among its traditions such a home as Chaumiere, and such gracious and generous hospitality as was there dispensed by Colonel David Meade, and his gentle and lovely wife!

Disciples Table Talk

W. D. Ryan Begins Fifth Year.

Youngstown Central Church has profited by the work of its pastor, William Dunn Ryan. He has served the church for four years and has the following achievements to his credit: More than 300 people have been added to the membership of the church. A church office has been established and an efficient secretary employed full time. The church building has been remodeled and enlarged at an expense of about $20,000. The duplex envelope plan of collecting funds has been adopted and missionary zeal and missionary receipts have been greatly increased. Four years ago the annual receipts and expenditures of the church for all purposes, were approximately $5,000. Receipts and expenditures for all purposes last year were $16,340.72. The C. W. B. M. has assumed the support of a missionary in India. The church is now supporting two missionaries in the foreign field, besides contributing to all our church boards doing missionary and benevolent work in the home-land. The Sunday-school has become the largest in the city. A goal of 1,000 attendance was set for September 20.

New Los Angeles Pastor Succeeds.

Charles I. Hutslar, who was called in June of this year to the pulpit of Broadway Church, Los Angeles, writes that there have been fifty-seven additions to the church membership, most of them by confession of faith. Audiences are increasing. A young men's Bible class was organized about August 1, and it now has an enrollment of twenty. The aim of this class is to have one hundred members who are all active Christians, and from the efforts that have been put forth, and from the list of prospective members, Mr. Hutslar believes the aim will soon be realized.

Pastor Analyzes Membership.

During a recent sermon in East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, on "The Home," John Ray Ewers made the following study of the composition of the church: "We have at present a revised list of 561 members. There are 106 husbands and wives, or 212 people. Twenty-two men belong whose wives do not and 47 women belong whose husbands do not. There are 24 boys under 18 and 26 girls of same age. There are 85 unmarried men and 145 unmarried women. Thus it appears that nearly one-half of our membership consists of men and boys. About the same ratio is to be found in the Sunday-school." In the five years during which Mr. Ewers has been pastor of this church 435 people have united with the church, 358 of whom are now members. An appeal was made for families to throw open their homes to homeless young men and young women in warm-hearted hospitality. The value of saying grace at meals was dwelt upon. Criminals are nearly always traced to poor home influence. The home, inspired by the church, was given the credit for moral culture. The official board of East End Church is considering plans for a remarkably fine new building.

Dr. Breeden's Success at Fresno.

The thirtieth anniversary of the organization of the First Christian church of Fresno, Cal., was celebrated by the congregation on September 13. H. O. Breeden, the pastor, mentioned many interesting facts in the history of the growth of the institution in his sermon. The church has now a membership of 830 resident members. Its history, from its organization under James A. Logan in 1884 with a handful of workers is in many instances the history of Fresno during this period. During the pastorate of J. R. Perkins' pastorate, an evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Dr. H. O. Breeden, in the early part of 1909, was remarkably successful, resulting in the addition of more than 200 members to the church. In October, 1909, Ray O. Miller of Indiana was called to the pastorate. He served the church for two years. Then Doctor Breeden was called by unanimous vote to assume the pastorate. Because of previous engagements in the evangelistic field Doctor Breeden found it impossible to accept the hearty call for six months. The interregnum was filled by Daniel Stewart, and Doctor Breeden began his ministry in May, 1912. The following August, Shirley H. Shaw was called at his assistant, which position he filled with great ability. After two years of splendid service he resigned to accept a pastorate. In the two and a half years of Doctor Breeden's pastorate the church has been happily harmonized and cemented and made substantial progress in all its activities. At the beginning of the year the church launched a campaign for a new building which will cost $75,000. This structure will be completed by Jan 1.

Central Kentucky Ministers Meet.

"The Church in the First Century," was the subject of the paper read at the recent session of the Central Kentucky Ministers' Association of the Christian Churches, held at the Phoenix Hotel, Lexington. The paper was read by Prof. A. W. Fortune, of Transylvania University, and discussed by the ministers present. The session was preceded by a business session of the Executive Board of the Kentucky Christian Church Missionary Convention, the first since the State Convention was held in Ashland.

Rev. L. O. Bricker, Pastor at First Church, Atlanta, Which is Host to the Convention This Week.

Indianapolis Disciples Extend Bounds.

The West Side Christian mission building, at Indianapolis, was dedicated on Sept. 13. P. A. Wood, president of the superintendents' Union of Christian Sunday-schools of Indianapolis, presided. The dedicatory address was delivered by A. B. Philputt, pastor of Central church, who remarked that the mission was in a neighborhood composed almost exclusively of native born Americans and showed that since there were no other churches in the immediate vicinity the mission should grow rapidly. Thomas W. Grafton, pastor of Third Church, delivered the dedicatory prayer. The singing was led by F. C. Huston, singing evangelist. S. H. Creighton, chairman of the building committee told of the history and growth of the mission.

Hoopeston, Ill., to Burn Mortgage.

At a recent midweek service of the Christian church at Hoopeston, Ill., there was a joint session of the church board and the Sunday-school teachers and officers when plans were made for a Sunday-school rally, a mortgage burning and revival. The Hoopeston church was built fifteen years ago and during that time the property has been encumbered with debt. Led by the energetic pastor, Andrew Scott, the church congregation during the past few months has been working earnestly to pay the last dollar of the indebtedness by the first day of October, and in this recent meeting it was decided that a formal celebration of the event would take place on Sunday, Oct. 18, with all day services in which all churches in the city will be invited to participate, at least in the afternoon.

Texas Schools and Religious Education.

Edwin C. Boynton, pastor at Belton, Tex., writes of an interesting development in religious education in the state of Texas. For some time the Sunday-school world has been familiar with the attempt to secure the co-operation of the public school with the Sunday-school in the promotion of Bible study. The feeling that, since the days of our fathers, when every home was a seat of instruction in sacred themes, the ignorance prevalent concerning the most elemental Biblical facts was appalling and on the increase, demanded some action on the part of teachers of the scriptures looking to an extension of Bible study. In a number of states steps have been taken to place courses of Biblical history, biography and geography in the hands of high school students, under such competent oversight as would guarantee an adequate study of the subjects offered. Notably in Colorado and North Dakota the state has attempted, through the co-operation of the public school and college teachers with leaders in the Sunday-school world, to afford to communities desiring them, courses of the nature referred to. The Colorado course for the first year, which is optional with each community and each individual student of the high school, covers thirty-six weeks, extending from the study of the early chapters of Genesis to that of the work of John the Baptist. The North Dakota course offers fifty lessons for its first year's work. In Texas there is no provision for a state-wide course. At the state Sunday-school convention at Fort Worth last March, a committee of twenty members was authorized, Dr. Frederick Eby, of Austin, being chairman, to take such action as might be possible looking to a similar state-wide co-operation between the secular schools and the Sunday-school. This committee will probably hold conferences with representative teachers at the State Teachers' Association at San Antonio in November, and it is hoped that a course of study will then be agreed upon as has been done in the states mentioned.

Church to Have College.

Because of the pressing needs of the modern city for a more efficient church and the demand on the part of many Christians for opportunity for a more thorough knowledge of the fundamental principles of the church coupled with the new and more efficient educational methods now being used in the Sunday-schools, the workers of the Seventh Christian Church, Indianapolis, have organized a church college. This school will be a department of the church work under the supervision of the pastor; its purpose to train workers for every department of the church. The training of lay workers only is the idea. The school will be open not only to all the members of the church, but to members of the other churches who wish to take advantage of this opportunity. No fees will be charged. Text books will be used in all the classes. The course of study is to cover four years, with forty recitation periods in each year's work. A diploma graduation will be given. But one course can be taken at a time. The year is divided into two semesters of twenty hours each. The course includes classes in Bible study, church history, Christian missions, religious pedagogy, social service, parent problems, departmental work, Christian ethics, church polity and Christian Endeavor efficiency. The teachers of this school are all members of Seventh Church, who have given special study to their respective fields. They will teach as follows: Rev. Clay Trusty, church history and church polity; Mrs. George Kitzing, Bible study; Mrs. George Wood, religious pedagogy and Christian ethics; Mrs. Lotta St. Clair, Christian missions and comparative religion; E. S. Cummings, departmental work and parents' problems; Mrs. E. S. Cummings, Christian Endeavor efficiency and Sunday-school work; Mrs. Esta Trusty, social service. The school will be opened October 7, just after the opening of the new $13,000 educational building, which will be dedicated October 4. This building makes possible the working out of the above plan. The classes will meet regularly on Thursday evening at 7:45. The class periods will be one hour in length. From 8:15 to 9 will be a lecture period, at which time men engaged in special lines of religious and social work will be invited to speak. These lectures will be open to the public.

Melons in "Imperial Valley."

Readers of Harold Bell Wright's book, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," will be interested in knowing that the "Imperial Valley," the redemption of which Mr. Wright tells of in his book, produced 5,000 carloads of melons this year. Three million dollars is the estimate made this season of the value of the entire melon crop of California. W. F. Holt, of Redlands, Cal., is the original of "Barbara Worth's" father, who made the Imperial Valley "blossom as the rose."

Disciple Pastor Organizes Lecture Bureau.

Information comes of the organization in Des Moines of the "University Lyceum Bureau." Walter B. Zimmerman, pastor at Pleasantville, Iowa, and also student in Drake, is one of the movers in the enterprise. He has been chautauqua platform manager for the past two years and is fitted by this experience to introduce this new bureau to the public.

"Billy" Sunday Coming to Des Moines.

The "Billy Sunday Meeting" is to be held in Des Moines during November and doubtless run on into December and near the holidays. The committee of arrangement is having trouble with the city council in finding a location where they can comply with the ordinance, regarding the construction of frame buildings within the fire limits. The tabernacle is an immense wooden structure, seating ten thousand people. Of course it is impossible to build such a temporary structure and make it fireproof. It costs thousands to build this tabernacle. Reports from the Sunday meetings in Denver, Colo., indicate great attendance and intense interest from the start. On the opening Sunday of the meeting the crowd began to gather at 6 o'clock for the 10 o'clock morning service, and the great tabernacle, seating ten thousand, was crowded to the doors and an overflow meeting was necessary. C. S. Medbury is urging the great University Place church of Des Moines to prayer and preparation for Evangelist Sunday's coming. He is expecting five hundred to be added to the University Place church as one of the results of the meeting.

Canton School Feature in S. S. Times.

The September 19 issue of the Sunday-school Times devotes over a page to the story of the development and present work of the great Sunday-school at Canton, O., over which P. H. Welshimer presides. The school has an enrollment of 6,000, according to this article.

Drake School Complimented.

The Youth's Companion for September 3 contained almost a column editorial regarding the department of Religious Education in Drake University. This is but another indication of the widespread interest in the new movement for the modernizing of the Bible-school, or as Prof. Athearn prefers to call it the "Church School."

Bethany College Moves Forward.

Frank Lappin, reporter for Bethany College, writes that Bethany College has opened its doors to a large number of new students this year. The enrollment for the first two days of matriculation exceeded that of the first two days last year. The first social function of the year was held on Friday, September 25. This was an open social for the students. Prof. H. Newton Miller has charge of the Moninger Memorial Chair of Bible-school Pedagogy.

Pastor Conducts Question Box.

S. R. Hawkins, pastor at Central Church, Portland, Ore., is conducting a question box at his Sunday evening meetings. Here are some of the queries put to him at a recent service: "Explain the text, 'I make peace and create evil; I am the Lord that doeth all these things'"—Isa. 47:7. "Why the apparent contradiction in the following: 'It is not lawful for us to put any man to death.'—John 1:31. 'We have a law, and by that law he ought to die.'"—John 19-7.

"Please give the chapter and verse of Scripture which authorizes the changing of the Sabbath day from the seventh to the first day of the week." "What part does the pope play in bringing about the present war conditions?" "What is the best book written with a view to exposing the sophistries on so-called Christian Science?" "Why don't you baptize infants?" "The wets are circulating a folder which quotes Abraham Lincoln as being opposed to prohibition. Is this a garbled statement or was Lincoln in favor of the saloon?"

P. C. Macfarlane Moves West.

Peter Clark Macfarlane is removing with his family from New York City to a California town. He is seeking greater seclusion, as he is planning to write a novel this winter.

E. B. Shively to Paris, Mo.

Paris, Mo., church has shown its wisdom in choosing as successor to Frank W. Allen, E. B. Shively, who has served the church at Fayette, Mo. Mr. Shively came to Fayette two years ago from Armstrong, Mo., where he was pastor several years. He is a graduate of the Missouri Bible College at Columbia and of the University of Missouri. A local paper reports that "he is recognized as a good student and thinker and eloquent preacher whom Fayette people regret to see leave." The Paris work, it is reported, offers a larger field and better equipment for work. Mr. Shively will go to Paris Nov. 1.

Home-Coming Day at Carthage, Mo.

D. W. Moore, pastor at Carthage, Mo., is jubilant over the success of the home-coming services, held at his church Sept. 20. There were 502 at Bible school. Great audiences at church services saw 17 persons go forward to enlist in the army of Christ. In preparation for the great day, workers visited the entire membership on the previous Sunday, this being accomplished in two hours. A country-wide attendance campaign is being planned for October and November.

Never Questioned

Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure and wholesome. It is made from highly refined, pure, cream of tartar, an ingredient of grapes. Not an atom of unwholesomeness goes into it; not an unwholesome influence comes from it. It perfectly leavens the food, makes it finer in appearance, more delicious to the taste, more healthful.

Its superiority in all the qualities that make the perfect baking powder is never questioned.

last spring, the high school board of Belton, Texas, without waiting for wider action by school authorities, authorized the superintendent of city schools, in co-operation with the Pastors' Association, to prepare courses of study in the Old and New Testaments. Mr. Boynton was selected to prepare the Old Testament study and Mr. E. L. Storey, pastor of the Presbyterian church, the New Testament work. The two courses cover two years each, of seventy-two lesson periods of forty-five minutes per year's work, and the high school board offers two units credit toward local graduation to any student taking the four years' course. The work is now actually in progress in Belton, with a total of twenty-one high school students and ten others taking the Old Testament course in the various Sunday-schools of the town.

W. H. Baker Goes to New Castle, Ind.

After four years of good service in La Porte, Ind., William H. Baker recently tendered his resignation to the congregation of First Church to accept a call to New Castle, Ind. Outside of a few members of the church the congregation was unprepared for the announcement, as the church had recently voted unanimously to have Mr. Baker remain for another year and it was supposed that he would stay. The call from the New Castle church came recently. Mr. Baker made a visit to New Castle and found the church field larger than at LaPorte, and he came to the conclusion that the opportunity was a broader one and would enable him to give better service. The congregation, which has a membership of over 700, is preparing to erect a $40,000 church, and as he has had experience in church building the congregation was particularly anxious to have him accept the call. Mr. Baker leaves the LaPorte church in excellent condition. He came here four years ago from Atlanta, Ind., and during the four years over 400 new members had been added to the membership.

H. D. Smith Leaves Hopkinsville, Ky.

At Hopkinsville, Ky., H. D. Smith, pastor of the church has announced his intention to accept a call to the work at Central, Dallas, Tex. Mr. Smith has been pastor at Hopkinsville for eighteen years, remaining a number of times despite flattering calls he had received from other churches. He has been one of the most energetic and able ministers Hopkinsville has had, and devoted himself to the welfare of the town at large as well as his own flock. Mr. Smith has been highly honored by his church, having been elected to the presidency of the American Society at the Pittsburg convention, to serve at Topeka a year later.

Minister to Run for Governor.

A. N. Lindsay, pastor of the church at Clinton, Mo., will be candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Missouri in 1916. Formal announcement was made two weeks ago, at Lamonte, where Mr. Lindsay opened the Democratic campaign in Pettis county in a two hours' talk.

Touring Under War Handicap.

Roger T. Nooe, pastor of First Church, Frankfort, Ky., who was in Europe when the war broke out, arrived home a few days ago after an eventful trip through Switzerland and France. He was in Italy when the fighting between Germany and the allies commenced, and Italy was mobilizing her army. Most of the party he was traveling with quit and returned to America, but he was determined to go and with a few others went into Switzerland. Their troubles commenced when they started for Paris. A trip to Paris, which usually occupies eight hours, required 30 for them, traveling day and night. Every hour or few hours they were compelled to change trains, and as they progressed the crowd trying to reach Paris increased until thousands were waiting to run to the carriages. Everyone had to look after his own baggage, and the director of Mr. Nooe's party, who had all the money, which had been confided to his custody to be changed into French coins, was put off the train, so they reached the custom house on the frontier "broke." Fortunately a chance acquaintance gave them funds.

Minister Visits Saloons.

"What I Saw in Our Town Saloons," was the subject of a sermon at the New Philadelphia Christian church Sept. 27. It was preached by the pastor, C. A. MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald made the rounds of all the saloons in the city a few evenings ago, to inform himself what was taking place in each one. The New Philadelphia pastor is planning to enter the evangelistic field.

Preacher Scores Business Men.

Henderson, Ky. The sermon was delivered as an answer to a letter sent out by the Business Men's League to the voters of Henderson city and county a few days previous. The speaker took for a text the contents of the letter received by him, and for more than an hour he dealt some telling blows to the members of the Business Men's League, whom he characterized as being the defenders of the open saloon. He referred pointedly to the motto of the Business Men's League, "We prefer license, regulation and sincerity as against blind tigerism, disorder and hypocrisy."

Edgar County, Ill., Organizes.

The first annual meeting of the Christian churches of Edgar county, Ill., closed on Sept. 13, with great sessions. The services opened with 525 in the Sunday-school. All of these but 40 out of town visitors were members of the Paris Christian Sunday-school. At an indoor picnic dinner, Z. T. Sweeney was the guest of honor, and spoke on "The Fundamentals of the Christian Faith," and on "The Golden Age and Its Law of Service." The annual meeting of the churches of Edgar County is an assured affair. The people voted unanimously to make the meeting a regular feature of the church work of the county. The details will now be worked out and some definite tasks will be placed before the people.

Church at Arcola, Ill., Thrives.

The church at Arcola, Ill., has voted unanimously to begin work at once on improvements on the church building to cost about $4,000. The auditorium will be redecorated and recarpeted, a new lighting system installed, the basement will be entirely finished for social and athletic purposes and the entire building will be heated with a modern steam plant. Walter S. Rounds is minister.

L. S. Cupp Begins New Work.

Louis S. Cupp, newly elected pastor of the church in Eugene, Ore., is at his new post. Mr. Cupp goes to Eugene from Kansas City, where he has lived for nine years. For five years he was pastor of the Hyde Park church, and during the past four years he has served as chancellor of Christian University. In this capacity he was instrumental in raising a fund of $330,000 for the college. Of this sum, $100,000 was spent for the erection of two new dormitories, a gymnasium and a heating and lighting plant.

Topeka Church Calls O. L. Cook.

For some months First Church at Topeka, Kans., has been without a pastor, Chas. A. Finch having resigned early in the summer to go into Chautauqua work. The church has this month called O. L. Cook, of Hiram, Ohio, to the pastorate. Mr. Cook has spent the greater part of his ministerial career in Kansas, having been pastor at Hallon a number of years ago and more recently he was at Hutchinson for a period of years. He goes to Topeka with an intimate knowledge of the field and a personal acquaintance with the people in the church. This very fact gives promis of a long and successful pastorate. Mr. Finch was pastor of First Church for more than a dozen years.

Bethany College Teaches Agriculture.

Many do not know that Bethany College has a department of agriculture which in equipment compares favorably with any of the agricultural schools in that part of the country. Two large farms have recently been donated to the college: one by Hon. Earle W. Oglesbay of Cleveland, Ohio; and the other by Miss Margaret E. Parkinson, of Washington, Pa. Oglesbay Hall, costing $90,000, is one of the best equipped science and agricultural buildings in the whole country. Bethany is located in a rich farming community and with such splendid equipment will no doubt succeed with the department of agriculture.

President Kershner's Critique on Evangelism.

Present day evangelism is made the object of a keen and effective criticism by Pres. F. D. Kershner of Texas Christian University, writing in his department in the Christian Standard. He says: "We are not disposed to criticize any methods which accomplish good results, but we very seriously question the permanent value of much that is now done in the name of evangelism. The religion of Jesus is a serious appeal, and gains by serious presentations. The person who comes into the church without deep, serious convictions is not apt to be of permanent value to the church after he is in. One good feature about those days of early persecution was the fact that it took tremendous conviction to make a man come out for Christ. When becoming a Christian meant personal loss, possibly torture and death, few people would assume the risk without deep earnestness and conviction. In these latter days every sort of inducement is held out, every sort of pressure is brought to bear, the 'psychology of the crowd' is worked to the limit, and too often the results are just what one might expect under the circumstances. The ideal revival to the writer is a season of deep spiritual influence produced by the plain, sincere, earnest presentation of the simple gospel, devoid of any spectacular features, and all the more powerful on that account. Preaching of the other kind may get 'results,' but we opine that a good many of the 'results' will not prove to be lasting."

September Starts Well.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first nine days of September for Foreign Missions amount to $22,086, a gain over the corresponding nine days of 1913 of $7,053. The churches, as churches, show a loss of $265. But the Sunday-schools gained $441. This makes the total gain on the year to September 9 of $22,590. Only twenty-one days remain until the books close. Last year the receipts amounted to about $96,000 during that time. The churches will have to stir themselves to reach that amount this year. That is about $4,500 per day. A good report insures a great convention at Atlanta.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR OCTOBER 18.

Mark 14:32-42. Memory Verses 34-36.

Golden Text.—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation. Mt. 26:41.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

(Used by permission.)

(32) And they come unto a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith unto his disciples, Sit ye here, while I pray. (33) And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be greatly amazed, and sore troubled. (34) And he saith unto them, My soul is exceedingly sorrowful even unto death: abide ye here, and watch. (35) And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass away from him. (36) And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; remove this cup from me: howbeit not what I will, but what thou wilt. (37) And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest thou not watch one hour? (38) Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. (39) And again he went away, and prayed, saying the same words. (40) And again he came, and found them sleeping, for their eyes were very heavy; and they knew not what to answer him. (41) And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough; the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. (42) Arise, let us be going: behold, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

Verse by Verse.

vs. 32-34. A place . . . Gethsemane: "An estate known as Gethsemane, or 'the oil press.' Its precise location is not known. The traditional site is in a grove of very ancient olive trees on the western slope of the Mount of Olives, just above the valley of Kidron." It was apparently a favorite resort of Jesus and well known to Judas. Sit ye here, while I pray: Leaving eight of the disciples near the entrance of the estate, he takes Peter, James and John and goes apart with them to pray. Notice how Jesus relied on prayer both at this crisis and throughout his life (see Mark 1:35; 6:46; 14:32; Luke 6:12; 9:18, 28; 11:1). Note, too, that the same disciples are with him as at the transfiguration. He saith unto them: Jesus does not unburden his heart until the supper is over and he is alone with the three disciples who were most in sympathy with him. Then he seems to have craved their sympathy and support in the struggle he was undergoing. My soul is exceeding sorrowful: Amazed, and sore troubled (v. 33), partly by the awfulness of the death before him but most of all by the means through which it would be brought about—a disciple's treachery and his own nation's rejection of him. Abide ye here, and watch: Compare his words to Peter in vs. 37, 38. All through the struggle till the victory was won Jesus longed for the comradeship of his most trusted disciples—and failed to receive it. The sense of his loneliness seems for a time to have appalled him.

35-42.—Remove this cup from me: The "cup" of his death and seeming defeat and all it involved. Jesus desired life not death, but at the same time he could trust in God's wisdom and still call him Father whatever he required of his Son. Saith unto Peter, . . . couldst thou not watch one hour: Calling him by his old name Simon, expressing surprise that one so strenuous in his loyalty for him could not watch with him in his sore trial (compare Matt. 26:33-35). Again he went away, and prayed, saying: Notice the change in his prayer, as recorded in Matthew, suggestive of "a growing consciousness of the Father's will" and with it the desire to abide by it. He cometh . . . and saith unto them, Sleep on now, etc.: The awful struggle was over and the victory won, and he no longer felt the need of human companionship. His confidence in the Father's love and nearness was again supreme and he calmly waited the coming of the traitor.

Note: This page treatment of the lesson, by Mr. Buckner and Mr. Ewers, is a feature also of "The Conquest," our paper for Adult and Young People's Classes. If your classes use the uniform lessons, they do not need a quarterly, if "The Conquest" is in their hands. We do not believe there is to be found a more attractive and helpful lesson page than this. It is thorough-going in treatment and modern and practical in its point of view.

"The Last Step"

The Lesson in Everyday Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

I REMEMBER in the wonderful Passion Play at Oberammergau, the tide of emotion that swept over me in this garden scene. No teacher should go before his class until he has thought himself into vital sympathy with the events of this lesson. It is always wrong to go before a class without getting into the mood of the theme; and in this case doubly so. We all despise professional sympathy—the undertaker type! Let there be no dealing with this sacred sorrow save in the spirit of deepest sympathy. It is the agony in the garden.

I recall how Anton Lang acted this part. You forgot that it was acting—you seemed to see your Saviour going forward and kneeling at the great rock, praying in broken accents to his Father, returning to find even the inner guard asleep. Can you see it? Do you feel it? A highly intelligent woman told me that it was the sympathetic telling of this story that led her to give her whole life to Christ. She came to feel that it was all that she could do.

STRONG BUT WEAK.

Peter was sure that he would not fall; he would die before he would renounce his Master! "Before morning," said Christ, "you will deny me." When we are humbly weak then are we strong. Happy is the man who knows his own limitations. Happy is the man who knows his weakest point. Jerusalem was taken finally at the strongest point of the wall. Whenever we get so strong that we think we can stand by our own goodness, by our own accumulated strength, by our own attractive personality, then the fall is only a short way beyond. How often have we picked ourselves up, in chagrin, after such an experience. Peter and all the disciples vow vehemently that they will stand true, but, alas, we know the story of their pitiable weakness that night. We all need the daily prayer, the daily moment with the Bible, the daily association with the strong, good friend, the humble estimation of ourselves. We are strong just in proportion as we honestly rely upon the Almighty Arm.

EIGHT AT THE GATE.

Would you have been one of the three who went with Christ into the gloom of the garden? In every class of men there are those who stand near and those who stand far away from the Master. Peter is still one of the favored. James and John—the refined "Sons of Thunder"—are the others of the inner guard. But, alas for human frailty—they also sleep. Why not be one of those who keep close to Christ? These three had the greatest sympathy—they seemed to divine the heart of their Lord. If intuition be the great thing, as Bergson teaches, then these three came to their place honestly—they had it. The mass of men follow afar off. The listlessness, apathy, carelessness, indifference crush the heart of any one who tries to lead. Close up the ranks.

"THE LAST STEP."

"And he went forward a little." William Dawson has a great sermon on that text. To my mind it is one of the most powerful evangelistic sermons in the world. It grips and holds you. It convinces and pulls you. He shows that the difference between the hero and the ordinarily brave man consists in that "last step." The difference between the saint and the ordinarily good person consists in that "last step." So of the scholar. Suppose Jesus had never taken that last step! Suppose he had run away over the dark Judean hills! Suppose he had failed at this crisis! Salvation depended upon the courage and the abandon to take that last step. "He took it—and found God in the gloom." Hundreds of men only need to take the last step to bring them clear into the church of God, but failing that step they lose all. Here is a powerful evangelistic appeal to those members of your class not now Christians. Do not fail to press this home. Some of your scholars have been expecting such a word from you for months. Speak it today.

"NOT WHAT I WILL."

Here is where the average prayer fails. We design our own lives and then complain if God does not endorse our ideas. We draw up the blue prints and then ask God to bless the results. When I was a small lad I made up my mind to be an architect. I had an uncle who was very successful as an architect and who built some great buildings. I used to go off by myself and draw up plans which would improve upon anything Angelo ever conceived—so I thought in my innocent ignorance! Not long since I came upon some of those old plans. They were indeed marvelous—those impossible towers, freakish roofs, contorted doors and twisted windows. Fortunately no one ever accepted them as plans for real castles. And yet how childish are many of the selfish plans which we make for our lives. Yet we come and ask God to bless those plans. Some day we shall be wise enough to make only one prayer: "Thy will be done." We shall ask God to show us his plan. It will be much bigger and better than anything we could plan—and much more enduring.

"WATCH AND PRAY."

Build in the reserve power. The great man has it. The strong man has it. Reserve power is splendid. I remember the captain of a foot-ball team who gave a college oration on "Reserve Power." He showed how the game called it out. The game of life calls it out also. Here is a definition of personality—"Personality is the plus element in your life."

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 7.

Pioneer Studies; Alexander Campbell. Rom. 8:1-4; Jer. 6:16.

It was the province of Alexander Campbell to elaborate and defend principles which had been enunciated by his father. His opinion of his father's work appears in the statement that the "Declaration and Address" contains what may be called the embryo or rudiments of a great and rapidly increasing community. It virtually contains the elements of a great movement of vital interest to every citizen of Christ's kingdom." In the elaboration and defense of the principles he held to be fundamental, he proved himself to be a great writer, preacher, educator, and expositor.

THE WRITER.

Few men have written more than Alexander Campbell. His name is on the title-pages of sixty volumes. He did not write to please the fancy of the idle. He wrote that he might confirm the faith of men. For seven years he edited the Christian Baptist. "All men competent to poise a lance, were freely invited into its arena, and they came from every quarter—Baptists and Pedobaptists, Congregationalists, and Episcopalians, Calvinists and Armenians, skeptics and infidels." For more than thirty years he edited the Millennial Harbinger.

THE PREACHER.

Of Alexander Campbell the preacher, Jeremiah S. Black wrote: "As a great preacher he will be remembered with unqualified admiration by all who had the good fortune to hear him in the prime of his life. The interest which he excited in a large congregation can hardly be explained. The first sentence of his discourse 'drew audience still as death,' and every word was heard with rapt attention to the close. It did not appear to be eloquence; it was not the enticing words of man's wisdom; the arts of the orator seemed to be inconsistent with the simplicity of his character. It was logic, explanation, argument so clear that everybody followed without effort, and all felt that it was raising them to the level of a superior mind. Persuasion sat upon his lips. Prejudice melted away under the easy flow of his elocution. The clinching fact is always in its proper place, and the fine poetic illustration was ever at hand to shed its light over the theme. But all this does not account for the impressiveness of his speeches, and no analysis of them can give any idea of their power."

EDUCATOR AND EXPOSITOR.

In his corner-stone address of Bethany College, Mr. Campbell said: "In this corner-stone we deposit a copy of the Holy Bible, not to bury it in the earth, but as a monumental symbol of the fact that this book, this everlasting document ought to be the true and proper foundation of every literary, scientific, moral, and religious institution—that it is of right Divine, entitled to be, and ought to be, the basis, the sub-basis of every public and benevolent institution—essential to the perfect and complete development of man in his whole constitution—as a citizen of the commonwealth, a citizen of the kingdom of heaven, an heir of the universe through all the cycles of an eternal future." Bethany College was founded that it might prepare men to expound the Bible. Mr. Campbell believed that it required an intelligent man to understand the Bible. He believed that God spoke to the human understanding. He was therefore the foe of all methods of interpreting the Bible that were not based on reason. Emotion had a place in his study of the Bible, but it was the emotion of the man who had been trained to think.

What It Will Mean To Your Sunday School

If it lines up its young people and adults in the Bible Knowledge Contest to be begun during fall quarter by our wide-awake paper

"THE CONQUEST"

I. It will mean that its members will enjoy several months of Bible instruction under such teachers as Dr. Ainslie, Dr. Willett, Dr. Idleman, Prof. Athearn and others.

II. It will mean that the school will be UNIFIED by this co-operation in study and in the effort to win one of the splendid Sunday School banners for the school.

III. It will mean that the school will be under the influence of a paper that has already made a reputation as a CHARACTER BUILDER.

Do These Two Things Now!

1. See that every member of your school, high school age and up, receives "The Conquest" this coming quarter.

2. See that your superintendent appoints a "Contest Manager" at once.

3. Talk up the contest.

REMEMBER: Three fine Banners will be given to the three schools sending in largest number of approximately correct lists of answers. This in addition to the TWENTY-FIVE PRIZES FOR INDIVIDUALS. More about the Banners next week.

These are some of the children The Chicago Herald and The Conquest will help by sending them a "Christmas Ship" laden with new clothes of all sorts, household linen, books, toys, boxes of candy. This picture represents a group of school children in Ulm on the Danube, Germany. There are also millions of children in Belgium, France, Austria, Servia, etc., who will not have any Christmas this year unless it comes to them by way of Christian, peaceable America. Are you planning to help load the Christmas Ship?

Social Service

That's what it is—the sending of that great Christmas gift by much-blessed America to the children of the stricken peoples of the war zones of Europe. "Learning by doing" is a basic principle of modern pedagogy. If your school enlists in this campaign for the relief of these destitute ones—even the least of them, Christ's brethren—your children, youth and adults will actually learn more about Social Service than they would should they take a year's course in mere theory.

"The Conquest"

Our wide-awake weekly published for adult and young people's Bible classes, Christian Endeavor societies, etc., will co-operate in this magnificent enterprise of practical Christianity.

What You Can Do—Now

Write us at once that your church, your school, your class, your Endeavor Society, will help us. You will be kept informed through the pages of The Conquest and The Christian Century of the progress of the campaign, and definite instructions will be given as to just what you shall do. THIS ONE THING do NOW—write us that you will help load the "Christmas Ship!"

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Rev. George A. Campbell, Pastor of First Church, Hannibal, Mo.

Rev. G. A. Campbell.

ON TALKING WELL

Language is the greatest discovery or invention of man. Our capacity for dictionaries places us infinitely beyond all other animals. To talk well is a great art. Language is the expression of the soul. Expression and character constantly act and react upon each other. Bad thoughts and bad living make bad language. Good words and good life belong with each other. I heard much language on a football field the other day that did not comport with reverential feeling. Indeed, one hears cursing almost everywhere. The great souled words of all our hearts are used profanely. We do violence to our souls to use divine words in such a manner. It is a senseless custom, too. A man gets something when he steals, but he gains nothing when he swears. He loses much. It would seem possible to make our playgrounds and our lives as well clean in word. Why not begin a campaign? Will you guard your own expression? Begin at home.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this fall. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Human Progress and the War

WHAT IS THE WORST THING ABOUT THIS WAR?

Our first response to such a question is, naturally, that the taking of human life on so vast a scale is the worst thing about this war and all war. Nobody knows yet how many lives have already perished but the number will stagger the world when it is revealed, unless, indeed, our newspaper guesses at it have already accustomed our sensibilities to think of Europe's fields and cities under the imagery of a vast human shambles.

The slaughter of men on the battle field is but half the toll this war is taking in human life. There are the families of the soldiers, the wives and mothers and children and the aged men, whose suffering is more and deeper than they endure who fare forth with their comrades to fight and the inevitable slaughter of non-combatants—they who chance to live in the path of the war—we have no faculty with which to imagine the tragedy that has already broken and crushed the peasantry of Belgium and of northern and eastern France.

> While we were looking a shell burst in the hamlet of Waterloo, whose red brick houses were clustered almost at our feet.
> A few minutes later a procession of fugitive villagers came plodding up the cobble-paved road, headed by an ashen-faced peasant, pushing a wheelbarrow, and with weeping women clinging to his arm. In the wheelbarrow, atop a pile of household goods, was sprawled the body of a little boy. He could not have been more than seven. His little knickerbockered legs and playworn shoes protruded grotesquely from under a heap of bedding. When they lifted it we could see his face had been torn away by a shell.
> Beside him lay his little sister, a tot of three, with blood streaming from a shell wound in her face but clinging convulsively to a toy lamb which once had been white but now was red with blood.
> I shall take away with me from this war many terrible memories, but I think the one that will always remain most vivid will be these pitiful forms.

Our imaginations are lost in contemplating the whole hideous picture, but this detail, this tiny corner of the vast canvas is in reality a miniature of the whole. Multiply this by—a hundred thousand? a million? five million? who knows?—and you have the whole horrible picture.

But there are some things better than life. There are some things which are gloriously worth dying for. There are some things gloriously worth giving your son for, and your husband and your father, and suffering for yourself in poverty and heart-break all the rest of your days. Truth and honor and the well being of others and the ideal of a better social order for future generations—these are all worth while for a man to lay down his life and for a woman to give up her husband or a mother to give up her son. To help establish these supreme moral goods is the great business of living, and if it takes life to establish them our humanity has always been heroically willing to give life without stint and without whining.

It is not soft sentimentality, therefore, that moves us to deplore this present war. Our hearts revolt at it because there is no worth while moral issue at stake. It is a mad war, an irrational war, a hysterical and frenzied slaughter. And the thing wherein humanity suffers most is not in the mere shedding of blood, but the halting and inevitable turning back of those movements which during the long period of peace have been making for a new humanity, a new social order.

Miss Jane Addams has recently called attention to this aspect of the world situation with a vividness which only a soul highly sensitive to the forces of social progress could impart. Having spent her life to secure better conditions of living for little children, the ignorant, the aged and for women, Miss Addams feels with peculiar force the changed conditions under which social reform will have to proceed after the war is over.

Social progress will have to begin all over again, she says.

Here are the movements for pensioning the aged, for restricting the physical labor of women in industry, for relieving the squalor of slum conditions in great cities and for bringing to the peasant classes of Europe the culture and advantages hitherto denied them.

Such movements for uplift presuppose national wealth. But the nations are coming out of this war poor.

Such movements presuppose leisure, the shortening of hours of labor and the widening of the margin of time for culture and human intercourse. But the nations are coming out of the war with the facilities of industry greatly depleted, and it will be the fate of hundreds of thousands of women to take the place in industry made vacant by the killing off of men bread-winners in battle.

What legislature or parliament will be in a state of mind to consider the finer devices for humanizing life, for leveling up social conditions—devices like the minimum wage, the old-age pension, the eight hour day, the sanitary protection of the environment in which men work, and a score of others which the last quarter century has discussed and tested—when their nations confront the vast brute facts which this war will leave with them?

It has been hard enough to get the human point of view defined in our legislatures during these times of peace and affluence. It will be incomparably harder when the war has broken down so much of the scaffolding by which man has been ascending.

In respect to human progress this war is unspeakably evil and only evil. It marks an awful relapse. No philosophizing can show mankind any compensation. The filmy threads by which the whole world was being surely though slowly woven into a normal and interdependent unity have been ruthlessly broken off, and hatred and recrimination are doing their brutalizing work.

Yes, many things must be begun all over again.

But with God's help we'll do them better next time!

The Kingdom of Heaven

A Sermon on the Text: "Repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand."

BY L. O. BRICKER.

Those attending the General Convention this week and next will be seeing the face and hearing the directing voice of the pastor of the Atlanta church of Disciples, but probably his many duties of organization will so occupy him that no occasion will be afforded for an expression of his mind and heart such as his people enjoy from week to week. The sermon we are presenting to our readers was preached by Mr. Bricker a year ago, and gives an insight into his type of thinking and preaching. We have asked Rev. Dr. White to write the accompanying word which is a tribute any pastor might well covet from such a colleague.

SOME years ago as a fruit of the Spanish-American war, the Philippine islands became a possession province of America: and its millions of ignorant, barbarous, and semi-civilized people became the wards of America. The American flag was raised over that country, and before the face of the world we took possession of it. Then our problem was: what shall we do with it? It is a possession and province of America; how can we Americanize it? How get American thought, ideals, principles and civilization into these people, so that at last they may become Americans? How go about setting up the kingdom of America, the principles of American life and liberty and order, in the Philippines? Who will go for us, and whom can we send?"

First, we sent out a great American to be governor of the Philippines, to represent American law and order and liberty and justice, to those people who had never known liberty or law or order or justice. Next, we sent out an army of American school teachers, to gather the Filipino boys and girls and teach them the American language, customs, habits, ways of thinking and dressing and doing and living. Next, we sent out another army of missionaries to teach the people the American religion, ideals and morals. And these civil officers, teachers and missionaries became the preachers of the gospel of Americanism to the Filipinos.

APPLYING THE ILLUSTRATION.

Now, I trust that you are following me and seeing what it is that I am trying to illustrate. Just as the Philippines became a possession and province of America, so the earth is the Lord's, and its people His people. And the problem which the American government faced, and faces, how to set up the kingdom of America in the Philippines, and make Americans out of Filipinos, is an illustration of the problem of God—how to set up the kingdom of heaven on earth, make saints out of sinners, and transform them into citizens of the heavenly kingdom. And the means which the American government uses, sending officers, teachers and missionaries, who are the preachers of the gospel of Americanism to the Filipinos, is an illustration of the method of Jesus, going through all the villages and cities, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of heaven, and sending his disciples into all the cities and towns, saying to them: "As ye go, preach, saying: The kingdom of heaven is at hand."

THE HEART OF JESUS' MESSAGE.

And the heart of the message of Jesus finds illustration here also. "From that time Jesus began to preach and say, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." We might be living in a different world if all preachers had followed the method of Jesus. As a rule, preachers have not preached the Gospel of Jesus, but of our theological systems and plans of salvation, in which heaven and hell have been held up as the supreme motives why men should repent. Is not this the doctrine we have always heard: "Repent, or the devil will get you. Repent, or you will be lost. Repent, or you cannot go to heaven. Repent, or you will go to hell." "From that time Jesus began to preach and to say: Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Repent, for a larger, freer, nobler life is come unto you, a happier, sweeter, better life is at hand for you. His sermons were not threats. He began with "Blessed, Blessed...." The sanity of this method is illustrated by the teacher in the Philippines. The American Christian teacher finds a naked, dirty, ignorant Filipino boy, utterly satisfied with his nakedness and dirt and idleness, and says to him: "O, boy, repent! Change from your poor and miserable life, not because the devil will get you if you don't, for the devil has you already—the devil of ignorance and depravity and dirt—but repent, for the kingdom of America is at hand. There is a large, free, useful life possible for you: the life of a clean, clothed body, cultured mind, better habits, useful occupation, a life such as neither you, nor your fathers, have ever known. I am come that you may have this life; to make you a citizen of America." This is the gospel, the good news, to the Filipino. And this is the gospel of the kingdom of heaven which Jesus preached—the gospel of a larger, deeper, better, fuller life. "I am come that you may have life, and have it more abundantly." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." "Follow me." "This is life eternal, to know God, and Jesus Christ, whom he hath sent." Repent, for the kingdom of heaven, with its large, full, rich life is at hand. "As many as receive me, to them I give power to become the sons of God." "He that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Rev. L. O. Bricker, surrounded by the men of First Church, who are directing the Various Departments of the Convention's Entertainment.

WHO IS IN THE KINGDOM?

The kingdom of heaven on earth is made up of those who hear this gospel, turn to it in belief and obedience, take Christ for Master and Lord, follow him, drink of his spirit, live his life, and do the will of God. "Whoso doeth the will of my father who is in heaven the same is my brother and sister and mother." And this is the prayer of the kingdom: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Now, the Bible contains no teaching about "getting into heaven" as the object of life. I know that our theology holds this before us as the supreme reason why men should repent and become Christians, and be good and righteous, that we may go to heaven when we die. "O, you must be a lover of the Lord; Or you can't go to heaven when you die," says the hymn of our childhood; but this is foreign to the spirit of the New Testament.

Not to get us into heaven, but to get heaven into us, is the theme of Jesus. To get the spirit of heaven into human lives on this earth, and with these heaven-filled lives, set up the kingdom of heaven on earth: and enlarge this kingdom by getting heaven into still more and more lives, until at last the prophetic cry of the angel is heard: "Behold, the kingdoms of the world have become the kingdom of our God and His Christ." Then all shall know him, from the least unto the least unto the greatest and this will be the new earth, and every city a holy city.

JESUS' THEME.

This is the theme of Jesus. But it is not the theme of popular theology. The Latin system of theology, which is the foundation of all systems, is based upon the proposition that the world is hopelessly in the grip of the devil, and that evil is all powerful. Therefore, the best thing that a Christian can do is to escape from this wicked world, and save his soul alive; and if one would be a saint, let him flee away from the evil world and hide himself in some secluded place and give himself up to the work of saving his soul. Through a thousand years the Latin church has made monks and nuns of men and women, and has never believed that the world could be saved; all that could be done was to rescue a few from the wreck and ruin. This was the theology of John Bunyan, in his Pilgrim's Progress. "Christian" found himself in a wicked world; his one aim was to escape from it, and save his soul; his one thought was to get out of this terrible world without the stain of defilement upon his garments; his whole life was one long flight from evil. It never occurred to him to settle down anywhere and try to transform a community, and set up the kingdom of heaven in that place. No thought of transformation ever entered his mind, his one thought was translation, transmigration, getting out of this wicked world and getting safe into heaven. He did not seem to understand that the program of Jesus is transfiguration, not transportation. The "Pilgrim's Progress" has shaped the theology of our childhood, and is the popular idea today. One thought is uppermost in the Christian mind of our times—to get into heaven at last. How many times we have heard good Christians sigh and say: "If I can only get into heaven at last, the thorny path and the dark clouds do not matter."

GET HEAVEN INTO YOU.

Well, bless your heart, of course you will get into heaven, if you are headed that way; your heavenly Father will see to that. But the great fact of present and immediate importance is to get heaven into you, and to make you a living, active, working member in the kingdom of heaven on this earth. Once we get heaven into us this earth is a mighty good place, and, so far as this life goes, the best possible place for you. And until we get heaven into us, heaven is the last place we ought to want to go to. What would a man do in heaven if he did not have the spirit of heaven in him? A man without heaven in him would be wretched on the golden streets; he would be smitten with ennui amid the choiring angels. The water of life would not quench his thirst, and the tree of life would not feed his hunger. But if Christ be formed within us, if we have the spirit of Christ, and have been transformed into his image, if heaven is within us, we might go into the very abode of the lost and through all the pits of perdition, as the three Hebrew children went through the fiery furnace, and our joy would remain with us. For it is not where we are, but what we are that makes heaven and hell. "Myself am heaven and hell." No matter what the outward condition of our lives, nor how many the pains and troubles, if we have heaven within us, nothing can separate us from the love of God.

AMERICA AND HEAVEN.

Coming back to our illustration: Suppose a Filipino boy, having heard of the wonders of the life in America, the beauty of the cities and the pleasures of the streets, should be possessed of one aim and desire—to go to America. "If I could only get into that wonderful country, it would be heaven to me." And then his teacher would say to him: "It would be no joy to you to go to America until you are Americanized. Wait until you get the spirit of America into you. If you go now, you would not feel at home. They speak a language there that you do not yet understand. Their habits and customs and ways would be strange to you. You would be an outsider, miserable and lonely. Wait until you become an American, speak the language, think the thought, live the life. We have come, not to take you to America, but to bring America to you; to make your country

The Convention Pastor

AN APPRECIATION OF REV. L. O. BRICKER, BY HIS NEIGHBOR, REV. JOHN E. WHITE, OF THE SECOND BAPTIST CHURCH.

The First Christian Church of Atlanta, and all the churches, justly admire Rev. L. O. Bricker. Probably a more signal success has never attended the leadership of a southern pastor. His own communion surely must recognize the difference wrought in its whole front in this section of the South through his ministry. Those who marked the place of the Disciples of Christ in Atlanta five years ago as negligible, or who saw with sympathy its discouraging struggles, take notice now of a vital and aggressive force conquering and to conquer. Dr. Bricker's predecessors wrought well, but he, building on their foundations, has constructed his own broadly and has built on it an achievement beyond the reach of doubts and fears. I should say that the people he represents are more than 100 per cent stronger in the Christian force and influence in the community of Atlanta than they were five years ago.

It would be impossible for me to record this fact for publication if his achievements consisted merely in a denominational success. The leader of an adjoining church of another denomination would not take pleasure in this sort of tribute if Dr. Bricker and his church had accomplished such results in a sectarian spirit and with a sectarian motive. But the facts are precisely the contrary. We have all felt their impulse helpfully. Their initiative in Sunday-school enterprise is mainly responsible for the fact that other Sunday-schools in Atlanta have almost doubled their efficiency within the past two years. The great contest of 1913 between the First Christian and the Second Baptist churches was Dr. Bricker's proposition. Its consequences were remarkable, not only in the strong competition aroused, which put the churches on their mettle, but in the beautiful spirit it demonstrated as the practical and proper relation of churches in our present denominational separateness. When the contest was done, the two churches were hanging about each other's necks, in some exhaustion, to be sure, but in Christian joy. They had discovered one another, and saw that, after all, they were rivals only for their common Lord.

Dr. Bricker's personality is pervasively inoculating. He radiates well and unconsciously. He preaches the love of God in the pulpit, no doubt. I do not have the pleasure of hearing him preach, but I have noted that he preached the love of God on the streets and in strenuous committee meetings, and that he never undertakes the impossible of preaching the love of God with his fists. He is a soft-spoken dynamo, a sort of catapultic gentleness.

It is perfectly apparent that he thinks between Sundays. He plans his work and works his plans. Somehow he puts enough sugar in his methods to attract the aloof spirits which incline to linger around the circumference, and secures what is the despair of many pastors—a congregation of the congregation. There is a constant rolling up of the sleeves at the First Christian, in fact I think they have discarded sleeves altogether over there.

Just now, I notice Dr. Bricker appears a bit war-worn. He is chief mobilizer for the great army of Disciples, who are beginning to gather from ten thousand camps with "Atlanta" on their banners. When the great Convention assembles in this city it will find a perfect "brick" of a Bricker doing nothing but waiting for it, and if any turn of arrangement requires readjustment, he will calmly say in the language of Von Moltke at Sedan to some perplexed lieutenant, "Cabinet Three, drawer number Five."

JOHN E. WHITE.

Hindrances to Christian Unity

BY E. V. ZOLLARS.

This article by President E. V. Zollars, of Phillips University, is a singularly encouraging statement. Mr. Zollars is always counted with the ultra-conservative group of leaders of our people whose statements of the Disciples' plea for Christian unity so often take on a tone of cocksureness that can hardly be distinguished from bigotry. We confess to a grateful and happy surprise in finding this irenic and gracious-minded article from Mr. Zollars' pen in the columns of The Christian Courier of Dallas, Texas. The recognition of the facts pointed out by him and the consistent adoption of and adherence to the fine spirit of his message by us all would greatly advance the cause of unity both among us Disciples and in the whole Church of Christ.

IT is encouraging to know that much progress has been made along the lines of Christian union since the day of Thomas Campbell. The subject is no longer tabooed or shoved into the background and counted as unworthy of notice, but Christian union has come to be a popular pulpit theme among all the religious bodies of the Protestant world. Unfortunately, however, the divisions of one hundred years ago still exist, and even the evils have been aggravated by new divisions that have sprung up from time to time. A superficial view might lead to the conclusion that the progress had been away from, instead of towards, Christian union, but such a conclusion would be manifestly far from the truth. The bitterness of sectarianism has been overcome, at least to a considerable degree, the desirability of union is being recognized by a continually and rapidly increasing number among all religious bodies, and the feeling is becoming quite general that Christian union must come and will come in the not distant future.

It is well for us to consider some of the hindrances that lie in the way of the accomplishment of the great end for which Christ prayed.

I

I would mention that in the minds of many of the Disciples of Christ the method of union has come to fill a place out of proportion to the plea itself. In our local congregations we have grown complacent and self-satisfied with the fact that we have reproduced, in a very large measure, the apostolic Christianity, or, at least we think we have done so, forgetting, it seems to me, the ultimate and practical realization of the union contemplated by our restoration movement. We think our duty done when an occasional sermon to our people has been preached. How many of our preachers make an effort to bring together the preachers of the various religious bodies of their towns or cities for the consideration of the subject of Christian union? How many ever make any practical attempt to realize the thing that lay heaviest on the heart of Christ when the sorrows of Gethsemane were close upon him? I do not believe the people in the average church hear as many sermons on Christian union as were preached in the average church of fifty years ago. Surely the time is coming when some more practical measures, looking to the union of Christians than we have yet taken, should be inaugurated.

II.

Another matter that I would mention as standing in the way of union, or at least crowding out of our minds the importance of union, is our organized work for missions and benevolence. Surely, I will not be understood as saying anything against missionary or benevolent activity. A great people numbering a million and one-half certainly should recognize the great obligation to carry out the commission of our Lord, and to engage in all forms of benevolence that make organized work desirable, but we should not forget that as a people we did not crystallize upon the idea of missions or benevolence, but upon union, and that this fundamental question must not be obscured by any other consideration, if we are true to our mission as a people. Personally, I have always been an ardent friend of missions and of every form of benevolent work, and I would utter no word that would discourage in the slightest degree activity along those lines, but I would sound the note of warning against allowing our attention to be diverted from the only thing that in my mind justifies our separate existence as a people. Let us ever keep in mind that the best way to promote missionary work and every form of Christian benevolence is to bring to pass the union for which we plead. Whenever Christian union is brought about, more progress will be made in one year towards the evangelization of the world than in ten years as matters now stand. I do not believe this is an exaggeration.

III.

The third obstacle standing in the way of Christian union I verily believe is the sectarian spirit. An unsectarian plea is not always necessarily accompanied by an unsectarian spirit. Sectism has ever been the bane of the Christian world. The tendency of men to divide up into classes, cliques and clans seems to show itself everywhere. Even the individual church has often been retarded in its work on account of the divisions that exist when the sectarian spirit manifests itself between the different religious bodies of the time. It is very hard for some people, even while pleading for union, to show an unsectarian spirit to their religious neighbors. I have seen this spirit stand in the way of many practical measures looking towards the union that is theoretically desired. The unsectarian plea must be accompanied by an unsectarian spirit if practical results are to be achieved.

IV.

Another barrier to Christian union is the prejudice that exists among the various religious bodies and from which we, as a people, are not free. Prejudice is a necessary concomitant of the sect spirit. The two go together and they make union a practical impossibility as long as they exist. There is no better way to eliminate prejudice than for each religious body to magnify the good points of its neighbors —in short, magnify the points of agreement, which, after all, are more numerous than the points of difference. When the various Christian bodies learn to love each other better, and to appreciate each other's worth, it will not be a difficult matter to eliminate those things that now serve to divide. If a little effort is made, Christian people will be surprised at how much good they can find in their religious neighbors, and they will discover how few are the points of difference, and they will also see that their contentions arise, not over things that are found in the Bible, but about things that are extra-Biblical —that is, about human additions to, and subtraction from, the doctrines and practices of the apostolic Church.

V.

Another barrier to union is sectarian bigotry—in other words, the assumption by the individual that the church to which he adheres has all the truth and none of the errors that afflict the religious world, and that there is nothing further to be desired. This is closely akin to prejudice. In fact, both are the legitimate fruits of sectarianism. Bigotry is a sort of Pharisaism which manifests the same unlovely and un-Christian spirit wherever and whenever it exists. The assumption that "I am more holy than thou" has done more to perpetuate division than differences in creeds. The disposition to form and maintain close corporations is seen in all religious bodies, and it is the exact opposite of the broad, liberal spirit that always and everywhere animates the true Christian.

VI.

The last barrier to Christian union that I will mention is the failure to clearly distinguish between matters of faith and matters of opinion. After every principle vital to Christianity has been recognized and insisted upon, without the slightest surrender, there is still left a wide realm for individual opinions, which never should be made matters of faith or conditions of fellowship. In fact, in any of the religious bodies of the present time there are differences of opinion among the individual members on many matters. I am convinced that there is as much difference of opinion on a great many questions between members of the same religious organization as between members of different organizations, and yet oftentimes these opinions are exalted to the realm of faith and made barriers to union between believers. Christian people must learn to allow large liberty of opinion if union is to become an accomplished fact. This means, of course, that there must be clear discrimination between matters of faith and matters of opinion, and that in the latter the utmost freedom must be allowed.

But notwithstanding the obstacles that seem to stand in the way of the union for which we plead and pray, it is encouraging to know that substantial progress is being made. Sectarian prejudice is growing weaker. Bigotry and exclusiveness are less in evidence. The desire for union is growing stronger, and, please God, the day is not distant when the prayer of Christ shall be answered that believers shall be one as Christ and the Father are one. God speed the day

The Successful Parishioner

An Article Bringing Out the Other Half of a Much Discussed Subject.

BY H. S. BENJOMA.

A GOOD deal is said and written in these days about the Successful Pastor, and much needs to be said, for much depends on him. Almost anybody is able to tell you what kind of a man he ought to be, and what are the things that will make him successful. He must be a scholar and an orator—must not be too old, though he cannot well be too young. He must be well groomed and always presentable, a profound thinker, and a good mixer. He must be a skillful financier in order to make his salary hold out, and he must be a wise counselor in every matter that may come up. He is expected to be seen frequently in the homes of his people, and to make himself so agreeable that they will always want him to come again. He must be a good sermon maker, and above all, he must know how not to make them too long. Yes, everybody knows what is necessary for a successful pastor, and it is a great pity there are so few who conform to the ideal that is so reasonable, and so common.

There is not so much said and written about the Successful Parishioner, though there ought to be, for he is more necessary for the progress of the Kingdom than the Successful Pastor, because there are so many more of him. We very much need better ministers and better preachers—more wise and faithful and efficient leaders; but there is an even greater need of good followers—more faithful, true and efficient men and women to stand in the ranks. It is quite as necessary for the progress of the Kingdom that we have Successful Parishioners as that we have Successful Pastors. If the Parishioner fails to be successful it is not always so conspicuous as when the Pastor fails, but often it is quite as serious a disaster. Let me point out some of the marks of a Successful Parishioner.

LOVES THE CHURCH.

He loves his church. He believes that it is important, and gives it the foremost place in his thought and care. He does not devote to it simply such remnants of time and effort as he can spare as well as not from his business and other interests. It is one of the things to be provided for and looked after promptly, and as a matter of course. He may belong to other organizations and fraternities; but he always puts his Church before them, and never allows them to interfere with his Church duties. He never puts his lodge in the place of the prayer-meeting, nor spends so much of his time and money in promoting other interests that he has none left for the work of the Kingdom. His Church comes next to his home in his affections, and in his thought and care.

The Successful Parishioner is not a Boss. He is not anxious to be a leader. He may have qualities of leadership that naturally bring him to the front: but he does not claim that place as his right, nor feel abused and offended if he is left in the rear. He is willing to lead if that place is assigned to him, and he is just as willing to follow. It takes as much skill and oftentimes more grace to be a good follower than a good leader. Some men who are successful in the latter position break down entirely in the former, but the Successful Parishioner is a good follower as well as a good leader. He does not push himself to the front, but he is ready to undertake any work or to fill any place that is assigned to him.

A BURDEN BEARER.

The Successful Parishioner is ready and willing to bear burdens. There are many heavy burdens to be borne in connection with the Church and the Kingdom. There are some people who are quite ready to share the benefits that come with these institutions, but when there are heavy responsibilities to be carried, and disagreeable duties to be performed, they are not there. You cannot depend upon them for those things. In some way they will shirk out of them. But it is not so with the Successful Parishioner; he takes these heavy burdens, and bears them like a man. Often you will see him carrying, not only his own burden, but also that of his less dependable brother. It is pretty hard for him sometimes, but he has his reward in increased strength, and perfect manhood.

The Successful Parishioner is able to do "team-work." He can co-operate with other people. Sometimes you will find a man who is quite efficient as an individual, but no good whatever in working with others. Give him a job alone, and he will do it well; but he can't seem to work with a crowd. He is not able to relate himself and his efforts to any general movement. If he comes into the movement at all he is a disturbing element; he feels uncomfortable himself, and makes everybody else uncomfortable, and soon he steps out of the ranks. But it is not so with the Successful Parishioner. He can work with other people. He stays in the ranks, and his presence there is always a help and an inspiration.

DOES NOT GET THE SULKS.

The Successful Parishioner does not get the sulks. If things do not go as he wants them to, he does not fly off the handle. He does not go off into a corner and pout, or say as little children sometimes do when things go wrong, "I won't play!" He is able to keep good-natured when he can't have his own way, and when his pet plans are not adopted, he will co-operate heartily in carrying out the plans of the other man. He is not so much in love with his own ideas that he can see no good in those of other people. He believes that a poor plan heartily carried out is better than a good plan with dissension and bitterness. No, the Successful Parishioner is too much of a man to go off in the sulks. You will never find him in the corner pouting. He is in the best place for service that he can find, tugging away with a cheerful face and an encouraging word.

The Successful Parishioner lets his Pastor into his life. He does not hold him at arm's length, but permits him to come up close to him, and gives him the joy and inspiration of a brother's loving confidence. Sometimes people think a Pastor is cold and unsympathetic, when the fact is that they shut up like a clam when he comes near, and will not let him have any chance at them. But the Successful Parishioner meets his Pastor half way. He gives him a hearty welcome, not only to his house, but also to the deep experiences of his life, and in that way he helps to make him successful. In some way you must get in where a man lives if you are going to be anything to him, and you cannot do that unless he will open the door.

HIS PASTOR'S FRIEND.

The Successful Parishioner is his Pastor's friend. He is ready to appreciate any good thing that he may do or say, and he loves him so much that when he gets off the track, and says and does foolish things, as is sometimes the case, he goes to him like a brother, and frankly talks the matter over, and so the bond of brotherhood between them is made strong and tender. He is not indiscriminate in his praise, nor harsh and heedless in his criticism. He trusts his Pastor, and his Pastor trusts him, and there is a good understanding between them.

The Successful Parishioner sometimes makes "Pastoral Calls"—that is, he sometimes calls on his Pastor. It is a mistake to think that the Pastor should make all the calls. The people should make some. He needs such ministry as much as the people do. He has his perplexities and problems that press pretty heavily upon him at times, and nothing helps him more, nothing gives him more courage and cheer, than to have the Successful Parishioner call around once in a while. It gives him a sense of fellowship that enables him to take up his heavy burden, and go on his way rejoicing. The Pastor needs to be called upon as much as the people do, and the Successful Parishioner does not forget it. How welcome such calls are none but a weary and discouraged Pastor ever knows.

The hope of the Church and of the Kingdom is largely with the Successful Parishioner, and that hope is bright and strong in these days because there are so many of them.

The Chant of the Vultures

BY EDWIN MARKHAM.

We are circling, glad of the battle; we rejoice in the smell of the smoke.
Fight on in the hell of trenches: we publish your fame with a croak!
Ye will lie in dim heaps when the sunset blows cold on the reddening sand:
Yet fight, for the dead will have wages—a death-clutch of dust in the hand.
Ye have given us banquet, O kings, and still do we clamor for more:
Vast, vast is our hunger, as vast as the sea-hunger gnawing the shore.

'Tis well ye are swift with your signals—the blaze of the banners, the blare
Of the bugles, the boom of battalions, the cannon-breath hot on the air.
It is for our hunger ye hurry, it is for our feast ye are met:
Be sure we will never forget you, O servants that never forget!
For we are the Spirits of Battle, the peerage of greed we defend:
Our lineage rose from the Night, and we go without fellow or friend.

We were, ere our servant Sesostris spread over the Asian lands
The smoke of the blood of the peoples, the ashes he blew from his brands.
We circled in revel for ages above the Assyrian stream,
While Babylon builded her beauty, and faded to dust and to dream.

We scattered our laughter on Europe—and Troy was a word and a waste,
The glory of Carthage was ruined, the grandeur of Rome was effaced!

And we blazoned the name of Timour, as he harried his herd of kings,
And the host of his hordes wound on, a dragon with undulant rings.
And we slid down the wind upon France, when the steps of the earthquake passed,
When the Bastile bloomed into flame, and the heavens went by on the blast.
We hung over Austerlitz cheering the armies with jubilant cries;
We scented three kings at the carnage, and croaked our applause from the skies.

O kings, ye have catered to vultures—have chosen to feed us forsooth
The joy of the world and her glory, the hope of the world and her youth,
O kings, ye are diligent lackeys: we laurel your names with our praise,
For ye are the staff of our comfort, for ye are the strength of our days.
Then spur on the host in the trenches to give up the sky at a stroke:
We tell all the winds of their glory: we publish their fame with a croak!

"As We Forgive"

By William E. Barton.

Of all articles of the Christian faith, no one is so cherished and so little believed as forgiveness. Science knows nothing about forgiveness, and theology has occupied itself largely with inventing substitutes for it. We have said that God forgives, and then have tried to show how God does something else than forgive. But God has taught us that we are to forgive, and to interpret his forgiveness as of the same kind as that with which we are familiar. "Forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors," is at once the measure of our own hope of forgiveness, and our estimate of the moral quality of that of God. But most unfortunately, we have so perverted the very gospel of Christ itself as to make his work, the very work which shows us that God can forgive and does, the basis of a set of theories which assume that God does something else than forgive; that he makes conditions of forgiveness which involve the essential elements of punishment.

Let us assure ourselves that God forgives, and that the Son of man had power on earth to forgive, and that we are to forgive as God forgives. And, lest we dishonor God by assuming that there are conditions attached to his forgiveness which would nullify our own, let us never accuse God of pretending to forgive, on any terms that would not be counted forgiveness among ourselves.

I once went to a distinguished surgeon to ask him to indorse the application of a young woman for a position for which she had applied. His official relations with the institution where she asked employment were such that his indorsement was not only necessary, but was practically equivalent to an appointment. And it chanced that he and I were of the very few who knew that this young woman had once done a very wrong act.

I told him I was confident that the young woman would do well; that she was thoroughly changed; and that no serious risk attached to her appointment.

"And yet," said he, "you know very well that she would not be accepted if the whole story were known."

"I know that," said I, "and therefore I ask that you secure her appointment with some departure from the customary formalities."

He said to me: "You ministers have ways of providing for the forgiveness of sin that we doctors know nothing about. I am not a religious man; I will say further to you, I am not a moral man; and I do not judge this young woman by your standard of morality. But I think I know better than you how impossible it is to escape the penalty of sin. You may be able to do it in theology, but we do not have any well-settled theory of forgiveness in medicine."

I told him that in theology theories are nearly as chaotic and self-contradictory as in medicine.

"Ours are not self-contradictory," said he. "They are at least consistent, and they are remorseless."

"You are wrong," said I. "They are finely inconsistent; for with all your theory that sin cannot be forgiven, you are going to forgive this girl, and help her to a position where she can earn an honest living."

And he did. His theory was all against forgiveness, but he forgave. And he was never sorry for it.

God forgives. Christ came to show that God forgives. Men have believed that truth enough to come to God in Christ; but their theories about it have been very largely wrong.

Happily our religion is better than our theology, and our practice is better than our theory. We, too, have learned to forgive in the identical way that God forgives; and we can therefore pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors." There is no other way for God to forgive than that which he has taught us. God's way is at least as good as ours, and possibly better; but it rests on the same ethical principle. The principle may be inconsistent with our theories, but if so the fault is with the theories.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

a kingdom of America, to make you a citizen of America."

"The kingdom of heaven is within you," said Jesus: and to this the apostle adds: "Ye are no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and the household of God."

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE SAVED.

The word "saved" has also been corrupted from its New Testament meaning. What, in the mind of Jesus and the apostles, does it mean to be saved? In all of our evangelistic preaching and in our prayers, we make constant use of the word, saved. In preaching we use it as meaning saved from the penalty and consequences of our sins, saved from death, saved from hell. In our prayers we say: "Forgive our sins, and save us at last." "Forgive us now, and in death save us." "Save us finally with all the redeemed in heaven," our one conception being escape, security. The word in the New Testament means saved from the low, base, beggarly elements of our earthly lives; and saved unto the large free glorious spiritual life in Christ Jesus; saved unto God. Saved from poor, narrow lives, from sordid and base thought, from low and mean aims, from sin and uncleanness; saved unto the glorious liberty of the sons of God, made free by the truth, walking in the joy of the Lord, sitting in heavenly places with Christ.

And such saved people are to become saviors of others. The Christan is to live a life so beautiful, so full, so joyous, so complete, that the world will turn to it as a thing to be desired.

Don't Die on Third

How to Make a Home Run in the Game of Life.

The war across the sea has so completely absorbed the interest of the public that many things have gone begging for attention. Baseball is not among these. As the end of the season draws near we are glad to reprint this editorial from the Detroit "News."—THE EDITOR.

IT was some time ago, when the Tigers were playing the team from Cleveland.

Moriarty was on third base.

Around the chalk-lined arena 18,000 persons strained themselves in tense expectancy. The score was a tie. Two men were out. The fate of the game centered in the white-bloused figure that shuttled back and forth near third. Tigers and Naps stood up at their benches, for the decisive moment had come.

Moriarty was at third.

He got there by the ordinary events of the game. At the bat he hit the ball and ran to first. Another player bunted and sacrificed himself to run Moriarty to second. Then a "long fly" advanced him to third. There he stood, alert and active, with the fate of the game in his quick eye, his quicker brain and his running legs. If he failed, he failed not alone, for the team failed with him. If he won, he won not alone, but gave the men behind him their chance for "home." In him centered the hopes and fears of thousands upon thousands of spectators who had forgotten to breathe, and so still was the great park that even the breeze seemed forgetful to blow.

Moriarty was at third.

Much as it meant to have advanced that far, nothing had been accomplished by it. Three-quarter runs are not marked up on the score boards. Third base runs never raised a pennant. Third base is not a destination, but the last little way station on the road home. It is better not to run at all than to run to third and "die." The 18,000 spectators that kept ominously silent at that moment could be changed into a vortex of cheering hero-worshipers or into an animated groan by the kind of work a man did between third and "home." There is no time for self-gratulation on third. The question is how to get safely away from it. The man on second wants your place if he can get it, but if you get safely "home" no one can take that achievement from you. One way to get off third is to wait for some fellow to bat you off; another way is to get away on your own initiative and according to your own secret plan.

Moriarty was on third.

A CRITICAL MOMENT.

It is 90 feet from third to home. Sometimes that 90 feet is a leaden mile, sometimes a mere patter of lightning-like steps. If it is a mile to you, you are a failure, and the great circle of spectators groan for your incompetency; if it is but a lightning streak, you are the great man of the baseball day. Moriarty was intent on dwindling that 90 feet instead of lengthening it. How many things converged in the few moments he stood there. He watched the signals of the Cleveland catcher—he gathered they meant a high ball. A high ball meant that the runner might duck low to the base while the catcher's hands were in the air after the ball. Moriarty knew, too, that a high ball required that the pitcher "wind up" his arm in a certain way. He knew also that pitchers have a way of "winding up" when they don't intend to throw the ball. More than that, he knew the pitcher in the box was left-handed and could not keep his eyes on third when "winding up." That was why Moriarty closely followed all the strange little signals pitcher and catcher were making. There was another consideration, too—Mullin was up to bat. Moriarty knew that Mullin has a batting average of something like .250, which means that Mullin hits safely about once in four times at bat. Would the ball about to be thrown be one of the hit, or one of the missed? No human calculation could even guess at it. If Mullin missed, it would be useless for Moriarty to run. If Mullin hit, there were still chances of his being put out at first, making Moriarty's run wholly uncounted and ending the inning. There was only one thing to do—make home between the time the pitcher "wound up" his arm past all recall and the time the ball landed in the catcher's glove—make home in the second of time when Mullin's hit or miss hung in futurity. It was to be a contest in speed between a five-ounce ball delivered with all the force of a superb pitching arm and the 170-pound body of Moriarty. An unequal contest at that, for the five-ounce ball travels only 60 feet while the runner from third must hurl his body over a distance of 90 feet. All these considerations are in the mind of Moriarty. He builds up his prospective run as an engineer builds a bridge over a torrent, step by step with infinite pains. Now the Cleveland pitcher is "winding up" his arm—round and round it swings—he poises himself—there is yet a fraction of a second in which he can recall his intended throw—Moriarty is crouched like a tiger about to spring—Now! Now!

"Christy" Matthewson, the ideal of American baseball-dom, who has scored as a man of sterling character as well as a mighty pitcher.

There is a white streak across the field!

A cloud of dust at the home plate!

The umpire stands with his hands extended, palms downward.

A bursting roar of acclaim echoes and re-echoes across the space of the park. Again and again it bursts forth in thrilling, electric power. Thirty-six thousand eyes strain toward the man who is slapping the dust from his white uniform.

Moriarty is home!

IN THE GAME OF LIFE.

All the world's a baseball diamond. You are one of the players. Perhaps you have reached first by your own efforts. It may be that the sacrifices of your parents or friends have enabled you to reach second. Then on someone's "long fly" into the business world—a "fly" that was not "long" enough to fluke on the rules of simple morality and square dealing, you have advanced to third. The opposition against you at third is stronger than at either first or second. At third you are to be reckoned with. Your opponents converge all their attention on you. Pitchers and catchers, coaches and opposing fans, are watching to tip off your plans and frustrate them. From third you become either a splendid success or a dismal failure.

Don't die on third!

What are you doing to win the score that life is ready to mark up against your name? Third base has no laurels on which you can rest. What are you doing on third? Are you waiting for someone to "bat you in?" Suppose he misses; his miss is yours, too. If you place all your dependence on someone else, his failure spells yours. What are you doing on third—waiting for "something to turn up?" Don't—nothing turns up, but the thumbs of the thousands of men who watch you may turn down, and make you a permanent failure. Moriarty wouldn't have scored had he waited, for Mullin didn't hit the ball—and that run was absolutely necessary to save the game. That run was gained in an unmeasurable fraction of time, but the difference between success and failure is very, very often measured in seconds.

DON'T DIE ON THIRD.

Had Moriarty been out the night before, he would have played the game according to routine; but Moriarty doesn't carouse. He doesn't smoke or drink. He is old-fashioned enough to go to church on Sunday. He knows that a clean life means a clear head. He knows that legs that tread the path of irregularity cannot win when running 90 feet against a swift ball that travels 60 feet. He respects his body and his mind, and they in turn serve him up to the last fraction of their power. Moriarty's run was not a foolhardy dash. It wasn't a toss-up with luck. It was deliberate, mathematical work. Any fool could have led off spectacularly, but only a trained body and an alert mind could have stolen home right under the nose of the catcher whose hands were closing over the ball. Even a game means work. Work itself is a game and has its rules as its sudden openings. So, don't die on third. Bring to third every bit of your honest strength: study conditions: postpone thinking of your luck until you hear the umpire call "safe."

THEN YOU'LL SCORE ALL RIGHT.

HOME AGAIN.

AUTUMN is the time of home-coming. Many people go away in the summer, for long or shorter times of rest and recreation. Perhaps the proportion of those who can join the number of actual vacationists is small. Many are unable to get more than a few fragments of rest time in the round of the year. But we usually think of the summer as the time when people are away on some sort of recreation. But the autumn brings them back again to the serious business of the year.

And there is deep satisfaction in such a return to the definite program of work.

Some are coming back from efforts to visit Europe. They are probably the most thankful of all to be home again, safe after the dangers and hardships to which this tragic year has exposed all foreign travelers.

Some are returning from summer homes, or vacation trips to mountain or seaside. They too are glad to be back. Nature has given them of her best in sunshine, wind and rain, and they are fitter for the daily business of living and working.

And some have had but a brief and hurried chance to mend the wear and breakage of the year with a few days of rest and change.

But all of us come back to our work with gladness. We are glad that we have the work to do, glad that the autumn brings us some freshness of spirit for daily duties, glad that we have a chance during the coming months to do the best work of our lives.

These are the gifts of God to all who, like Himself, are working in the big and busy world.

FAINT PRAISE.

IN HIS personal department in the Christian Evangelist Dr. J. H. Garrison devotes some space to a kindly report of a sermon preached by Dr. Willett at Pentwater, Mich., during vacation days, and is led into certain reflections on the interesting and conspicuous career of Dr. Willett, whose "winsome personality, fluent speech and wide scholarship make him a favorite in any public assembly." Dr. Garrison calls him "the leader, we might say, of a group of men at Chicago, and some of them elsewhere, against whom there is a great deal of feeling by a large number of brethren." And he goes on to say:

> Personally, we are not in agreement with some of the teaching of these men, of whom Dr. Willett is the least radical. But, from our point of view, they are our brethren, and we intend to love them and treat them as such. There must be room among us for men of widely differing opinions.

Our purpose in quoting Dr. Garrison's amiable appreciation of our Chicago colleague is chiefly to supplement what seem to us the insufficient descriptives he uses: "winsome personality, fluent speech and wide scholarship." Those who have known Dr. Willett intimately during these twenty years of which Dr. Garrison writes, have learned to conceive him in other terms than these rather accidental and surface qualities. His fluency, his winsomeness and his scholarship are lost sight of in the steady and increasing disclosure of the moral poise and spiritual depth of his personal life. His untemptible loyalty to the highest ideals of the Disciples of Christ, through years of unholy misrepresentation, has left a rich deposit of grace in his soul.

There are many among us who believe that the spiritual personality of H. L. Willett is one of the best gifts God has sent the Disciples of Christ in this generation. That the well-known organized conspiracy against his orthodoxy as a religious teacher could have so far succeeded as to give Dr. Garrison occasion not only to say that there is "a great deal of feeling against him by a large member of brethren," but to speak patronizingly himself, is a moral fact for which our brotherhood will have to render an account long before the day of judgment.

THE ARMY OF YOUTH.

ALL through September we have watched with keen interest the boys and girls as they have taken up afresh the big enterprise of education. Every morning the streets are full of the children going to school. Every afternoon, though not at so precise an hour, they pour out of the school buildings for the return. They go and come in all manner of ways.

Many of them in the cities go regularly in automobiles or electrics. In front of some schools the machines are packed by the scores. We confess to an amused sense of misplaced values when we see children who ought to walk, both for exercise and for the cultivation of democracy, carried three or four blocks to school. Not infrequently it is the cheapest boy or girl, when judged by the standards of value and efficiency, who goes in the most expensive car.

Then there is the street car multitude, who fill every seat, and afford such interesting experiences to older people by their eager, absorbed, high-pitched conversation, which quite frankly admits the public to all the academic, athletic and social secrets of school life.

And then the still larger army of those who throng the pavements, hurrying along with the joy and interest of young life to the work and pleasure of the day.

There is a tonic in this daily sight of the children. Teachers ought never to grow old. They have their hard work, and their host of perplexing problems, to be sure. But they have youth with them in never-failing abundance, and something of this enthusiasm and ageless buoyancy is theirs.

And even the man on the street must catch something of the contagious vitality of this never-ending army of youth.

ALLEGED FACT AND THE FACT.

AN ALMOST wanton disregard for facts characterizes an editorial in a contemporary Disciple newspaper on the subject of receiving the unimmersed into our churches. We refer to but one instance out of many in the article:

> We do know a few churches among us that have adopted the open membership plan, with the inevitable consequence of division rather than union. Such churches have driven out far more members than they have taken in, as a result of such a practice. This is Christian union with a vengeance!

Over against this statement we would place a single letter out of many scores of unpublished letters received since The Christian Century's recent questionnaire on this subject was closed. It is from Mr. C. M. Morris, a business man of Denver, a member of Central Church of which Rev. G. B. Van Arsdall is pastor. Mr. Morris says:

> If California convention was right in excommunicating Berkeley church then many other churches in various states should also be excommunicated. Right here in Colorado our two leading churches have been receiving the unimmersed into fellowship—only we call them "associate members." We explain to these members that we teach and practice immersion and that we hope some day they will come into fuller obedience to the Master. Then they are treated as any other member of the church. Fully 80 per cent of the members so received are later immersed. So if the Northern California convention was right in its action, the Colorado convention should excommunicate the Central and South Broadway Christian churches of Denver. If I remember correctly, Dr. B. B. Tylor was the first minister in our brotherhood to receive the unimmersed into fellowship. In this he was soon followed by Dr. W. B. Craig, pastor of Denver Central. The plan was presented to the local church and was approved without a dissenting vote. Perhaps the fact that the church papers did not start a row will account for the peacefulness and unanimity of the local situation. The churches have continued the practice, even though pastors have changed. Now if the Northern California convention was right then Dr. Tyler and Dr. Craig should be turned out, as they started the practice years before the present agitation. In fact, to be consistent, all of the ministers, churches and laymen that defend the practice should also be excommunicated.
> To my mind the whole matter is a question of church liberty in local practice, and the greatest danger of all is in using the Berkeley incident to create division and discord in the ranks of a people whose chief apologetic is Christian union. So long as some of our preachers consider it a greater victory to immerse a Presbyterian than it is to convert a sinner, we must expect bitter things to be said of our other preachers who insist on treating their religious neighbors as Christian people. Our churches must continue to use their judgment on local matters regardless of outside pressure.—C. M. MORRIS.

The telling point Mr. Morris makes—that whatever disturbance in a local church attends the adoption of the more generous practice is caused by meddling from outside, especially by certain church newspapers—fits the case precisely.

The attempt of the editor quoted above, to inflame a very small minority in the Berkeley, Cal., church into bringing suit against the congregation for possession of the property is the root-beginning of the whole controversy on the Pacific Coast.

Had he given more Christian advice, or refused to meddle at all, the Berkeley and California Disciples would have solved their problem in peace and love.

DR. MATHEWS AND DR. AINSLIE.

SPEAKING for the Baptists on the question of immersion, Dr. Shailer Mathews agrees with Dr. Peter Ainslie, who speaks for the Disciples, in the October issue of the Christian Union Quarterly. Dr. Mathews in setting forth the position of the Baptists on various subjects concludes thus:

> Their insistence upon immersion as the only mode of baptism results from their general positive relation to the New Testament, but historically and in view of the practices of English Baptists it is of less importance than the other positions.

Dr. Ainslie points out that "baptism by immersion has figured but little in the divisions of the church and will doubtless likewise figure but little in its unity." He continues:

> The Baptists did not become a separate people because of their practice of baptism by immersion; neither did the Disciples. The Baptists opposed infant baptism and for a long period practiced the baptism of adults by sprinkling. Their plea was for a regenerate church membership. In the origin of the Disciples baptism by immersion did not figure at all, and when Thomas Campbell was brought face to face with it he was greatly disturbed. Their plea was for the union of the divided house of Christ.

As usual, Dr. Ainslie's point of view is not only right but illuminating. Any movement for Christian unity that makes the re-baptism of Christendom a pre-condition of its success is as hopeless as it is impertinent.

That the Disciples did not in their origin and essential ideals have any such purpose is a most important bit of knowledge yet to be grasped by many Disciples themselves, and by most of their fellow Christians in the denominations.

We Disciples are today coming to see that the practice of Christian unity and the practice of baptism by immersion are not mutually exclusive practices: it is the insistence upon what Dr. Ainslie rightly calls re-baptism that is irreconcilable with the practice of Christian unity.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

NOT quite a year ago a Boston newspaper employed one Joseph Knowles to undertake an experiment in primitive living. He went into the Maine woods naked, and lived for several weeks, as he affirms, with no assistance save such as he procured with his own unaided exertions. The daily paper which employed him published photo reproductions of his letters sent out on birch bark, and written with a charred stick. He built a hut, he dug a pit in which he caught a bear. He killed the bear with a club, and wore his skin. He matched the intelligence of civilized man against the skill and cunning of primitive man, and proved that civilization has not weakened modern man beyond the capacity to enter the woods naked and meet all enemies from the mosquito to the bear, and to endure heat and cold and come out clothed and none the worse for the experiment.

But now comes a Maine guide, and in another paper declares that Knowles never slept a night in the open, that he wore his clothing, and bought the bear skin, and had a rifle, and built a fire with matches, and from beginning to end depended on the resources of civilization, plus an experienced guide. The two papers support their respective correspondents.

The guide is untruthful, in any event, for he helped with the hoax if there was a hoax. But it is alleged that the other man also prevaricated. The burden is upon him to show that he is not another Doctor Cook. It would be interesting to know just how such an experiment would result if honestly lived up to, but the results are worse then worthless, when they appear to be fraudulent.

It is difficult for a man who has lived in civilization to face honestly and willingly the conditions of primitive man. It could be done, and we believe successfully, but it should be done honestly if at all.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

THE past week has witnessed the opening of the university for the autumn quarter. It promises to be the most important year in the history of the institution. An increase in the number of students is expected each year. But this year several causes combine to swell the enrollment. The severe industrial conditions which make living so expensive naturally thwart many educational plans. But on the other hand, they help to create a deeper spirit of seriousness, which turns an increasing number of young people to an educational career.

Both in numbers and in quality the student body is said to be the most satisfactory in many years. Then, too, the impossibility of going abroad for graduate work in present circumstances has turned a very large number of advanced students to American universities for courses which they now discover are as competent as any that can be secured abroad.

Two buildings are approaching completion, the Classical and the Geological. President and Mrs. Judson are now on the Pacific, on their journey home from the Orient. The attendance in the Divinity School is the largest ever recorded. The membership of the Disciples' Divinity House will reach twenty this quarter. Plans for the new buildings of the Divinity House have been drawn and the campaign for funds is being taken up with fresh aggressiveness.

JUST WHERE IS THE CONNECTION?

SHALL our Churches Fellowship the Unimmersed?" is the brave and hopeful title set over an editorial in one of our Disciple newspapers. On reading the article, however, one has the feeling that there has been a printer's mistake somewhere, for the article appears to have no connection with the title.

One paragraph does declare plainly enough that our churches decidedly ought not receive such persons into our fellowship and says that such a practice would be unscriptural, but there is no Scripture reference given forbidding our having fellowship in our churches with any of those whom Christ has fellowship with in His Church. The rest of the article is taken up with reaffirming the well-known and indisputable position of the Disciples on the practice of baptism by immersion, a position which advocates of full Christian fellowship subscribe to as ardently as do the advocates of a restricted fellowship. The closing paragraph reads as follows:

> The Disciples of Christ will continue in the practice of the ordinance of Christian baptism in the manner exemplified by our Lord and taught and approved by his inspired apostles. In so far as they are loyal to the divine teachings on Christian baptism and all other subjects they will be used of God and honored by their brethren of all the religious denominations.

To this statement there is not a Disciple of Christ within range of our knowledge who will not say amen. If the title had been worded, "Shall our churches abandon or modify their customary practice of baptism by immersion?" the editorial would have been pertinent and altogether convincing.

But who will help us to see any relation between the question asked and the article that assumes to be an answer to it?

Jenkin Lloyd Jones on the War.

An adjustment that will bring a higher brotherhood when the warring nations of Europe have laid down their arms was predicted last week by Jenkin Lloyd Jones, of Chicago, in his sermon in All Souls' Church, Abraham Lincoln Center. It was Mr. Jones' first sermon since the beginning of hostilities. Pointing to the fallacy of armed force, Mr. Jones said: "Civilization now is reaping the whirlwind from the winds of violence and brute force it has been sowing with such lavish hand and cultivating with such misguided skill. But 'after the whirlwind came the still, small voice.' Let us listen for the small voice which already is being heard by the thoughtful, in the tears of widows and orphans, tinting with shame the cheeks of emperors and kings, generals and cabinet officers. If thrones can be undermined in no other way, if kings in their arrogance can be shorn of their power in no other way, if crowns can be ground into fertilizing dust in no other way, then let Europe cry, with King Lear, 'Blow, wind, and crack your cheek! Strike flat the thick rotundity of the world! I tax not you elements with unkindness:' but the two pernicious daughters, lust of gold and faith in physical force, who have joined in high engendered battles against democracy, reason, justice. Let us pray that this may be the Armageddon fight to prove once and forever the cursed fallacy that hopes to promote peace with instruments of wrath, to cultivate brotherhood with battleships and bombs. Let us seek not more guns but more legislation that renders guns unnecessary. Civilization has reached the end of horns and fangs, claws and hoofs. The philosophy of might has broken down. The warrior is a hated and hateful creature. Let the legislator, the diplomat and philanthropist have their innings. Let religion be heard."

Dean Sumner on "Christmas Ship."

"Christian churches and Christian men and women should co-operate to the fullest extent of their abilities in making the Christmas ship a messenger such as Europe will never forget." This is the keynote of a statement made last week by Walter T. Sumner, Episcopalian churchman and reformer of Chicago, concerning the Christmas ship, already mentioned in the Christian Century. "The ideals of human brotherhood and Christian service find beautiful expression in this ship which is to carry Christmas happiness from the children of one nation to the children of other nations," Dean Sumner said. "It is an opportunity which Americans cannot afford to overlook. For there is in it a moral cement, which is bound to bind the American nation into closer bonds of sympathy and understanding with the nations across the sea. The dream of universal peace never seemed farther from actual realization than it does in the present day of almost world-wide war. Yet it is a dream which some day will come true. And no movement in modern times has been better calculated to hasten that day than has this movement. To me it seems like a great beneficent Providence stretching its hands across the sea to relieve the sufferings, bind the wounds and minister to the hunger of a struggling, unhappy people. However the supreme beauty of the proposition lies in this—that it is being done in the name of little children—the children of America. What a beautiful and fraternal conception those words will come to mean to those whom they have helped when help most was needed! Churches and religious organizations of all kinds should throw the full force of their influence behind the Christmas ship, for it is the material embodiment of the ideals upon which churches and Christians stand. Human brotherhood—the love of man for man, the love which knows no bounds of race, religion, nation or creed—what more beautiful expression could there be in a time of cataclysmic war than that? There is another phase to the project which should appeal to parents, teachers and ministers—to every one who has the interest of American children at heart. It is this—that, in working for the Christmas ship, American children will be putting into active practice the ideals of selfless human service and sacrifice for which Christ gave his life nineteen centuries ago."

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, evangelist, who has gone to London to minister to English soldiers.

Dr. Chapman to Preach to Soldiers.

Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur J. Chapman have sailed from New York City for London. Rev. Ralph Norton, director of personal work, who has been with Dr. Chapman for several years, went with them. Dr. Chapman went abroad at the invitation of a committee in London, which engaged him to hold evangelistic meetings for two weeks in that city in a hall adjoining the main recruiting station for the English army. His ministry is to be mainly to young soldiers. If circumstances prove favorable, Dr. Chapman will be invited to extend the work one or two weeks longer.

A Moslem "Youths' Companion."

One of the excellent plans which Rev. S. Van R. Trowbridge, who sails this month for Algiers to take up his work among Moslem children, hopes to realize is the publication of a paper for boys and girls, similar to the Youths' Companion or the American Boy. It is his purpose to produce the paper first in English. It is then to be translated into the various languages throughout the Moslem world and published by the mission presses in the several localities.

Dan Crawford in New Zealand.

Dan Crawford's tour of New Zealand has been a triumphal procession according to reports. In practically every city he visited, the "lord mayor" came out to greet him, and at Wellington, capital of the dominion, the prime minister, W. F. Massey, welcomed him officially. The men's mass meting which heard Mr. Crawford speak on his African work in that city is said to have been ranked with the greatest gatherings Wellington ever saw.

Religious Tract Society Report.

The Religious Tract Society of England recently issued its 115th annual report. Its total annual circulation of books and tracts in 277 languages and dialects is over 65,000,000 copies. These publications vary from a leaflet to a complete commentary on the Scriptures.

Gipsy Smith's Son in Philadelphia.

The Presbyterian ministers of Philadelphia listened, September 21, to an interesting talk from Albany Smith, a student for the ministry in Crozer Seminary and a son of the noted evangelist Gipsy Smith. He gave an account of the ignorance of his father and grandfather previous to their conversion and subsequent Christian work.

St. Louis in Modern Move.

The public school buildings of the city have been thrown open after school hours to the free use of organizations and neighborhood gatherings. A movement has been inaugurated by the civic league to cause the public in general to use them for lectures, concerts, socials and the meetings of civic and improvement societies. Two buildings have been selected by the league because of the expressed desire of the residents nearby to use the schools for neighborhood activities. This movement is calculated to relieve the churches of much institutional work in congested districts.

Morals in Chinese Education.

Under the caption "Will Teach Morals in Chinese Schools" the Philadelphia Public Ledger of August 3 devoted a column to an account of the system of ethics and religious training just authorized by the Chinese minister of education, Mr. Tan Hua-lung, for the public schools of the Chinese Republic. "Mr. Tang," says the Ledger, "holds that morality and right living are as much a part of the educational equipment of China's youth as are mathematics, reading and writing. He has approved a plan which, without interfering with the constitutional declaration assuring complete religious liberty and freedom of belief in the Chinese republic, will admit as part of the curriculum in the primary schools principles of morality and right living enunciated by China's great sage, Confucius, and essential Christian principles." This is only a step, but it is a step in the right direction.

Of Human Interest

Kaiser Sees End of Monarchism.

In looking over his papers Carl T. Wettstein, of Milwaukee, finds an interesting paragraph clipped from an eastern paper, published some years ago. At the present time this utterance of William II will, no doubt, be of great interest. Mr. Wettstein writes for the Christian Advocate:

"My son will be the last of the emperors. This is why I am bringing him up as I was brought up—under firm discipline. He must be a credit to the house of Hohenzollern and to the thrones that, after his, will cease to be."

Mr. Wettstein remarks:

"Emperor William thus expressed himself to the historian, Karl von Kroon, in a recent talk following his inspection of the Berlin School of History and Literature. His majesty predicted that the end of monarchism is in sight. 'All the world will be republican within fifty years,' he said. 'Germany will be the last of the empires. It is inevitable.'

"When we read these utterances of the Kaiser in the light of the present European war, we think that this prophecy of William II will be fulfilled sooner than he expected. As things look now in the seats of war, the result may be, although we do not wish it, that the present Crown Prince will never be Emperor and that this war will be the end of the German empire.

"William II certainly is the greatest ruler in Europe, and his intentions and actions are honest; this we firmly believe. But he certainly made the greatest mistake of his life when he did not try to prevent this terrible war, which, we think, he could have done."

Wesley's Prayer-room.

City Road Chapel is the historical church of Methodism—a sort of Wesley Westminster Abbey, says a writer in the Christian Advocate. At the south side stands the Wesley House, where John Wesley took up his residence at the age of seventy-six. The second floor is open as a museum. The front room was used by Mr. Wesley as a study. In the rear was his bedroom, and opening out of this a little chamber eight feet two inches by six feet nine inches. A very little room it is. But it was the power-house of Methodism. A marble slab under the mantel tells its story: "This little room is the place where Wesley retired for prayer." This little prayer room is as eloquent an insight into his life as was Daniel's upper chamber with the window open toward Jerusalem an index to the character of that worthy. It is more—here is the secret of Methodism's wonderful triumphs, for Methodism was made by such prayers as were offered in this little room. Wesley's prayer-room is a sanctuary calling us to the too often neglected practice of prayer. How we need just such prayer-rooms in our homes, our churches, our hearts—the quiet time and place where one may go to be alone with God! "In quietness and in confidence shall be thy strength."

Wesley knew the value of such a sanctuary, for he had been with the Master, and learned of him: "When thou prayest enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee."

"Begin the day with God: he is thy sun and day,
He is the radiance of thy dawn, to him address thy lay;
Thy first transactions be with God himself above:
So shall thy business prosper, and all thy day be love."

Wrote "The Human Slaughter-house."

"A peril to public safety," "an hysterical neuropath," "a socialistic-anarchic revolutionary," "a cowardly weakling," "an imported alien draining the marrow of patriotic backbone," were some of the compliments showered by the German press on Wilhelm Lamszus after the publication of "The Human Slaughter-house," which is making such a deep impression on American readers. For a German schoolmaster to write a book "with a tendency to strip the pomp and circumstance of war of its traditional glamour—an integral factor in the German educational system—must, in the eyes of the authorities, have savored of an unholy alliance between blasphemy and high treason. As a matter of fact, the author, far from being physically a weakling, is a trained gymnast, given to athletic exercises. He has also had sufficient medical training to insure that he is not of the nerveless type that faints at the first sight of blood; yet he writes of war with a shudder that the reader can feel in every line. His is not the protest of the weakling, but the revolt of the spirit of humanity, the spirit of progress and evolution, against the cumulative horror of the mechanics of modern warfare. "For just as there is no room for the uncouth masters of primeval times on the green today, so little will a nation of Krupp's steel plates be able to continue to live in the community of civilized nations."

"Stonewall's" Most Important Order.

Perhaps the most important order that "Stonewall" Jackson ever issued—certainly the most vital to himself—is not in the official war records. The order was given in person by Jackson to a northern artillery officer as he stood, in full uniform, ready for battle beside his gun, and—strangest of all!—was at once executed by him, with the result that the battle was lost by the Union arms.

It was on a spring morning in 1862, just before the battle of Port Republic. Jackson, in advance of his troops, with only a single escort, galloped across the bridge over the Shenandoah River into the town, which stood on the east bank. Learning that the army of General Shields was still a good many miles away, and confident that his own troops would be in possession long before the enemy, he rode to a residence at the farther end of the village, where he spent nearly an hour.

But meantime the energetic Shields—whom Jackson later declared to be his most formidable opponent—had thrust forward a small, swift column to occupy Port Republic, seize the bridge, and halt Jackson's advance. So rapidly did it move that it gained both objects without firing a shot. More than that, Jackson was a prisoner—if anyone had known it!

Jackson, in utter ignorance of the disastrous change, mounted his horse, and ambled down the main street to the bridge. What was his astonishment to see groups of soldiers—in blue!—busily moving to and fro about the bridgehead, and throwing up intrenchments and fortifications. Planted on a little knoll that commanded the bridge and its approaches, was a formidable field gun!

Fortunately for Jackson, the recent campaigns up and down the valley had faded both blue and gray uniforms into a nondescript drab. As Jackson sat on his horse and watched the busy scene, he formed his plan swiftly. He could not go back; he must cross that bridge; that was his only chance. It was the frowning field gun that he feared. He must put it out of commission long enough to get beyond its range. Throwing up his hand to attract attention, he shouted to the officer in command of the gun:

"What are you doing with that gun up there? I didn't order it there, and I don't want it there!" There was authority and petulance in his voice as he added, "Limber up, and run it over on that knob over there!"

The officer at the gun, thinking that he had to deal with some superior officer recently arrived, hastened to obey without question, explaining in self-defense that he had understood his orders otherwise.

Sitting on Little Sorrel while the Federal troops worked busily about him, Jackson calmly waited until the gun was lumbering off to its new position. Then he rode quietly across the bridge, and up the other bank until he was well out of musket range. Then he turned, waved his hand to the astonished Federals, and, putting spurs to his horse, galloped away from the rain of bullets that pattered harmlessly in the rear.

Had he been captured, the Confederate victory at Port Republic which he won a few hours later would not have happened; the able and energetic Shields would have defeated his troops, stunned by his loss.

A Bishop's Story.

An exchange tells an amusing story told by the Bishop of Yukon, who has been on a visit to this country.

He once made a long journey to visit a remote tribe of Indians, hardly any of whom had ever seen a white man before. One of the members of the expedition took with him a graphophone, thinking it would interest the Indians.

It did! When it was set going they all gathered round it in wonder. They were rather frightened, but when the record was finished they crowded up to make a closer inspection.

Finally, an old chief, getting down on his knees, and peering into the trumpet whence the mysterious voice had come, muttered, "Where him come from?"

"Far, far away," was the reply, "from a place called Chicago."

"Ugh!" grunted the chief. "Tinned white man."

Mark Twain's Address.

Mark Twain once addressed an audience in the interest of his fellow-townsman, Gen. Joseph Hawley, who was a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate, and said, in the course of a droll address: "Gen. Hawley deserves your support, although he has about as much influence in purifying the Senate as a bunch of flowers would have in sweetening a glue factory. But he's all right: he never would turn any poor beggar away from his door empty-handed. He always gives them something—almost without exception a letter of introduction to me, urging me to help them."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

French Women and War

From the New York Evening Post

An appeal has gone out to the women of France from the Premier asking them to complete the work of gathering the crops left unfinished by the men who have been called to war.

"The wheat," says the Premier, "stands unreaped, and the time of vintage approaches. I appeal to your hardihood and to that of your children whose age alone, not their courage, withholds them from the fighting line. I ask you to maintain the life of our fields, to finish this year's harvest, and to prepare for that of the next year. You can not render a greater service to your country."

The part which women have played in times of war is many-sided. As nurses, as spies, even as common soldiers, they have borne their share of the burden, and none more courageously than the European peasant women, who have safeguarded the welfare of the nation by their work in the fields.

To one familiar with peasant life of France, the Premier's appeal calls up a vivid picture of grain ready for the harvest of peasant women in vari-colored costumes working from morning till night to secure for France the wealth which the fields will yield. It is work which is not described at length in war bulletins, and which is yet of such importance that it affects the very roots of the nation's life. For on the work of these women largely depends the support of the army during the war, and even after it is over. The poverty which is sure to follow in the wake of war is somewhat lessened by the harvesting of the crops which the women's work has made possible.

A STORY FROM PARIS.

The following story from Paris is among the many bits of human interest reporting which have found their way into print during the last two weeks:

"A woman with four sons in the French army to-day walked slowly down the steps of one of the municipal offices where relatives are informed officially whether soldiers are dead, wounded or unreported. She was exceedingly white, but her emotion was greater than could be expressed in tears. A friend came up quickly and said:

"'Have you good news? I am so glad my Jean is safe.'

"'Yes, they are all safe,' was the reply. 'They are safe in the arms of the Father. I am proud to give all to the cause.'"

The widow's mite has been a figure of speech for many centuries. The mother's all is a greater matter, yet this Frenchwoman is typical rather than exceptional. When "the surly drums beat terrible afar" mothers are willing to give their sons to their country, and women who are not mothers wish they had sons to give. No sacrifice is made with higher spirit and calmer heart than those made by mothers upon the blood-stained altars of Mars. The heroism of men who are willing to charge into the teeth of a storm of bullets is tawdry and vain compared with that of mothers who give their sons and turn back from the stimulating scenes of preparation—the glitter of the gold braid, the gleam of steel, the blood-stirring martial music, the thunder of marching legions—to wait in a deserted home for the news that may bring mourning.

WOMEN IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

Earlier, in the days of the revolution, the French women took an active part. The famous march of the women on Versailles was led by a young girl. She seized a drum and beat at the general assembly, and as the crowds of women poured out to follow her lead they were joined by others from the Faubourg Saint-Antoine, and a contingent of women who had been harangued by a woman in the Palais Royal. Theroigne de Mericourt, who was called "The Amazon of Liege," joined the crowd, and mounted upon a cannon, was dragged along by the excited crowd toward Versailles.

Later in the revolution, it was the market women and their sisters of the Faubourg Saint-Antoine, who formed themselves into Amazon brigades. They were great, sturdy women, and acted as prison guards during the war, even escorting the prisoners to the guillotine. They wore a uniform consisting of a short skirt—striped blue, white, and red—sabots on their feet, and the red Phrygian cap, afterwards called the Liberty cap, trimmed with a red, white and blue cockade. Each carried a baldric slung over her shoulder, supporting a cutlass.

Armed battalions of girls and women formed in the provinces, especially in the Dauphine, and were sworn to defend their country, and the tripartite principle of liberty, equality and fraternity.

So it is that women have borne their part when war was inevitable, both in the harvest fields and in the field of battle. Today, they show themselves ready to serve in many capacities, though there have been no reports as yet of their offering to enlist as soldiers.

A Paris dispatch to the Kansas City Star shows how the women in the capital responded to the first of war's demands on them. The dispatch reads:

"The women of Paris rose today to the emergency created by drafting the men of the city for the army. Society women took the place of men clerks in stores to sell necessities. Young girls sold tickets in the underground stations. Others acted as waiters in cafes. Grocery stores and meat shops were run by women. Small boys were put on as guards on the underground trains. The motormen are aged, gray-haired men, ineligible for service in the army. Paris enjoys the novelty of women doing men's work, and the women apparently do too.

"The war has levelled all classes. French society women have taken into their homes the destitute wives and children of private soldiers, ordered to the front."

BIBLES FOR SOLDIERS

British naval and military associations are delivering Bibles to every man in the army and navy. They bear the following inscription written by Lord Roberts:

"I ask you to put your trust in God. He will watch over you and strengthen you. You will find in this little book guidance when you are in health, comfort when you are in sickness and strength when you are in adversities."

Two Sonnets

BY IDA WITHERS HARRISON.

TO LEXINGTON. I.

Why do I love thee?—Nay, I hardly know
Where to begin. Is it because of pride
In pioneers, strong souls unterrified,
Who went to open paths, long days ago,
In western wilds, and face a strange foe?
Or in thy sons, who left thy streets to guide
A nation's fate, and whose great names abide
In history's page, as stars that steadfast glow?
Or is it, city fair, that as a queen,
Thou'st set on rounded uplands, where at ease
Vast flocks and herds feed on thy pastures green,
Or rest beneath the shade of stately trees?
No lovelier land can ever greet the eyes,
Than thine, that sleeps 'neath blue Kentucky skies.

TO LEXINGTON. II.

No!—'Tis not that thou art so richly blest
With fame and beauty, that thy people cling
To thee so tenderly. Truly, we sing
Thy old Kentucky homes, where love and rest
Are showered on the ever welcome guest;—
Where faithful hearts abound, remembering
Our woes with tears, and ever glad to bring Smiles to our joys—where, in east or west,
Are found such homes, such friends! . . . And as I pace
Thy dear, familiar streets, I often dream
Of those who walked here with me in old days,
And times, there comes to me a sense supreme
Of presences unseen—the loved and lost,
Who now are numbered with the angel host.

A Duel of Song

A Breeze from the Pacific by Way of New Zealand.

BY DAN CRAWFORD.

HERE I am—can I believe my eyes?—in dear, delightful New Zealand! It seems all a dream! After leaving Vancouver, away we sailed south into the shining seas, until one day we struck the Sandwich Islands (modern name, Hawaii) where Captain Cook of immortal fame was killed and eaten. I did not know what was waiting me there till one day, far out at sea, the wireless Marconigrams came streaming into my cabin, one from the governor of the island, Governor Carter, and another from the great Dr. Doremus Scudder inviting me to land and lecture for a month. All the messages wound up with the greatest word in the Pacific Ocean, "Aloha," which means far more than the English word, "welcome." It is the concentrated essence of all the warm, gracious ingredients that go to form a sweet, take-you-to-the-heart welcome. So I landed, and went plunge into Paradise for twenty-seven days. For here is a land that never, never varies, and all the year round—January to December—they have a temperature of 85 degrees. As climate is notoriously a formative factor in character, you can quite conceive that these glorious islanders smile all the year through. In fact, at last we have reached the land where the rhyme holds good:

"Miles, and miles, and miles
Of smiles and smiles, and smiles."

There is the famous Waikiki beach here—the greatest bay in the world; Venice and Durban (South Africa) come in a decent second; but hats off, all the world, to the primacy of the Pacific! There it was that I found hungry souls who knew all about the latest novels (for being islanders they are jealous of being "out of it.") I say that they knew all about every book except the Bible! So, starved with romance and philosophy, we put them on the good old diet of the brown bread of the kingdom of God. Then it was that you in Chicago and the rest of the United States were all forgotten for this is a little island, a mere dot in the Pacific, half way between America, Asia and Australia. We snapped our fingers at the whole lot of you and held on our shining way to the tune of an everlasting 85 degrees in the shade.

THE SOUTHERN CROSS.

Now off we go sailing through shining seas. Then my old friend, the Southern Cross, comes overhead and old friend salutes old friend. Then comes the next phase, four days south, the famous Fiji Islands, and not a patch on the Sandwich group. Here it was I casually rang up the missionary, Mr. Small. He at once set the phone bell ringing all over the island which eventuated in a great big meeting, the body of the church being filled with glorious Christian natives who, more or less, ran the meeting a la Fiji, intoning the hymns with that haunting, semi-negro, wholly Pacific intonation. Then I spoke with the result that they all planned secretly to accompany me down to the ship and sing me off in authentic apostolic manner. Little did I guess what was ahead for me at the wharf. It is quite a good parable of life down here so watch what happens.

First of all, we had the great big ship ablaze with arc lamps, steam up and almost off. Lined up on the wharf was this strong native choir, with flashing eyes, singing out of the darkness, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." And there was I, with the whole crowd of my giddy fellow-passengers, leaning over the bulwarks. They were horribly embarrassed at this Sunday-go-to-meeting business rammed down their throats. The embarrassment was the more painful because some of them professed to go to church once in a blue moon. And there you have black, despised natives, brave enough to do a thing that the whites would rather die than do—I mean, sing God's hymns with parting prayers from a public wharf. Then came the most dramatic contrast. Down the wharf in the moonlight there comes a yelling, bawling band of young, clean-shaven colonials. They are nearly all dead-drunk and they too have come down (watch the contrast!) to sing off a departing pal.

A PROBLEM IN ETIQUETTE.

Watch now the amazing, the astounding problem in etiquette. My beautiful lined-up choir is first in position and therefore (surely!) the new arrivals, if they must sing their ribald songs will do so at the other end of the boat. Fair play's a duel. Nay, verily, they come reeling down, crowd in against the choir, yell like demons, "For he's a jolly good fellow," and all the time trying to drown even an echo of the poor old native choir. But the natives said, "Oh, here goes for the Holy War," so louder and louder the deep voice of the ex-cannibals was heard singing my parting hymn. The opposition camp, catching up the antagonism of the thing, yelled more loudly than before this, their second song, and being of the vaudeville type. Meantime, here are we all leaning over the bulwarks of our ship, amazed and maddened that our own white race could be guilty of such a dark, dirty deed. Even rank outsiders who would have nothing to do with religion, my fellow-passengers were overheard to say. "What dirty sneaks!" For days afterwards aboard ship that wharf-side picture (the white man trying to drown the native Christians' song of praise!) rankled, and nagged, and jagged at our souls. Even those who did not say it certainly thought that there you had it symbolized and exemplified—the horrid antagonism that the gospel has in all these islands. If only the white man at least hid his head in shame at the memory of his mother's God and his father's God, the gospel would have a better chance in these lands.

AUCKLAND HARBOR.

Now, at last, at last, here comes the glorious Auckland Harbor. On the wharf my committee of godly men meet me to inform me that, in anticipation of my coming, a committee of godly men of all denominations have arranged my meetings in a highly systematized manner—the great town hall having been taken. To meet the dear friends here has been a wonderful joy. My heart was hungering for Christian fellowship after the long voyage. Tomorrow I leave, going South, where great arrangements have been made.

In Tasmania the Governor-General, Sir Ellis McCartney, is presiding at my meetings, while in Victoria the same thing is happening, the Governor-general being again to the front. For all of which I say: "God keep us humble in the dust that the shining name and fame of our Lord Jesus Christ might pierce the darkness. May he get unto himself the victory."

WOMAN COMMISSIONER STOPS PRISON MUTINY.

A short time ago there was an uprising among the 1,400 prisoners in the penitentiary in New York. The new "dope law" had gone into effect, and 500 men, deprived of their customary drug, were crazed. All eyes of the public were centered on Commissioner Katherine Davis. What would she do? Would she prove out? She then did a very simple thing. She moved into the penitentiary. She met the prisoners, personally, and listened to their individual grievances; she corrected a few injustices; she listened to 1,000 men give their ideas about how a prison should be run. In all the history of prisons no one ever heard of such a thing before. One man had so many ideas about kindness that she asked him to submit it in writing. The Commissioner gave the ideas to the newspapers, so that everyone might learn from the philosophy of a prisoner in the penitentiary.

Miss Davis is an all-round woman. There was no one to play the organ, so she played it herself; there was no one to lead the singing, so she led it herself. The following day 1,200 men went back to work; quiet and order were restored. It was the human note she sounded. Presently, the striped uniforms are to be abolished, and a decent suit of gray clothes substituted. Now she contemplates a self-governed prison with an honor system as an incentive to good behavior. When she appears she is greeted by the cheers of the prisoners. She has struck the human note in prison affairs, and it vibrates there as elsewhere.

Miss Davis wants the ballot, but she hasn't it. However, she believes she will have it after November, 1915, when the voters of New York State are to have a chance to go to the polls and vote it to all women of the Empire State.

Of Charles Wesley, Macauley, the historian of England, says: "He approached as near as human infirmity permits to the ideal perfection of Christian virtue." That is saying a good deal for a man, and yet it would take just such a man to write such a hymn of praise as the Doxology.

ONE.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

ONE Name before the world to wear,
One all-embracing Plea,
One mighty Hope for sin's despair,
One only Master—He!

The faiths of men have had their day;
Moses, Elijah, Paul
Have pointed to the better way,
And Christ is Lord of all.

Thus every other orb must fade
Before the perfect Sun
Who was before the world was made—

Disciples Table Talk

Theory Versus Practice.

In a recent issue of The Christian Century it was reported that the Congregational and Presbyterian churches of Ottawa, Kans., were talking federation, but that the Disciples church would not co-operate. The good news comes that the two agreeing churches did not let this fly in the ointment of their good will prevent them from carrying out their plan. Articles recommending the means of federation have been prepared by a joint committee from both churches and await the ratification of the congregations. The move is not for union as both church bodies will retain their individuality, but there will be a joint governing body to control everything but creed and one pastor will preach to both congregations. The members will probably meet in the Presbyterian church.

Kentucky Bible Classes Celebrate.

Kentucky Bible classes from the cities of Winchester, Ky., 247 strong; Paris, with 100 men; North Middletown, Cane Ridge, Richmond and the classes from the local churches in the county, met at the Christian church at Mt. Sterling on September 27, as guests of the Hazelrigg Bible Class, of the Mt. Sterling church. Addresses were made on timely topics by men of prominence in these several communities. Among the speakers were: Mayor D. J. Burchett, of the Hazelrigg class; R. C. Prewitt, of the Winchester church; Rev. J. T. Sharrard, of the Paris church, and J. T. Coons, of the county churches. The regular class services were held, conducted by Rev. Clyde Darsie, of the Mt. Sterling church, and the communion service was served to more than 800 people. After the services at the church, which was crowded to its utmost, the guests were invited to the court house yard, where a dinner was served on the lawn.

Virginia Disciples Close Annual Session.

After a series of successful sessions, characterized by large attendance and great enthusiasm, the thirty-ninth annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Virginia came to a close at Hanover Avenue Christian Church, Richmond, September 23. The convention will be held next year in Seventh Street Christian Church. Dr. G. W. Kemper was re-elected to head the state organization, and other officers were elected as follows: Frak W. Long, South Richrond, first vice-president; J. T. T. Hundley, Fredericksburg, second vice-president; Thomas Newman, Newport News, recording secretary; R. M. Kent, Treasurer; George S. Crenshaw, auditor and George C. White, H. W. Ware and T. M. Hudley, associates. All of the sessions of the convention proved interesting and instructive and gave a great impetus to the work of the churches comprised in the convention. There were over 200 delegates in attendance.

H. L. Willett, Jr., Returns to Syria.

Herbert L. Willett, Jr., who spent about a month in this country during the summer, sailed for Naples, en route to Beirut, Syria, on the White Star ship, "Cretic," Sept. 27th, to resume his work in the Syrian Protestant College. It was at first thought that he would be unable to return, and advices from the college indicated the wisdom of remaining here until later in the season. But the growing sentiment in the Levant that neither Italy nor Turkey was likely to participate in the war at once led the college authorities to express the hope that he would try to make the journey out if he were willing to take the risk. The complete disarrangement of transportational facilities in the Mediterranean, and the dangers of many sorts to which one submits himself in attempting to reach the Syrian coast at this time, increase the risks to a disquieting degree. Several of the missionary boards are declinig to send any of their workers to Turkey, considering the serious disturbances recently reported there. However, there is good reason to hope that Mr. Willett may reach his post without too serious danger. We shall look for some interesting articles from him on conditions in Turkey, as soon as he is able to send them back.

Doings at Akron, O.

L. N. D. Wells, of High Street, Akron, O., writes that his church is sending a carload of its best people to the convention in Atlanta. Arrangements have been made for a special car clear through. Of recent achievements at Akron, Mr. Wells writes: We were privileged to address 1500 people last Sunday evening on "Your Booze or Your Business, Which?" The campaign in Ohio is warming up splendidly. Every preacher in Summit County will speak on the evening of Nov. 1, on the booze question. This is two days before the election, and we hope for great results. We can only seat 1500 and are therefore excluding the women from this service. We are advertising in the newspapers, carding all the factories, etc. Expect to address at least 1,500 voters that night, and are preparing for an overflow to be held in the basement of our church. Charles Reign Scoville and his company have been unanimously invited to conduct a union evangelistic campaign in Akron, in the early part of the coming year. Every minister in the city of every denomination united most heartily in this call. A tabernacle, seating from eight to ten thousand, will be erected and we hope to shake the city profoundly with the simple gospel of Jesus Christ."

H. L. Willett, Jr. who has returned to his work in Syrian Protestant College, Beirut, Syria.

Roosevelt Will Smile.

The beaming faces of Orvis F. Jordan and C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, were easily explained when it was noticed in the city record of births, by the reporter for the "Century," that September 21 brought to Mr. Morrison's home a new and sprightly young lady, Helen Morrison, while September 26 added to Mr. Jordan's family circle one William David Jordan. And now comes a special from Akron, O., reporting the fact that L. N. D. Wells, pastor at High Street Church, determined that Illinois should not carry away all the honors, had taken his pen in hand and written into his family record the name of L. N. D. Wells, Jr., who arrived at the Akron manse on September 24.

Resolutions for R. H. Miller.

The following significant resolutions were passed by the ministers of Buffalo, N. Y., referring to the work of R. H. Miller, pastor of the West Utica Street church at Buffalo, who is leaving this field to engage in the Men and Millions Campaign: "In accepting the resignation of Rev. Raphael Harwood Miller as a member of 'The Buffalo Ministers' Meeting' made necessary by his acceptance of an important position which will remove him from our city, we wish to express to him and to record, on our minutes, our appreciation of his worth as a man and his unusual gifts as a religious teacher. His papers, travel talks and discussions have been excelled by none ad equalled by few. We also voice our administration of his zeal and fidelity in caring for the youth of our city in the West Side and Central Young Men's Christian Association and in the community, inspiring them to relish Bible study. We do not wonder that a general demand among the churches of his own order sets him apart to gain recruits for the ministry and mission field. As he goes up and down the land, asking young men and women to enlist in the service of The Great Captain we believe that many will answer his vision and summons by saying 'Here am I; send me.' Mr. Miller, we, your associates, wish to assure you that you cannot travel so widely as to go beyond our thought and love; and we know that when some Samuel comes to you inquiring as to the meaning of strange voices calling in the night, you will perceive that the voice is God's and will instruct him to make answer 'Speak Lord, for they servant heareth.' Signed: Frank S. Fitch, D. D., J. R. Logue, D. D., B. S. Ferrall, Secy."

Kansas City Church Builds Larger.

The congregation of Ivanhoe Park church, Kansas City, has voted to build a temporary frame addition to connect with the auditorium. This will afford a seating capacity for over 100 people and also relieve the overcrowded classes in the Bible-school.

Dr. Powell to Preach in Kansas City.

Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of First Church, Louisville, Ky., will conduct a ten days' meeting beginning November 2, at the Wabash Avenue Christian church, Kansas City, Mo.

Miner vs. Preacher.

Suit has been brought in the Vermilion county, Ill., circuit court by Tony Blugies of Westville, for $10,000 damages against J. F. Bickel, pastor of First Church, Danville, for alleged malicious prosecution. Last May when Louis Patmont's disappearance from Westville was causing such a stir, Blugies was arrested on a warrant sworn out by Mr. Bickel, charging him with the murder of Patmont. Blugies was kept in jail six days before he secured his release.

Home-Coming at Cedar Rapids.

September 20 was Home-Coming Day at First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., where Walter M. White ministers. Mr. White addressed a large congregation in First Church in the evening, at which time he preached a sermon especially to Coe college and other students now engaged in study in this city.

Pastor Not to Run for Congress.

It is reported that W. R. Motley, Prohibition candidate for Congress from the Sixth District, Indiana, is expected to withdraw from the ticket because he has accepted the pastorate of Central Church at Richmond.

Harvest Festival Near Greeley, Colo.

The S. L. W. Ranch church, the famous rural church on the Studebaker Ranch near Greeley, Colo., of which J. E. Lynn has been pastor for the past four years, held recently a Harvest Festival and Community Fair that was a splendid thing for the community. The festival was held at the S. L. W. Home, which is excellently equipped for such an event and which has been the scene of many festive gatherings. Prizes were offered for about sixty different displays of live stock, farm products, etc. Athletic contests of all sorts were carried on for the young people. The children were entertained on the spacious lawns by story telling and games. Lectures on stock raising and stock judging were delivered by experts.

A band of twenty pieces furnished good music, booths of all sorts conducted by the various churches in the country round provided amusement and refreshment and meals were served by the ladies' organizations. There was an attendance estimated at one thousand people who came from many miles around. The leading Greeley Daily gave large space to reporting the event and devoted an editorial to the discussion of the S. L. W. Community spirit which this church has fostered and created. This church soon enters upon a ten weeks' church attendance campaign to be followed by evangelistic services.

At Bethany College.

To those who have been in touch with Bethany for years, the coming term appears to be one of the best yet, writes Frank Lappin, College reporter. One of the most promising things at the present time is the fact that there are more enrolled in the Ministerial Department than ever before. The Ministerial Association began operations a week ago with an enrollment of sixty young men. The Volunteer Mission Band also began activities last week with an enrollment of from twenty-five to thirty young people. This work is in charge of Miss Sarah Manzel, organizer of the C. W. B. M. in the state of West Virginia. Last Sunday was a good day for the Bethany church. Thirty-eight were received into the fellowship of the Church in morning and evening services. The new church is nearly under roof and it is expected to be ready for dedication by the first of next May. It is estimated that the church will have a seating capacity for eleven hundred persons. There are also twenty-three Sunday-school rooms available. This will be a great addition to the college as well as the town. The student body are entering into the work in the church with enthusiasm and the realization that there is much to be gained in such work with the association of such men as Dr. Morgan, Prof. Taylor, Prof. Finley and the many other efficient church-workers now at Bethany.

National Benevolent Association Prospers.

Ira M. Boswell, pastor of the First Christian Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., is to be the speaker for the National Benevolent Association at the Atlanta Convention. Mr. Boswell will speak upon "The Greater Works." He will speak out of an abundant experience in the application of the Gospel of the every day life in his own city. He helped to organize the Juvenile Court. He is chairman of the Hamilton County Colored Orphans' Association, and a member, by appointment, of the City Council of the Bureau of Municipal Research. The association has just closed the greatest year in its history, financially. The total receipts for the year were $134,624.24, or nearly $5,000 better than the Centennial year. This does not mean, however, that the association has plenty of money. The unusual high cost of living, the unparalleled amount of work which the association has done has, in spite of its large collections, left it pressed for funds. Its homes are full —its funds exhausted. It rejoices in being spent for the sake of others.

Union Meeting at Winfield, Kans.

Lincoln McConnell is with the Winfield, Kans., churches in union meeting which began October 4. Seven churches are uniting in perfect harmony, Presbyterian, Methodist, Free Methodist, United Brethren, Baptist, Grace Methodist, and Christian. A large tabernacle already has been built seating three thousand. This is in the heart of the city, and was filled on the first Sunday evening with a local speaker. The town has not had a union meeting since 1904, and is ripe for one, writes R. W. Gentry, Disciple pastor. The Christian church, at Winfield, numbers 418 members and is in perfect working shape, paid $3,000 on debt last year, and have decided to raise $1,000 of the remaining seven each year, with part of the first thousand already raised.

Secretary Corey Writes of Tokio

Being the Second Letter of the Commission of the Foreign Society to the Mission Field.

Our commission has enjoyed a delightful day in Tokyo with a group of the missionaries while the good ship was being coaled for the journey to Hongkong. We had hoped to spend a couple of days in conference with the missionaries at Karuizawa in the mountains, where they are taking a few weeks of rest and escape from the almost unbearable heat of Tokyo in August. Our ship, however, was taken over at Yokahoma by the British Admiralty for war transport purposes, and we proceed tonight direct to Hongkong, China, a British port. We will spend the month of November in Japan just before sailing for America.

Secretary S. J. Corey.

We were met at the dock in Yokahama last evening by Mr. McCoy, Mr. Erskine, Miss Clawson, Miss Johnson and Miss Edith Parker, all of whom had come down from Karuizawa, to greet us and spend the day in conference and fellowship with us.

The brief but delightful day spent with these enthusiastic workers gave us a very happy introduction to Japan.

FIRST TASTE OF JAPANESE LIFE.

The missionaries were very anxious that we should catch a certain train for Tokyo, twenty-five miles away, and we occupied just eighteen minutes in reaching it from the dock. During this brief time we had our luggage examined in the customs house and traveled seven blocks. It was between the customs house and the train that we got our first real taste of Japanese life. We made the distance by means of the famous jinrikishas, or two wheeled carriages drawn by men. These little conveyances were invented by an American missionary years ago, and let no American boast that we had the first "Pull-man-car" for these are the original. There were eight of us all told, and we made a very interesting procession as we sailed along through the busy streets. The jinrikisha has wheels a trifle smaller than an ordinary buggy wheel, a neat little box with a seat for one, and two slender shafts between which the "ricksha" man runs. The wheels are rubber-tired, there are good springs, and the riding is very comfortable. A strange feeling of embarrassment comes over one at first because of the sensation of being pulled by a man instead of a horse. Muscular little fellows these human steeds are, with wonderful powers of endurance.

The shafts are dropped to the ground, one climbs in, the little man takes his place between the shafts, lifts them from the ground and makes off at top speed, dodging here and there for an opening as he makes his way rapidly through the crowded streets. At first one has very grave fears, especially if he is heavy, that an unexpected jolt may tip him over backwards, and suspend the "ricksha" man in the air between the shafts. All three members of the commission are rather above the average in avoirdupois, but Mr. Doan was the only one who came to grief. His runner was rather old, and became winded before the journey was half completed, thus necessitating transfer to another ricksha. The ricksha men are garbed in tight-fitting garments akin to undershirt and knee drawers, and their feet are shod with heavy socks having felt bottoms. The sock is always divided so that there is a place for the large toe separate from the others. A straw or fiber hat is worn which has the appearance in shape of an old-fashioned butter bowl inverted. These little men charge at the rate of about twenty cents an hour for their services.

IN FAIRYLAND.

The first impression of Tokyo is that you are in fairyland. Everything is decidedly different from anything else one has ever seen. In the first place the people are very small and then their clothing, appearance, houses and customs in general are so very foreign to anything seen at home. While there is a sprinkling of American clothes among the men, the great majority of them wear the favorite kimono or some adaptation of it. All of the women that you see on the street wear the kimino and a large colored sash high around the waist. One of the most striking things is the ceaseless, but musical, clatter of the wooden clogs on the pavement. The clog is kept up from one to two inches above the ground by little wooden strips on the under side. These clogs are usually held on the foot by slipping the toes under a small strap or cord, which is so divided that the great toe is separated from the rest. This enables them to hold the clog in the grip of the toes which is made possible by the division in the sock also. This is the hot season (exceedingly hot here) and each man or woman carries a fan which is in almost constant use. The dress of these people is very sensible and comfortable, and comports with the simple Japanese homes and the custom of sitting on the floor. We found the principal streets of Tokyo crowded with people at the evening time. The women and children are especially picturesque. Besides the modern electric lights which are much used in Tokyo the little colored paper lanterns are in evidence everywhere on the streets. Even the policeman carries one in front of him, suspended from a little stick. He also carries a fan and has a dagger in his belt. Tokyo has good electric street car service, and it is here that the politeness and good nature of the people is most manifest. The conductor, instead of shouting: 'Move up to the front!' says very gently: "It pains me to remind you, kind sir, but it would accommodate much if you could step slightly forward." When asking for the fare, he says: "Honorable sir, forgive me for taking your fare."

AT THE GIRLS' SCHOOL.

We stayed overnight at the Girls' School in Taakinogawa, one of the Tokyo suburbs, and were the guests of Misses Clawson and Parker. Much of today has been spent in conference and talking of the work. The insight we have received will aid us much in our later visit to Tokyo. We had no time to visit any of our other places of work in Tokyo, save the educational center. Disciples may well be proud of the equipment and workers in this important work. It is vacation time, and the students are all away, but we got a good idea of the grounds and buildings. Mr. McCoy is just finishing the Bible college building which stands very close to the old Governor Drake Building. This older structure will now be used entirely for the large Middle School, which is under the direction of our able Japanese, Dean Ishakawa. Mr. McCoy will continue in charge of the Bible College which will have excellent equipment in the new building. The new department of Domestic Science and music for the girls' school is also being completed. Miss Parker will have charge of this. It stands just opposite the Margaret K. Long Girls' School building. Miss Clawson has had charge of the girls' school from the beginning. It would be very difficult indeed to get utility at the very moderate price of these buildings. The workers are most enthusiastic over the outlook for their work, and are completely absorbed in their plans for the future.

This afternoon we have visited the great temple of the Goddess of Mercy in the heart of Tokyo, perhaps the most popular temple in all Japan. The temple is approached through a long temple street, crowded with little stores or bazaars on either side. This street is temple property and a great income comes from the rentals. Another street near at hand is also owned by the temple, and is entirely taken up by licensed houses of prostitution. The approach to the temple proper is made beneath one of the famous Japanese wooden arches. On either side of the gateway are the huge wooden guardian demons erected to keep the evil spirits away from the temple. These seem also to be looked upon as objects of worship. Inside the gateway the path is lined on either side with tiny booths, where rice and other grains are sold to be fed to the doves which are evident on all sides. It is supposed that much religious merit attaches itself to the feeding of the birds. The temple is anything but beautiful and the colorings are disappointing. The whole structure is dirty and spotted everywhere with the droppings of the doves.

A FAMOUS IDOL.

Inside the main part of the temple is the famous image of the Goddess of Mercy, which has been hidden from all eyes for two hundred years, it is said. We could see the sleek shaven priests, sitting cross-legged on the floor in the interior, smoking their cigarettes.

Numbers of people came constantly to worship before the shrine of the goddess. Before this place and every auxiliary Buddha, with which the temple is filled, is a great wooden collection box with wooden bars across the top. Into these boxes every visitor tosses a coin before beginning to worship. After this has been done, a low bow is made, while the hands are held in front of the face, palms together, and a prayer is muttered.

To the right of the main shrine is a peculiar idol which is one of the most worshipped in Japan. It is a wooden image of Buddha in a sitting posture. This image is supposed to have miraculous healing qualities and different parts of the body have been so constantly rubbed by worshipers desiring aid, that there is little left of them.

While we were standing near, a group of people came up and worshipped the idol. It seemed that the group consisted of a mother and four children, one of them a babe in arms. The place where the eyes of the idol had formerly been were rubbed by the mother, and then her hand pressed over the eyes of her babe. Then each member of the family selected some part of the image's body which corresponded to some troublesome part of their own and there was much rubbing and massaging. The pitiful superstition and depressing hopelessness of the whole scene cut one to the quick.

Let us not console ourselves with the thought that Japan is a wonderfully civilized nation, and scarcely needs Christianity. It is doubtful if there is any country in the world whose common people are more steeped in idolatry than those of Japan. The upper classes, especially the educated, are breaking away from their old idols, but the vast majority of these have taken no religion in the place of that given up.

THE COMMISSION REACHES CHINA.

The Commission of the Foreign Society to the mission fields has reached China from the Philippine Islands. A cablegram dated September 26 from Shanghai, China, was received at the office of the Foreign Society, Cincinnati, Ohio, the same day, and it reads as follows:

"Have arrived. All well. China greatest opportunity in missionary history. Reinforcements imperative."

Our brotherhood will be prepared to receive this stirring message. They will also be thankful that no evil has befallen the Commission. There can be no question about the opportunity in China. Our people are vitally interested in that field. There is no doubt about the splendid open doors. And no question can be raised as to the pressing need for reinforcements. We ought to have ten missionaries in China where we now have one. As the Commission states, the need is indeed imperative.

This cablegram received on the eve of the National Convention ought to stir our brotherhood to make the Atlanta Convention a splendid success. Our people should pour in there by the thousands. They should lay wise plans for the furtherance of the gospel, not only in China, but throughout the world.

Ohio Church Hears Town Leaders.

The First Christian church, Youngstown, O., L. G. Batman, pastor, in arranging its program for the fall and winter has planned for a unique series of month-end services to be held on the last Sunday of each month. In the morning the pastor will speak especially to the members of the church, and in the evening the services will be under the direction of the Men's club of the church which is one of the most active men's organizations in the city. The president of the club, Attorney William Dornan, will preside at these special meetings. The purpose of these services is to have discussed from the pulpit some of the practical problems of the community life. The pastor and the church believes in the social message of the gospel, and that they have a mission to the practical every day life of the city. Many men, prominent in the plblic life of Youngstown, will be invited to address these evening audiences. At the first of these services the subject for discussion was "Forces in Youngstown Making for Evil." The speakers were Mayor F. A. Hartenstein, Prosecuting Attorney Andrew M. Henderson and Probation Officer Benjamin Morris.

Autumn at William Woods

October is a busy month at William Woods College, Fulton, Missouri, for the attendance this time is one of the largest in the history of the institution, and the corps of instructors have just gotten a couple of hundred young women well in hand for a year of study and companionship.

Outside, the college campus forms a pretty autumn picture as the maples and hickory trees commence to color and the blue grass of the sward grows velvety with the new rains, for the October month in Imperial Missouri is one of the grandest of the whole year.

There is a homelike charm to a school like William Woods and beside the music, art and expression, and the science, and the literary attainments, there is contentment. And the contented girl is always a happy girl.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON
Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

J. B. BRINEY'S REVIEW.
In The Christian Standard.

I.

Such is the title of a book recently issued by the "Disciples Publication Society," and whose author is C. C. Morrison, editor of the Christian Century. To say that this book is remarkable, is to tell the plain truth. I have read and re-read it, and I must say, in all candor, that it contains more special pleading to the square inch than any other book that ever came to my notice, as will appear as this review proceeds.

The author first takes Mr. Campbell to task for translating baptizo "immerse" in "The Living Oracles," and expresses the opinion that but for this "fly in the ointment to pedobaptist readers," the book would have taken a conspicuous place among books of its kind. He thinks that both Baptists and disciples neglected the work on account of the "incongruity of the new rendering." As to the Baptists, this assumption is refuted by the fact that they have issued a New Testament in which they translate the word just as Mr. Campbell did; and the disciples had a very different reason for not using "The Living Oracles" in their reading and preaching, from that alleged by our author. They knew that they would have been accused of having a Bible of their own, as really was the case. As to pedobaptists, they could not accept the work without renouncing their time-honored custom, and prejudice would not allow them to do that. Our author's reasoning on this subject falls far short of the mark.

Our author seems to be laboring under the hallucination that he is doing pioneer work, and advancing new thoughts on "the meaning of baptism." Referring to affusionists, he says:

> They had a vague idea of sprinkling, pouring and immersion being three modes of baptism, but not once did one of his (Campbell's) opponents formulate just what the thing itself was which they argued could be administered by a plurality of modes. Had they done so they could easily enough have thrown the immersionist champion into confusion. But so long as they sought to find "sprinkle" and "pour" as well as "immerse in baptizo they were at his mercy.

This and other statements in the book show that the author's reading on the subject has been circumscribed and superficial. Mr. Rice, in his debate with Mr. Campbell, made and insisted upon the very distincton that Mr. Morrison says nobody ever made, as the followng citations clearly show:

> We are not contending that baptizo never signifies immerse, but that it does not definitely express mode (p. 80).
> Let me here distinctly remark that I am not contending that the word baptizo definitely expresses pouring or sprinkling I maintain that, as used in the Scriptures, it expresses the thing done—the application of water to a subject—but not the mode of doing it (p. 70).
> So baptizo expresses the thing done, the application of water to a person or thing; but it does not express the mode of doing it (p. 238).
> The truth is, baptism is a word appropriated to denote a religious ordinance; aand it will not do to substitute in its place any word which expresses merely the mode of its administration. The ordinance is one thing; the mode of administering it is another (p. 239).
> Christian baptism is the ordinance by which we became visibly identified with Christ, receive the benefits of his death, and are bound more strongly to a life of holiness (p. 250).
> I have proved another important fact: viz., that when immersion came to prevail among the Greeks and Latins, they employed baptizo to denote the ordinance, and selected other words to express the mode of performing it by immersion (p. 270).

Thus we see that seventy-one years ago, a good while before our author was born, the very thing that Mr. Morrison boldly says had never been done, was done repeatedly and with emphasis, for all the italics in the foregoing quotations are Mr. Rice's, and yet it did not throw "the immersionist champion into confusion." The person who has manifested the most confusion in the matter is our author, and he should wake up, rub his eyes, lay aside the weight of error that besets him, and try to at least join the rear of the procession of thought. Whether the distinction is valid or not, is a question by itself, and I do not care to consider it now.

In his fourth chapter, our author takes up what he calls Mr. Campbell's "three assumptions, upon which he builds his entire defense of the immersion dogma." The first one he states thus: "That a word always retains its root meaning in all its forms and in every context." Permit me to say that Mr. Campbell never made any such assumption, and our author fails to substantiate the assertion. Expressing astonishment at the statement, he quotes Mr. Campbell as follows:

> According to the usages of all languages, ancient and modern, derivative words legally inherit the specific meaning of their natural progenitors, and never can so far alienate from themselves that particular significance as to indicate any action specifically different from that intimated in the parent stock.

There are some curious things about this quotation and its treatment. In the first place, no reference is given, and I can not be sure whence it was taken. All the language quoted is contained in the Campbell-Rice debate, but if that was the source of it, a very important modifying clause is omitted without any intimation of its omission. Between the words "specific" and "meaning" in the foregoing excerpt, the original contains the following modifying language: "Though not necessarily the figurative." That modification utterly overturns Mr. Morrison's asseveration concerning Mr. Campbell's assumption. If the quotation was taken from the aforesaid debate, a grave sin was committed in the omission of the clause just cited; and if it was taken from some other source, and is fully quoted, our author should have been well enough informed to know that it does not fully express Mr. Campbell's position. No one is competent to correctly represent Mr. Campbell on the subject of baptism without great familiarity with his debate with Mr. Rice, for he explained himself more carefully and fully in that debate than anywhere else. If our author did not commit an offense against morals in making his quotation, he manifested a lack of information on the subject that disqualifies him for acting the part of a critic in regard to Mr. Campbell's position.

Furthermore, our author wholly ignores Mr. Campbell's viewpoint, and fails to note the class of words with which the great philologist is dealing. The sage of Bethany is discussing derivative verbs that express action, and confines his principle to that class of words. In his effort to show Mr. Campbell to be wrong, Mr. Morrison takes two words—psallo and candidatus, and shows that they departed from their original meaning; but psallo is not a derivative verb, and candidatus is not a verb at all, and hence these words do not come under Mr. Campbell's principle. This accurate reasoner never stultified himself by saying that primitive words never change their meaning. On the contrary, he said precisely the reverse, as I will show in a subsequent article.

Mr. Campbell challenged Mr. Rice to produce a single derivative verb of action that had ever so far alienated from itself the root meaning of the primitive word as to indicate any action specifically different from that intimated in the parent stock, and the foxy Rice failed to meet the challenge; and our author, in his attempt to do it, shifts the issue and misses the point entirely! Mr. Campbell's position is that in bapto the root syllable indicates "dip," and that baptizo, the derivative, could never, when properly used, express an action specifically different from that, as "sprinkle" or "pour," and the position is impregnable, and our author's guns are too small to shake it.

A LETTER TO MR. BRINEY FROM THE AUTHOR.

September 12, 1914. Rev. J. B. Briney, Pewee Valley, Ky. My dear Brother Briney: I am truly enjoying your spirited review of my book on baptism and I am trying to profit by your strictures. Of course I do not feel called upon to make any response at this time; a book must stand or fall by itself. But on one point I do not feel satisfied to remain silent.

Your intimation that my treatment of quotations from Mr. Campbell has been "an offense against morals" because you do not find them in the Campbell and Rice debate is not only unworthy of the good spirit that nearly always characterizes your polemical writings but of your erudition in the bibliography of baptism as well. The quotations you refer to were taken from Mr. Campbell's constructive volume, "Christian Baptism," published ten years after the Campbell and Rice debate, in 1853.

The particular quotation which you refer to in your second article, "Wherever the radical syllable is found, the radical idea is in it," will be found on page 119—and in italics, too, Brother Briney; and it refers to root syllables not to derivative words!

Not only so, but the very words he uses to illustrate his italicized thesis are primary words, not derivatives—dip, sprinkle, read. It is a pure fiction of Mr. Campbell that because a word is a derivative it is protected somehow against taking on new meaning. A word is a word, and any word may change its meaning in certain circumstances.

As far as I now recall, all my quotations from Mr. Campbell in the chapters dealing with the meaning of the word baptizo are from the above-mentioned book and, without exception I think, from the chapter on the "Action of Baptism." I am not sure that I did wisely in omitting to give references for these quotations, but my book was intended for the average untechnical layman quite as much as for the minister, and I didn't want to scare him with footnotes!

The Standard editor's exclamation, "there is surely literary vice of some sort here," upon reading your "exposure" of my "gross carelessness" and "base misrepresentation" of Alexander Campbell, prompts me to suggest that you give this letter of explanation to the Standard readers, a favor which I have no doubt you will be pleased to grant. With assurances of sincere esteem, I remain affectionately your brother.

JESUS AND JUDAS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR OCTOBER 25.

Matt. 26:14-25. Memory Verses, 27:3-5.

Golden Text.—Woe unto that man through whom the Son of man is betrayed! Mt. 26:24.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

26. (47) And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people. (48) Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that is he: take him. (49) And straightway he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Rabbi; and kissed him. (50) And Jesus said unto him, Friend, do that for which thou art come. Then they came and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

27. (3) Then Judas, who betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, (4) saying, I have sinned in that I betrayed innocent blood. But they said, What is that to us? see thou to it. (5) And he cast down the pieces of silver into the sanctuary, and departed; and he went away and hanged himself. (6) And the chief priests took the pieces of silver, and said, it is not lawful to put them into the treasury, since it is the price of blood. (7) And they took counsel and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. (8) Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day. (9) Then was fulfilled that which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was priced, whom certain of the children of Israel did price; (10) and they gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 47. Judas, one of the twelve: One of the twelve Jesus had chosen for the special work of bearing witness of his evangel. He has been on most intimate terms with the Teacher. Just a few hours since he received bread from the Saviour's hands at the Last Supper in the upper room. Now he comes as the guide of the temple police, directing them to Jesus. The police had been sent to arrest Jesus. A great multitude with swords and staves: It seems strange that so great a multitude should have come for one man. The explanation may be in the fact that they really feared Jesus' supernatural power. They thought perhaps he might destroy the officers if they were not in large numbers.

v. 48. Now he that betrayeth him gave them a sign: This signal had been agreed upon previously.

v. 49. And kissed him: The Greek word used here would be more accurately translated kissed him much. It was used to signify the greeting of very dear friends of men of equal high rank. When they greeted one another thus, each put his right hand on the other's left shoulder and kissed his right cheek; then the left hand was put on the other's right shoulder and the left cheek was kissed. So we see that the signal was an unmistakable one.

v. 50. Friend, do that for which thou art come: We remember that Jesus had signified that Judas would betray him, at the Supper. The Master was telling Judas that he knew that he had come to give him a hypocritical kiss. "Jesus received the kiss to teach us to love our enemies and those whom we know to be bitter against us." (St. Hilary.)

v. 3. Then Judas—when he saw that he was condemned: He had thought he might betray Jesus without his knowing of his crime. During these years of intimacy he had failed to learn the utter futility of deceiving Jesus. It had been well for him had he pondered upon the warning in Numbers, "Be sure your sins will find you out." I think Judas had no conception of the enormity of his crime till after its committal. Repented himself: Judas was more than repentant for the fact that he had been discovered. He is now ashamed of himself. He is disgusted to think that he is that kind of a man. And brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests: Here is where the fineness of his fibre shows itself. His association with Jesus and that great company of real men had given him conscience. He might have committed an equally odious crime without any serious compunctions of conscience, had he not imbibed some of the spirit of Jesus.

v. 4. I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood: He had betrayed an innocent man, Jesus. What is that to us? see thou to it: They had all they wished to have to do with Judas. They were through with him. They had paid him for his work and desired not more service from him. He could look after his own conscientious scruples. We cannot but pity this poor fellow. He is without friends. He might have gone back to Jesus and been forgiven had he possessed enough moral courage: but he is a weak man. Jesus must have pitied him greatly. Notice how he addresses him in verse 50 of the preceding chapter.

v. 5. Sanctuary: The Holy Place. Hanged himself: See Acts 1:18 for a different account.

v. 6. It is not lawful to put them into the treasury, since it is the price of blood: How remarkable that murderers should have their scruples. But we have often heard that "there is honor even among thieves."

v. 7. The potter's field, to bury strangers in: Probably so called because potters secured their clay there.

v. 9. Through Jeremiah the prophet: The quotation is not found in the book of Jeremiah, as we know it, but in Zechariah 2:12-13. The Evangelist probably refers to it as being in Jeremiah because the book of Jeremiah stood at the beginning of the group of prophetic books.

When Loyalty Failed

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

He made his prayer for strength and it was given him. We often fail to notice this outstanding fact. Facing the soldiers that come out to take him, his superiority makes them fall back before him; standing before the august high-priest his kingly silence and marvelous self-control put that dignitary in a corner; looking deeply into the eyes of the Roman governor he reveals weakness in Pilate by his own masterful power; only once does he stagger and that is when his own bodily energy ebbs out under the load of his cross. Hanging there he forgives his enemies, considers the welfare of his mother and encourages the penitent thief. Oh, kingly Christ, how Thou dost challenge the enthusiasm of strong men!

Rev. John R. Ewers.

Returning from his prayer he sees the procession, headed by Judas, wending their way among the trees. They come upon him. "Whom seek ye?" "Jesus of Nazareth." "I am he"—and they fall back. It is meanness quailing before righteousness; inferiority consciously abashed in the presence of superiority; brutality conquered by spirit. When will we understand the power of truth, of righteousness, of spiritual reality? The world was built for goodness to triumph in.

"PUT UP THY SWORD"

Within the present year the world is to learn the deep meaning of the Master's word, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." No matter who wins in Europe—the same will be loser. Nothing is gained by brute strength. Europe is wrecked—slain regiments, mangled thousands, violated women, orphaned children, soiled youth, shattered cathedrals, burned homes, devastated fields, kindled hates, the knowledge of dastardly deeds, the remembrance of blood, fire, lust and beastliness—Europe is hell. Take the sword, but know that taking it you perish with it.

FLEEING DISCIPLES

Blundering, short-sighted Peter makes his pathetically loyal defense. He strikes wildly and instead of splitting the fellow's head only succeeds in slicing off an ear. I remember that this was the only event in the Passion Play that elicited a smile. It is pathetically ludicrous. And yet we admire his stout devotion. "I will die with you," he had said a few hours before. He came very near to it here. But for Christ's intervention he would not have survived long. It was the folly of sword play. He meant well but his judgment was bad. It was another example of zeal without knowledge. We strike a blow for God and we knock down the house. We reform saloons with hatchets. We teach sex hygiene blatantly and do more damage than good. We defend some old fogey notion of the Bible and give a fine imitation of Don Quixote. We curse the church for being too slow in some reform and ride off a precipice with foolishly inscribed banner waving. Brave little Peters we would fight the whole world—with the wrong weapons.

And the disciples ran away. Where is all this loyal unto death talk now? Sounding brass. Big sermons and little love. Great loyalty "to the plea" and small missionary offerings. Vast admiration for the church and no service. Loud talk about our "movement" and no defense for a brother minister in distress. Much appreciation for prohibition and the anti-saloon league but no votes—not even registered—not even paying taxes. Large hopes for a great ingathering but no personal work. Vociferous' prayers for the "poor and needy," but not a penny for charity. Let us not be too hard on Peter; he has many modern brothers.

"THOU HAST SAID"

"By the living God tell us whether you are the very Christ or not," and he answered in the tragic stillness, "I am." Let there be no doubt here. There are questions that we can debate. There are issues which are not vital; but the divinity, yes, if you will, the deity, of Jesus Christ is not one of them. Here we must plant our feet upon the eternal rock of reality. There has been too much conjuring with the word "divinity." "Yes, I believe that Jesus is divine," I heard a rabbi say, "but I think that he is divine just as I am divine," he added. Divinity is a word to toy with. By it we may mean anything or nothing. If we mean that Jesus was anything less than the God-man we should use some other word. The hour has come when we must say without equivocation, without mental reservation, without any shadowy doubts, without any "Ifs" and "Ands," without any "If you will let me define it"—the hour has come when we must say, "Yes. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and my Savior." "Who are you?" "I am Christ."

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 14.

The Church That Was Not Approved. Rev. 3:12-22.

A church that is not approved is a church whose members are not approved. "By the word church, however, I understand," says Alexander Campbell, "neither the king of England nor the kingdom of heaven, neither bishops nor pope of Rome, neither a meeting-house nor the sinners who assemble in it; but simply a congregation of saints or Christians who have mutually and definitely agreed to assemble together statedly at a place appointed, for the purpose of worshipping God, keeping his ordinances, correcting, exhorting, edifying, and watching over one another in the fear of God; and who in pursuance of this agreement have organized themselves for the accomplishment of these important purposes." We may add to this that persons so organized have important duties to the communities in which they assemble and to the world. If they do not, for any reason, help one another and contribute something to the growth of morality and religion, they are to be condemned.

DULL INSENSIBILITY.

The church in Laodicea was neither hot nor cold. It had no driving interests. Its loves and its hates were weak. It was not profoundly stirred by spiritual failures. The uncleanness of the popular religion was accepted as necessary and therefore not to be opposed as an insult to God and a degradation of man. At the present time such a church announces that it will attend to its particular offices as a religious institution. Business and politics belong to other organizations. It allows the crooked business man and the corrupt politician to sit in her councils and dictate her policies.

STUPID PRIDE.

This church thought it was rich. It must have boasted of its prosperity. It pointed out the men of wealth in its membership. Perhaps it had a place of worship more pleasing to the artistic taste than were the places of worship of the other churches of Asia. It is easy for human beings to be proud of external conditions and neglectful of the weightier matters of religion.

DEEP POVERTY.

The church in Laodicea was poor in intelligence. It had plenty of conceit and very little knowledge. I doubt that martyrs were sustained in their sufferings by its prayers. Churches that were undertaking great things for the kingdom did not look to it for loyal support. Its word was weak and contemptible. The men who praised it for its moderation in dealing with evils despised it for its ignorance and cowardice. It was respectable because it had no vision and followed the drift of opinion. If a church of Jesus Christ has any reason for its existence, it creates sentiment. It does not wait for history to decide what is good and right. It subjects its faith to the decisions of history—it has to do this—but its faith is one of the factors in history.

REBUKE IN LOVE.

Rebuke in hate is easy. We like to denounce and to deride men who have deranged our plans and shown our wisdom to be foolishness. The Christian rebuke has a different motive. As the father corrects the child he loves, as a friend leads one away from sordid ideals, so the disciple of Jesus administers all his rebukes. He thinks of the other fellow as well as of his own wounded pride when he admonishes the other. He reads the biblical denunciations of sin as one who loves and not as one who hates.

Jer. 9:23-24; 48:7; Rom. 1:22; 1 Cor. 8: 1-2; 13: 4; Gal. 6:3; Lev. 19:17; Ps. 141: 5; Prov. 27:5; Matt. 18:15-17; 1 Thess. 5:14; Heb. 3:13.

WHY Your School Should Use the Bethany System of Sunday-school Literature.

1. Because it is more easily handled than any other series in the practical work of the school.
   Thus It Helps the Superintendent.
2. Because its Teacher's Manuals contain fully a third more material than the manuals of any other series.
   Thus It Helps the Teacher.
3. Because its arrangement for study, its illustration and mechanical attractiveness are unequaled by any other body of Graded literature.
   Thus It Helps the Pupil.
4. Because it is Scriptural in teaching.
   Thus It Helps the Cause of Bible Study.
5. Because it is used not only by Disciples, but also by Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, etc.
   Thus It Helps in Graded Union Work.
6. Because it is free from the sectarian spirit, and is produced by the editorial cooperation of the foremost religious bodies.
   Thus It Helps the Cause of Christian Unity, for which the Disciples Stand.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Rev. George A. Campbell, Pastor of First Church, Hannibal, Mo.

Rev. G. A. Campbell.

USING WORDS RIGHT

There is strange irony in some of the phrases with which we describe life and character. "He believes in having a good time" is a commonplace applied to a sensualist. What irnoy is here! No sensualist can have a good time. He walks in the way of death. Broken hearts, grieved friends, loss of soul, disease of body, do not make a good time. Goodness is necessary to a good time. Righteousness and happiness are indissolubly joined together. "He is a good-hearted man" is often said of a drunkard. No man is thoroughly good-hearted who because of his own appetite will grossly wrong those near to him. "Good-hearted" is too good a term to abuse. A man cannot be good-hearted without having self-control. He may be reckless but not good-hearted. "What man by money. Tomorrow he will be dead. Shrouds is he worth?" is often asked concerning a man, meaning how much money has he. We cannot measure a have no pockets. Worth consists in character. Money has no buying power in the realm of the spirit. Character is eternal. Be not deceived by phrases. Words sometimes wear masks. Test them. Be sure that they are ruggedly honest. If they are ironical do not miss the irony.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The War and Missions

IN a time when a fourth of the world is engaged in a sanguinary contest like the present war in Europe, every religious and philanthropic cause suffers.

And among these causes intimately related to world progress and betterment is the Christian missionary propaganda. No interest is dealt a more staggering blow than this.

The growing regard in which the non-Christian Orient was rapidly coming to hold the Occident, because of the interpretations of its spirit of good will and humanity has been disturbed by the rude shock of the war, outbreaking among those very people to whom the East was learning to look for direction and inspiration.

The entire Orient was moved with surprise and elation eight years ago when non-Christian Japan brought Russia to pause. The long tradition of the superiority of the West was shattered in that blow.

Now comes the further spectacle of an orgy of international murder, among the very people who have been regarded, with America, as the teachers of the world.

With what humbling of spirit are the missionaries now compelled to meet the searching inquiries and barbed retorts of their non-Christian neighbors! What opportunities are now offered the confessors of the ethnic faiths for sarcastic comment on the fierce antagonism exhibited by the followers of the Prince of Peace!

The millions of money that should be expended in world evangelization are being poured out for war equipment.

The youth that should go out to be teachers, preachers, physicians and social workers in the mission lands are offering up their lives in German regiments or under the banners of the allies.

The countless mission agencies that flourished all over Europe, and sent out Christian forces to the lands of the rising sun are all but abandoned in the overwhelming need of men and money for the war.

And in the hot antagonism of the conflict the most appalling burdens of national debt are being recklessly bound on the backs and hearts of generations yet far ahead, burdens whose mere interest staggers the imagination, and whose sinister advantage can come only to the money lenders and the makers of armaments.

These are but a few of the more somber aspects of this unhappy struggle among the Christian nations.

But is there another side to this red shield?

Aside from the consoling commonplace that no great evil can befall without some compensating good, are there any real and evident benefits which this tragedy is destined to bring to the cause of missions?

No such convulsion as this can be imagined without the certain conviction that it will release hitherto unsuspected forces to aid in the big problem of world evangelization.

We do not hesitate to affirm with emphasis that there are such.

The western obsession that the increase of armaments is the guarantee of peace is going to be shattered past all reconstruction. This has been one of the scandals of the Occident in the thought of those reflective nations of the East who are not ambitious for military success, who marvel that the Christian lands, from which comes the missionary message of peace, should still assume evermore the air of the braggart and the bandit.

The collapse of war through its own crushing cost, its horrible tragedies, and its merciless defiance of Christian virtue, will bring into closer and more enduring fellowship the best spirits of the East and the West, and will give Christianity an opportunity to speak with confidence and without shame to the high-minded and reflective people of the Orient.

The wounds of the war will not soon heal. Missionary funds from Europe will be a long time in regaining their former level. The value of the common commodities, at home and in the far lands, will remain high for an indefinite time. Much sacrifice will be necessary on the part of the missionaries, whose incomes will be reduced, and whose numbers will be depleted by the war. This will not be an unmixed evil. Nothing has more quickly and convincingly gotten home to the non-Christian people than the willingness of the missionaries to suffer with them and for them. That gallant heroism which accepts hardship with undimmed faith in God goes further to carry conviction to the questioning heart of the East than any eloquence of speech or impressiveness of equipment.

The humbling of soul which the war is sure to bring to all the nations of the West, and especially to the participants can hardly fail to bring a deepening of the religious life which may well be the prelude to the revival of religion in all the Christian lands. This will mean, without doubt, the consecration of a much increased number of men and women to the work of missions. Times of depression and public calamity have always been the birth hours of new spiritual forces. It can hardly fail to prove true as the issue of the present war. A chastened soul brings forth fruits meet for repentance. The missionary enterprise will go forward with fresh and inspiring impetus after the evil days are past.

In the meantime the entire burden of sustaining the cause of world-embracing missions falls on America. Almost alone we have avoided the tragedy of this struggle. It is a moment for renewed devotion to the holy cause. To the growing importance and cost of missions is added the sobering fact that those who have assisted in the great adventure are held for a time in the grip of this life and death struggle of the nations that leaves no time nor resources for any other cause. Such may continue for years to be the case. It is the opportunity and obligation to seize the standards falling from other hands and bear them on to the end of the day.

Man's extremity is God's opportunity.

It is also ours.

Harmony, Unity, Peace

The Presidential Address Delivered at the General Convention of Disciples of Christ, Atlanta, Georgia.

BY HILL M. BELL.

IT is assumed that the address of the President of the General Convention should have to do largely with a review of the work accomplished by the organization during the past year, together with such recommendations for the future as may be expedient. So far as the details of the work accomplished by the organization through its Executive Committee are concerned, a complete report will be made to you by our able secretary, Rev. Robert Graham Frank. Mr. Frank, as corresponding secretary, has had the supremely difficult task of organizing a budget that should be satisfactory to all of the missionary, charitable and educational interests of the Disciples. He has gone about this in a most thorough way as you will see from the results which he will present to you at this meeting. The equitable distribution of the funds to be derived from the churches in promoting the different organizations, marks a new epoch in the history of the Disciples. I believe that no other one thing attempted in recent years means so much to our missionary, charitable and educational organizations. This budget has the approval of every organization that shares in its benefits. I doubt if our brother will ever receive the gratitude that is due him for accomplishing in a single year this stupendous work. He has done for the societies a work that would ordinarily cost them at least $10,000; and he has done this for the merest stipend.

We are also indebted to him for organizing the programs of this convention and for securing the co-operation of national and local committees in perfecting and executing carefully wrought-out plans. Fortunate, indeed, are the Disciples in having for leader in so great a task a man of the executive capacity and constructive genius of Robert Graham Frank.

SOME PRESSING NEEDS.

Finding the work of the convention has been an important consideration of the officers during the year. In doing this the usefulness of the general convention has been demonstrated to us who have been compelled to blaze a trail for our successors. We are convinced as never before that there is need first of a central advisory body such as the convention is, and ought to be, to deal with all matters of common rather than specific interest to the national boards, and to insure an equitable distribution of the budget among them. The old idea that each board shall go to the churches and ask for everything in sight, regardless of the worthy appeal of other interests, must certainly be abandoned. A presentation of all interests to each church is imperative. An impartial board, such as the executive committee of the general convention, is indispensable to such a program.

Second, there is need of the annual meeting of the convention that the Disciples may deal with problems that can not have a place on the program of any national board promoting a special philanthropy. There is need of such an organization in order that the programs offered by the different boards shall be properly organized. The old idea that our annual meetings should consist of eight or ten different conventions, each bent upon monopolizing all possible of the time and attention of visiting Disciples is no longer tolerable. Moreover, this convention becomes the clearing house of our people, enabling us to arrive at a better understanding of each other and of each others' problems. The general convention in its annual meetings should be an open parliament for the unfettered discussion of important religious, moral, and sociological questions; and especially those questions bearing upon our relation to other religious bodies. As an advisory body it should be of the greatest assistance to all our special organized interests. Indeed, we learn from the officers of these societies that the general convention had its genesis in their need of such an agency—in short, that the general convention is the child of our philanthropic organizations, born of the need just set forth. In harmonizing our missionary, charitable and educational interests, we will agree, I think, that the convention should be the most potent factor in promoting Christian union, the unity of the followers of Jesus the Christ, that unity for which He prayed in these words, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are." If I interpret aright the prayer of our Lord, it was that His followers should be at peace with all the world and especially among themselves, that contention, strife, bitterness, should have no place in the heart of the Christian. A general convention that would promote these things without friction should appeal to every Disciple present in this meeting.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

This brings us to a consideration of the most serious problem that shall receive our attention. Has the general convention brought us peace and harmony, or has it brought contention and strife? As a religious people we should exemplify the practicability of Christian union. But, are we doing this? Are we kind, loving and considerate of our brethren, or are we critical, censorious and combative? I think that as a people the former traits characterize our ideal, and that in most situations we will sacrifice much to avoid strife. If the general convention as now organized serves to promote dissension among us we should have the courage to organize along different lines. A year ago Judge Henry in that statesman-like presidential address which he delivered before the convention at Toronto, said:

JUDGE HENRY QUOTED.

"Christ is our leader, and Peace is our watchword. Better were it by far that we separate now than that we organize here a new ecclesiasticism. Our credentials invest us with no power to bind either the churches or those who abide in their fellowship. Whatever the general convention shall vote, as touching others than those participating, will not be compulsory, but advisory, and under the blessing of God a counsel of wisdom commended in love to all the churches."

And then he adds:

"If a convention of chosen representatives shall prove to be obstructive of Christian union and of efficient co-operation in spreading the kingdom it must then be abandoned. If from conventions of all persons who may choose to participate it shall finally appear that the wisest counsels emerge for unifying and extending Christ's kingdom, that mode will ultimately and inevitably prevail."

It seems to me that in this last paragraph Judge Henry spoke with true prophetic vision. He expresses, too, with fine discernment the importance that Disciples generally attach to the promotion of Christian union. If a delegate convention should breed dissension, a convention of all persons who choose to participate should be organized.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

In view of the meaningful occurrences of the year now closing, I believe we should consider well before proceeding further under the present form of organization. Many of our beloved brethren believe that a delegate convention of the churches of Christ is wholly at variance with our long-established church order. If this be true is it wise or Christian for a majority to insist that this convention shall be of a type to give offense even to the least of our beloved? As for myself, and I know that many of our brethren agree with me in this, I hold that a delegate membership from the churches is not an essential basis for organizing a general convention. I believe a convention so organized is not in harmony with the teachings of the fathers of our movement. It may be that a delegate convention as now conducted is harmless in that it shall but voice the will of the churches and Disciples generally, but it is certain that such organizations in the past have developed into ecclesiastical tribunals that we do not endorse. In establishing a delegate convention we undoubtedly are establishing a legislative body that can do all those things that in the past we have condemned. In the delegate convention, as I have heard it expressed, we have a mill of a certain type that surely will not be long without a characteristic grist.

SUCH A CONVENTION NEEDED.

I hope that in advocating a change in the plan of organizing the general convention, it shall not be thought that I am in favor of its abolition. I base my suggestion in the conviction that we need a general convention of Disciples, not of churches. We need an advisory body with advisory powers, not an advisory body with legislative powers. Our people need advice, not law, and our boards need suggestions, not edicts and ukases. Our missionary and educational institutions should be dependent upon the Disciples and churches for approval, not direction by legislative act or executive order. I can not agree with those who would find solution of our problems by dissolving the general convention. To do so would be a serious affront to many of our brethren, who see in it, as I do, an agency of first importance in promoting Christian union by harmonizing our varied activities. I believe that if we should discontinue the general convention, but little time would elapse until we would be compelled to find for the very work's sake, some other organization to take its place. To me the question is, "Shall this convention be so organized that it will bring peace and harmony, or shall we continue a form of organization that admittedly engenders among us dissension and strife with all their attendant evils?"

SOME SUGGESTIONS.

In this situation I feel that I should be recreant to my duty as your presiding officer were I not to make certain constructive suggestions pointing a way, as I see it, out of our troubles. True, I may not be able to do this, but I shall feel better for having tried even though it shall find in your hearts nought but disapproval. I would suggest then that in order that the general convention of the Disciples of Christ shall accomplish, without friction or controversy, the important work heretofore outlined, it should be organized under a new constitution that would constitute it a representative body of Disciples of Christ, and not one of Churches of Christ.

I would make every Disciple attending this convention eligible to vote, and I would make every Disciple eligible to hold office.

In voting I would recommend that the Disciples of each state, organized territory, the District of Columbia and foreign country, represented in the annual meeting, have ten votes to be cast in accordance with the announced decision of the Disciples there present from said state, territory, district of Columbia, or foreign country.

I would make it the object of this convention to promote unity, economy, and efficiency among all the philanthropic organizations of the Disciples of Christ through suggestion, and to be advisory to such philanthropic organizations, thus securing closer co-operation in the work of the kingdom of God. I would empower this convention as an advisory body, to represent the Disciples of Christ annually in a program planned to magnify the work and ideals of the church.

I would make the officers of this organization with eight other members chosen by the convention together with the corresponding or executive secretaries of each of our national boards, an executive committee.

I would make it the duty of this executive committee to fix the time and place of the annual meeting of the convention to prepare the annual budgets of the national boards represented on said committee, to join said boards in recommending to the churches and the Disciples generally these budgets and to arrange a program for the annual meeting so that each convention and national society shall have an equitable amount of time for its business and the promotion of its special work.

I would give the convention power to transact any business of a general nature in keeping with its character as an advisory body representing the Disciples of Christ; and I would give it limited power to raise money to finance its annual meeting and to insure the preparation, publication, and promotion of the annual budget. I would provide that this convention should not have power to receive reports from our national boards nor to appoint commissions or other subsidiary bodies, with power over the churches or boards, and then I would provide that the powers not expressly granted to the general convention, should be reserved to the churches and the recognized missionary, educational and charitable organizations of the Disciples of Christ.

HARMONY DESIRED.

I am pleading that we forget our differences to the extent of making every honorable concession of personal opinion and bias, in order that peace may prevail among us as a people. If we shall be in complete harmony as to these matters of our church polity, we may with confidence undertake far greater things than we have yet essayed in the name of our Lord.

We are met in a time of the greatest war in history, and while our own beloved country is at peace many of our leading industries are paralyzed to such an extent that actual want confronts many of our people. No such ruthless slaughter of men, no such destruction of property without semblance of excuse was ever known before. The armies of the war-god are multitudinous, awful. The hosts of the Prince of Peace lie prone in apparent defeat. As we come together, men the world around are questioning. Why this world war? Is wholesale murder and rapine a product of our Christian civilization? Have we studied science to little purpose other than to perfect the arts of war? Has 1,000 years of practically uninterrupted development of Christian civilization taught the world that our temples of worship may be desecrated and destroyed at will, unless, perchance they are shrines of art? How is it that these Christian nations are each calling upon the God we worship to witness the righteousness of the awful battles they wage against each other? Does Christianity teach that love of king shall transcend our love for the Christ who died for us? Does it teach that brethren in disagreement may each supplicate God to give him strength to destroy the other?

CHURCH STRIFE AND THE WAR.

As we study this picture of the Great War can we believe that these nations in conflict are Christian, and that these people have Christ for their leader, and Peace for their watchword? We acknowledge that it is scarcely credible. In the face of this awful conflict among Christian nations, what are our missionaries to do? Shall they proclaim in the name of our Lord "Peace on earth, good will toward men," and shall pagan Africa answer, "No, no! Your God is a war-god. Your people are at war. We are at peace?" Shall we receive answer like unto this whithersoever we go with the gospel of our Saviour? The fact is, these warring peoples of Europe have wandered far afield from the teachings of our Lord. His leadership has been thrust aside for that of ambitious kings thirsting for power. But the world knows not this. The world holds Christianity responsible for this awful war, for, says the world, are not these nations dominated by Christian ideals?

And now let us as Disciples apply this illustration to our own situation. We plead for the unity of God's people. But dissension and strife are so rampant among us that division is threatened. We apparently have no doubt as to its cause or seriousness. Knowing the cause, let us remove it.

Listen to this from our beloved Dr. Ainslie in the October number of the Christian Union Quarterly:

"We are facing the most dreadful war in the history of the world, and there is as little ground for its existence as perhaps any war that was ever fought, except that it has back of it a civilization thoroughly dominated by the wickedness of militarism. In the midst of such a calamity it is proper to ask, If the church had been united would this war have been possible? One thing is certain, and that is that these nations are fighting just as though Jesus Christ had never been on this earth. It has been said in both France and Germany, and perhaps elsewhere "Where now is the church?" The Pope of Rome bewailed the condition and said. "The church has no influence to stop this war." Divided Protestantism has not even been considered. The fact of the matter is the church has been so busy perpetuating her divisions and strengthening her denominational walls, that she has not had time to give attention to the great things of the kingdom of God."

THE CHURCH HELD RESPONSIBLE.

A divided church is responsible for this war. A church that fails to understand the anguish of our Lord as He pled in that last prayer, that we His followers might all be one, is responsible for divided Christendom. A church whose members give themselves over to strife and criticism, and who exalt the petty above the fundamental is "perpetuating her divisions and strengthening her denominational walls."

My brethren, the Church of Christ must not be such a church nor the Disciples such a people. We will put away the things that make for division. We will sacrifice pride of opinion and institutional bias that harmony may prevail in our councils. And we will be wise, my brethren, if in eliminating the controversial from our plans for the advancement of the kingdom, we conserve in them all that is good and helpful. In humility will we consider the responsibilities placed upon us as disciples of the Prince of Peace. For as we contemplate the results of division in the church we can not leave out the horrors of this awful war. I plead for harmony, not controversy and strife; for unity, not division; for peace, not war. I plead for a constructive policy on the part of Disciples that shall put away dissension and that shall advance the coming of the kingdom of our Lord. Then will we join that heavenly host in praising God and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will toward men."

Raymond Robins, Servant

An interview by a Chicago Herald representative with the man who is striving for a United States senatorship, representing the state of Illinois, in opposition to Roger Sullivan and Lawrence Y. Sherman.

IT WAS dusty in the neighborhood of 1437 West Ohio street when I went to see Raymond Robins, Progressive candidate for the United States Senate, at his home. The neighborhood is one of tall buildings, of summer heat and winter cold, of ugliness, to be quite frank, and of the sense of poverty and the rush for work.

But it is very different in the place where Mr. and Mrs. Robins live.

THREE STAIR FLIGHTS UP.

Dusty, tired, with a mind I had to concentrate on my work, I climbed three flights of stairs to the topmost apartment in the old, old house, and through an open doorway passed at once into the room where Mr. Robins was sitting.

I had an instant impression of energy. In the room, filled with books, Mr. Robins seemed more than alive; he vibrated action, and yet he was so quiet and so gentle as he sat facing me and drew up a chair, that I wondered how such a man could come through some of the adventures I had heard attributed to him; how such a man, indeed, had ever gone into them.

But my bewilderment was only for a moment. As Mr. Robins laughed the faint creases around the eyes became apparent, lines of resolve and gravity appeared around his mouth. It is a very purposeful face, this face of the man of 41 who has lived as much as most men—even in America—at 60. And there is an expression in his eyes that not many men, even of 60, possess.

Have you seen a cowboy out West? Do you know the look with which he will gaze over the prairies, the long look that sees things that one without his trained sight could not hope to see? It is some such expression as this that fills Mr. Robins' eyes, only his is not an outward but an inner "long look."

He settled to talk with his head a trifle forward, his eyes upon the roofs of the houses, the tall chimney stacks that are the only outlook from his study windows. Within the room was warm with books, the friendly feeling that numbers of loved and used books give.

There are portraits of Lincoln, a framed copy of a speech on Democracy, some few loved expressions of great minds framed and pinned on the falls, but for the most part the wall space is covered with book shelves and books overflow onto the chairs, even, though not onto Mr. Robins' desk.

Was it the habit of his poverty-stricken youth that taught him the value of that business-like austerity of desk-room. I wonder? What of the little boy who sold papers in the streets at the age of 8, down in Louisville, Ky., the little boy who was imbued with the desire to get rich?

DESIRE TO BE RICH.

When you have felt the pinch of poverty you realize what riches mean. They mean power, the ability to do things, to give, to learn. With all his young heart Raymond Robins desired to be rich.

He told me about it in that quiet, musical voice that can thrill his hearers even in the largest room, they tell me, his eyes still on the world outside, turning to me very seldom, as if it were easier to talk of his ideas in this way, to talk out what he feels most deeply, perhaps.

"I did everything to make money," he said. "I wanted money with all my soul, and I intended to get it. That was my first ambition in my life. I have had three great ambitions, levers of my life. I managed to make enough to be mixed up with a land deal by the time I was 20, and I went down to New York and sat at a table in Wall street.

"Opposite me were some of the sons of privilege, rich men's sons with money, anxious and eager to make more money. Opposite me also sat a lean, gray man, their lawyer, a man with whom I had to deal.

"Courtesy gave me something with the sons of rich men, with the millionaires. It gave me little with the watchful gray man across the board, the man who was guarding the interests of the rich men who paid him. But whatever he said they agreed to, and when he cried 'hold' they stopped and held back the gold they had been ready to pour into my lap. All day I sat and listened and thought.

"'Why, this man is their master, the master of all these rich men,' I said to myself. 'The riches do not count; it is intellect, knowledge.'

DECIDES TO STUDY LAW.

"I saw that because life had bred in me by hardship the desire to be rich I had been able to meet and combat experiences about which these rich men knew nothing. That made me their master, to a certain extent, but this lean, gray lawyer was the master of us all, and it was because he possessed knowledge, the expert knowledge of the man who has been trained. I went back to my home town and I said to an old friend there, 'I am going to be a lawyer!'

"'Nonsense, boy,' said he. 'You will make money enough to buy all the lawyers you want!'

"But the second lever of life had been given a turn; I could not give up my ambition. I went on quietly with the work I was doing, but I sent for the books to the law schools of the different universities, and finally I chose my school."

Mr. Robins' eyes came back to mine with a humorous flash; he laughed a little.

"It was a very insignificant university compared to some others," he said, "Columbia, Washington, D. C. But it had on its staff Prof. John Harlan, the authority on constitutional law, and I determined to learn from the man to whom matters of constitutional law were submitted by his fellows. I had an awe for real knowledge as opposed to theory.

"I 'stole' my degree at Columbia. I had been reading law for some time before I entered, and I gained my degree in one year instead of three.

"Then I determined to go to San Francisco. Do you know the place? I can see it as clearly now as if I were there. I had come into the city in a sombrero hat, for I had been doing some prospecting, and I looked like a down-and-outer. But I went to the old Palace Hotel on Market street. Now there is a great new hotel on that site, I believe, and I paid $8 a day and watched life go by.

"It was all new to me and vital. I stood on the steps of the hotel the day after I arrived and watched the men and women come up Market street.

"The clouds had cleared away after threatening a storm, and the wind swept in from the sea that wonderful life-giving air. I saw the lovely color in the faces of the tall young girls, the splendid, broad-shouldered men, and I suddenly felt puny and undersized.

"I was yellow from fever and an attack of ague, not to mention all the sweet potatoes and buttermilk and other indigestible things I had eaten as a poor country boy, and I was not any too big. I looked at the Californians and I vowed a vow. If I could get into the game there I would do it. I would make money and wield power there in San Francisco."

There was a short pause. I do not think Mr. Robins knew it. His mind was on the past, with the eager boy of 20 who longed to do as he had made up his mind to do—to conquer the future and bend it to his uses. And as I could not, he saw mentally the sudden check. There came a time when he had to choose to be the servant of either one or the other of the political parties. Both meant money and a certain degree of power, but not power as he conceived it. He debated the matter long.

And then came the news of the Klondike.

FREE LIFE FASCINATION.

Into San Francisco came the ship bearing gold and news of the wonderful find. The fever seized on this boy debating his course of action. He had already done some prospecting, he knew the hardships, and knew, too, the fascination of this free life. He threw in his lot with those others who rushed to Dawson, and thought that by the end of three months his decision would be made. In three months he intended to be home again.

We know a great deal about that first mad rush to Klondike, but we shall never know all, for one of the merciful dispensations of life is that the terrors and pain of achievement grow dim as time sweeps by; but if you want to read the story with the slight halo of romance that is necessary for a novel, though the romance is not greater than actuality, only different, get the book written by his sister, Elizabeth Robins, called "The Magnetic North," and take especial notice of the colonel and the boy.

The "boy" is supposed to be Mr. Robins as he was in those fierce days of winter and of semi-starvation up there in Alaska.

Through all those weary months this boy who had never kept a diary made notes for his sister.

"This," he would say to himself gleefully, "will be bully stuff for Elizabeth in one of her stories." And whenever he was by the fire or anywhere where it was warm enough to take off his mittens so that he could handle a pencil he would continue the diary. But the sister did not think much of the pages when they came. They were greasy and so dirty that to handle them was unpleasant.

The romance of the magnetic North had not seized upon the mind of the general public in those days, and the sister threw the painfully constructed document aside, only to take it up a few years later.

And now we come to the great romance, the biggest fact in the life of young Raymond Robins, as I saw it at least, in the words in which he told me. And here is where feeling cannot be put into words.

MEETS JESUIT PRIESTS.

In that winter in Alaska the little company came upon some Jesuit priests doing work among the Eskimos that struck Raymond Robins as being little short of marvelous. They were making a practical thing of the teaching of the Man of Galilee, and they were doing it in so quiet and unassuming a way that the boy was ready to receive. Most of the fathers were French, but there was one man among them who was an American.

He had belonged to a prominent family in Baltimore, and had married a girl with whom he was greatly in love. A year after their marriage she died, and the husband, broken and agonized, had gone away into Asia Minor, had been caught by sickness and cared for by some Jesuit fathers.

They had taught him that there was a hope of finding the loved ones again if he lived as he best knew how, and once convinced of the truth of what they told him, this brilliant lawyer, this graduate of John Hopkins University, master of half a dozen languages, the most brilliant and witty of conversationalists, took the vows of poverty, threw in his lot with the Jesuit fathers, and after years of training was sent to this outpost of civilization, to a land where the going is harder than the hardest, where there was seemingly nothing to repay him for all the things he sacrificed.

COURSE OF LIVING CHANGED.

I wondered, as I heard the story, whether the sole reason for the sending of that particular man to Alaska might not have been the coming of this boy whose whole course of living and thinking was changed by the association with just this one man.

For the boy asked a question:

"Why are you here, father?" said he, with the temerity of youth. "Why are you here? A lesser man could take your place?"

Mr. Robins told me the answer. But the mere words seem to matter so little. It was something about "the kingdoms of this world" and it meant—what did it mean? A change in the way of thinking of a strong man, a man who now put money, intellect even into the background, and put service first, service to the men around him.

SERVICE HIS LIFE MOTTO.

There was no going back to either of the propositions made to him by either of the interests of California, even had he been able. Just on the verge of the discovery of great fortune in yields of gold, Mr. Robins made service the motto of his life.

But I have given you no idea of the thing as I heard it. I came back from the dreams into which his words had hurled me to find that I was missing something, and that was Raymond Robins the man of affairs.

The telephone bell rang, and the receiver was at my host's ear. Have you ever noticed the different ways a man will answer a telephone call?

Mr. Robins has the most accurate diction, the most accurate and decisive manner of anyone I ever heard on the telephone. And yet he does not give the impression of haste, or of being irritated, either.

"No, in the afternoon is the best time," he said. "When there is not a great deal doing in the stores, and the farmers can get home for supper and their work. Yes, they have supper at 6."

A little thing, of course, but significant. It shows that this man has his eyes open. Of course, he knows when a farmer has supper, he lived on a farm. He has worked as so many different kinds of workmen that I hesitate to tell you how many, but there is very little in the order of mere physical labor, yes, and the suffering involved in some of it that he does not know from actual experience. That is in part what has given him those fine lines of suffering about his lips, those fine lines of humor about the eyes, the eyes with that long, long look.

Where does it go, I wonder; what does he see? Far on into the years, or back across the dirt of the roofs and the smoke of the chimneys fronting his charming and scholarly study to some imaginary Utopia in which all the world will be happy and wise and good, or to some happening of his life, some incident of which I did not hear, of which none of us will ever hear, for it is too sacred.

I like to think it is a blend of both future and past, of the life that is as well as the life to be, but I know at least that it is exceeding practical, for it affected me. I did not notice the dust and dirt of the way as I went back; I was thinking of the life-story I had heard.

No good to try to drag me to one of Mr. Robins' meetings, I said to myself. I have already heard the best speech he ever made, a document of life, told in one of the most beautiful voices I ever heard, and told with a skill, a simplicity, that is unconscious because nothing is being attempted. It is the simple and absorbing story of a strong man's life.

A SHORT WAR

The hope is expressed that the terrible war now raging in Europe will be short. But its consequences will not be short. If the actual fighting were to end tomorrow, it would yet take generations for the countries involved to recover from the effects. These consequences fall with crushing weight on the women—and they have not been consulted.

"Whenever I think of Europe at war," writes Allan L. Benson in Pearson's Magazine, "I do not think of it as a place of roaring cannon and flaming passions. I feel the anguish of the man who is about to die, yet the cry that I hear is not his cry, but the cry of his wife and children. I see the sad-eyed women working patiently in the harvest fields. I hear the children asking for their fathers. I see the misery, not only of this day, but of the fifty years that must follow this day—the children sent out into the world without sufficient education, the women robbed of bread that the bullets that killed the breadwinners may be paid for, the boys who will be men tomorrow condemned to life at hard labor with no adequate compensation."

An orgy of a few hours may wreck a man's health for years, and not only his health, but that of his wife and children. Women have lately awakened to this fact, and it has led them to look at a whole class of social questions more seriously and in a new light. In like manner, a few months of warfare leave traces which a country does not get over for decades; and the women and children have to bear them. This war is opening women's eyes to the fact as never before.

"What are all these black spots, Sam?" asked a mother, as she was giving her young son his bath. The little boy looked himself over, and answered, "Those that won't wash off are fights." The black marks that war leaves upon the body of a nation are slow indeed in passing away; and they cannot be washed off by women's tears. With every day that passes, American mothers, watching the war in Europe, are making up their minds deeply and silently that they will have a voice in future in deciding the issues that lead to peace or war.

CHINA OUSTS OPIUM.

China's latest successes in the suppression of opium will appeal more than anything else to the nations of the West. If China can root out her own pleasing vice, what can she not do, the people of Europe will ask. And while sentimental consideration of this kind may be minimized by the financial kings, they carry much weight with the great investing public.

Hupeh has been added to the last of provinces cleansed of opium. Nine of eighteen provinces of China proper, and the three provinces of Manchuria in addition, are officially free from poppy crops and consequently free from the necessity of admitting Indian opium. And in most of the remaining provinces suppressive measures have been carried out with the result that opium is beyond the reach of all but the very rich in almost every corner of the empire. What this means can only be appreciated by those who lived in China in the days of opium—who saw ruin and degradation brought to the homes of the people by black poison, and who could not take a day's journey overland without being delayed while their coolies took their opium siesta.

It is a great thing that China has achieved—the greater in that the campaign of suppression has gone on steadily through the years of internal strife. Yuan Shih-kai's government, busy as it has been with the regeneration of the administration and the lopping off of the heads of rebels, has yet had time to reorganize the campaign against the opium vice and to behead poppies by the billions.

Opium has vanished from more than half of China and now two of the great opium ports, Hankow and Ichang, are closed.

Only two great ports, Shanghai and Canton, now remain open to the poison, and the treaty provides that they must admit Indian opium until all Canton is cleansed. But the British government has given its assurance that no more opium is to be shipped from India, provided China continues the good work in her own domain.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

AS WE go to press the convention of the Disciples of Christ is still in session at Atlanta. Reports received make clear the fact that it has been large in numbers, brotherly in spirit, progressive in purpose, and happy in the generous hospitality accorded it by the brethren of the chief city of Georgia, and the religious neighbors.

We shall give an extended report of the gathering next week. Not the least interesting feature will be the account of an enthusiastic and largely attended meeting of the members of the Disciples' Publication Society, and friends of the Christian Century. We believe the story of that meeting and its results will bring satisfaction to every member of the Century family.

THE BISHOP'S EVASION.

ON PEACE SUNDAY a monster mass meeting was held in the auditorium in this city. One of the speakers was Charles P. Anderson of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Chicago. In the close of his address he read the Protestant ministers of the country a lecture on their divisions and said the war might have been averted if the clergy of the world and the churches they represented had been prepared to speak with united voices in behalf of peace.

Remembering the fact that the Bishop has repeatedly been invited to co-operate with the other Protestant forces of the city in efforts at social betterment and religious revival, and always without success, the Federal Council of Churches of Chicago, representing thirty different Christian bodies, and more than six hundred congregations, addressed an open letter to Bishop Anderson, hailing with satisfaction his statements in behalf of church unity and co-operation, reciting the fact that he had thus far declined to participate with his Protestant brethren in Christian work, and hoping from the tenor of his words that he was now ready to make good the urgent words he has often employed in public speech in behalf of the union of God's people.

His reply is a disappointingly evasive utterance. He declines to co-operate with the Federal Council on the ground that it is not the realization of complete unity, but only a step in that direction. Surely the Bishop ought to be willing to follow the evident road which leads to the region he insists he wishes to find. It is not a convincing attitude to hold, that of declining all effort to reach the much desired end.

The Bishop says: "If I were to criticise the federation, which I have no desire to do, it would be for being too narrow in its scope, too tentative in its program, too one-sided in its platform. Somewhat boastfully declaring itself to be a real living unity, its membership is confined to that part of christendom which, in spite of its magnificent achievements for Christ, has given to the world and still continues to give a sad exhibition of disintegration. The world situation demands a real vital visible unity. The federation is an evidence of this demand."

Few even have spoken more freely and earnestly of Christian unity than Bishop Anderson. It is a sad but notorious fact that few men in this city have done less to promote it. There are Episcopal clergy—men in this diocese—who have held themselves in no such sectarian and equivocal position, but have practiced Christian unity in all good and helpful ways. The Bishop ought to emulate these examples and cease to deny with his conduct what he approves with his voice.

FRIENDSHIP WITH GOD.

TO BE a Christian is to be on terms of intimacy with the Father. That is Christ's experience, and it is his interpretation of life. There are other factors which add value to living, but this is the chief and essential thing.

There are many good and wise and kindly people, whom one admires, and whose excellencies we would imitate who are in no true sense religious. Some of them have clear and convincing views of religion, and can define it in impressive terms. Yet they somehow miss its essential quality, that of friendship with God, of which prayer is the ever-active expression.

Others there are who conform most earnestly to forms of Christian procedure, either as ordinances or as methods of helpful activity. Yet they do not win through to the heart of the Christian life, which is friendship with God. They are not irreligious, or anti-religious. They are merely non-religious. They are interested, perhaps, about many things that belong to religion, but the marrow of the faith they have never attained. And without this inner life of prayer the rest does not really count for much.

It is all pleasing, and admirable as an outward approach to reality, and may seem quite convincing to other people, but the man who wants to be a Christian knows quite well whether or not he has found the inner path, or is content to remain in the open fields, where many roads cross and wind.

It is the subtle danger of failing in this quest which in a special manner menaces those who are active in religious work. They are so busy in works of good will, they are so excellent in their own characters, that they are lured into the peril of believing that these things are the substance of the Christian life.

He who felt that all belief, form, and even conduct were less significant than the living friendship with a personal Father and God, must ever be not only the object of faith, but its convincing example.

A POINTED LESSON.

PRIVATELY controlled foreign missions are impracticable. That is the ripe fruit of much experience in Christian missions. Hence missionary societies, or boards, controlled by the churches, reporting to the churches, supported by the churches and responsive to the churches' will.

The admission by Rev. Alfred E. Seddon in the editorial columns of the Christian Standard that the much acclaimed work in Paris, France, had gone to pieces, through the untrustworthiness of the local leaders contains an instructive lesson which most Disciples of Christ long ago learned. For a number of years Mr. Seddon has been writing weekly articles from Paris under the title, "The Hors-de-Rome Movement," and the Standard has solicited funds and gives of its own funds to support Mr. Seddon and his ex-priest converts.

Many amiable people, imagining that this work had some substance, have given generously to it. American travelers in Paris—like Mr. Geo. A. Jewett, of Des Moines, Ia.,—have returned to this country still wondering where the Paris mission was located. Mr. Jewett says:

> At the time of my going to Paris in 1908, and many times after that, and during my long stay in Paris, I searched the city very thoroughly to try to find something to show for this work, some trace, but without any success.

Mr. Seddon's admissions in the Christian Standard of Sept. 12 will bring disillusionment to many a kindly soul. There had been sixty baptisms, he reports, but they were nothing but baptisms. The ex-priest leaders have altogether backslidden.

The moral of which is plain.

It is no reflection upon Mr. Seddon's character and good intention. But missionary societies have better judgment and more resources for establishing and developing a mission work than any unattached individual man or church or newspaper can possibly have.

SHOULD AMERICA DECLARE WAR?

WILLIAM GARDNER HALE, professor of Latin at the University of Chicago, cabled to the New York Times from Havre and the cablegram was copied in the daily papers throughout the country as follows:

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

"The conventions of war signed by the United States at The Hague are regularly broken, under conditions impossible in civilization, by Germany. The United States should declare war. William Gardner Hale."

That is precisely what America should not do. Any American who proposes such a move at the present moment is an enemy of his country and of mankind. We shall have to meet many irritating conditions in the next few months, and we must prepare to meet them with such self-control as few nations have ever been capable of showing. Our immediate duty is to harvest our crops, and take care of our legitimate business. The war is in Europe, not here, and we have no moral right to let it come here. If hysterical men scream out that we ought to go to war, let other men quietly go about preserving the peace.

WHAT DID THE MUMMIES DIE OF?

THEY did not all die of old age, nor were they all lost in the Red Sea. The investigations of Doctor Ruffer, as published in the journal of the American Medical Association should prove clearly that we cannot blame modern civilization for all the ills that flesh is heir to.

"The perfect preservation of many of the bodies which have become available in Egypt is remarkable. The peculiarities of real mummies are widely known. Coptic bodies which have recently been examined by Ruffer belong to a somewhat different class. They came from Antinoe in Upper Egypt; and dated from the fifth to sixth century. They were therefore from about 1,400 to 1,500 years old. They had undergone no artificial process except that, at one time, they have been covered with salt. The real preservative had been the dry Egyptian sand in which they had originally been buried enclosed in wooden coffins. Never having been disturbed by the embalmer, the organs were all in position, and the bodies contained no resin, gum, or any materials such as mud, sand, rags, etc., generally used in old Egypt for packing the body after removal of the organs. In our environment, where special precautions are necessary to preserve the body from decay, it is surprising to hear that microscopic sections from these bodies made fifteen hundred years after death show the minute structures of the glands in a remarkably fine state of preservation, or to learn that the lobes of the brain and some of the convolutions were recognizable and that the fibers and valves of the heart could be made out. Ruffer points out the occurrence of tubercular disease of the spine among ancient Copts as one more proof that the disease has existed from the remotest times and is independent of climate. It has been found in bodies buried close to the Mediterranean shores, in bodies from Upper Egypt and Nubia, and even in a skeleton buried in the tropics at Merawi, one of the hottest and driest places in the world. Judging from two cases of enlarged spleen which were found in Coptic bodies, Ruffer ventures the suggestion that these people suffered from malaria.

"Pyorrhea appears to be as old as the human race. Evidence of such disease has been found in prehistoric skulls and in the specimens from almost all nationalities. Ruffer has found nothing to suggest that the Copts knew anything about dentistry. The long-recognized bad state of the teeth of the ancient Egyptians is again emphasized in the Coptic bodies. Almost every skull has some serious dental defect. It is suggested that this may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that very little care of the teeth appears to have been taken. The thick incrustations of tartar are sufficient evidence that the Copts did not clean their teeth at all. In many peoples and animals the absence of the tooth-brush is compensated for by the fact that the food is hard, fibrous, and raw, requiring a good deal of chewing, which mechanically cleans the teeth. In ancient Coptic times this does not appear to have been the case. Ruffer concludes that the Copts of Antinoe lived chiefly on cooked soft food, chewed without effort."

G. B. S. ON THE MOVIES.

BERNARD Shaw has now gotten round to deliver his oracular judgment on moving pictures. He finds them interesting, valuable and certain to mold the British conscience in future and this troubles him because of their "devastating morality." He says:

"These people are not wrong in regarding the question of the mortality inculcated by the cinema as enormously important. The cinema is going to form the mind of England. The national conscience, the national ideals and tests of conduct, will be those of the film. And the way in which the question is being tackled is very characteristic of our public life. Certain people who have never been inside a picture palace are alarmed at the hideous immorality of the film plays, and are calling out for a censorship and for the exclusion of children under sixteen. Certain others, who, like myself, frequent the cinemas, testify to their desolating romantic morality, and ridicule the moral scare. And between the ignorant meddlesomeness of the one party and the laissez-faire of the other nothing sensible is likely to be done.

"What neither of them sees is that the danger of the cinema is not the danger of immorality, but of morality. The cinema must be not merely ordinarily and locally moral, but extraordinarily and internationally moral. A film must go round the world unchallenged if the maximum of profit is to be made from it. Ordinary theaters in London and Paris can specialize in pornographic farce because the relatively small class which tolerates and likes this sort of entertainment is numerous enough in huge cities to support one theater. Such farces, if they go to the provinces, have to be bowdlerized either by omitting the objectionable passages or slurring them over. But a film cannot be bowdlerized; it must be as suitable for Clapham and Canterbury as for Leicester Square."

Courage

A POEM BY CELIA THAXTER.

Because I hold it sinful to despond
And will not let the bitterness of life
Blind me with burning tears, but look beyond
Its tumult and its strife;

Because I lift my head above the mist,
Where the sun shines and the broad breezes blow,
By every ray and every raindrop kissed,
That God's love doth bestow—

* *

Why should I hug life's ills with cold reserve,
To curse myself and all who love me? Nay!
A thousand times more good than I deserve
God gives me every day.

Think you I find no bitterness at all,
No burden to be borne, like Christian's pack?
Think you there are no ready tears to fall
Because I keep them back?

Chicago's Prayer for Peace

Chicago did not fall behind other parts of the country in faithful observance of October 4, as Peace Day, in accordance with the wish of President Wilson. The people crowded the city's 1,000 churches. In the Sunday-schools 250,000 children were impressed with the advantages of peace. Nearly 250,000 Jews joined in the prayers. The greatest demonstration was made in the Auditorium Theater, which was packed with reverent pleaders for peace. An overflow meeting was held in Grant Park, on the lake front.

At the Auditorium, Governor Dunn, Bishop Charles P. Anderson, Miss Jane Addams and John Temple Graves were the speakers. Prayers were offered by Rev. John Timothy Stone and Rabbi Julius Rappaport. Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink sang at the meeting. Bishop Samuel Fallows presided. Jenkin Lloyd Jones was chairman of the open-air meeting in the park.

Collections for the Red Cross fund were taken at both meetings. Miss Addams spread her coat upon the floor of the Auditorium stage to receive the money, which was collected in hats by Spanish-American war veterans.

GOVERNOR DUNNE'S ADDRESS.

"Statesmen of Europe," said Governor Dunne in his address at the Auditorium. "we demand that your warring nations, vaunted as the leaders of modern civilization, stop this bloody debauch, listen to the cry of 100,000,000 of human beings who are not besotted with the lust of human blood, and who have the right by reason of their disinterestedness and affiliation of ancestry with you to say plainly that this war is a disgrace to civilization, by the loss of life and destruction of property setting back the progress and prosperity of the world.

CAUSES OF THE WAR.

"We can say further that the causes underlying this terrible conflict, in our opinion, were not noble or righteous. Lust, power and race hatred or jealousy have been its genesis. None of you has been free from blame. You have all been preparing for war for nearly half a century. You have been dragooning your unfortunate subjects into immense armies and navies and flaunting your military power and preparedness before each other's faces year after year. You have been taxing your citizens and subjects to sustain these millions of non-producing men. Nay, they are not non-producing. They produce discontent, socialism and sometimes anarchy.

"Statesmen and rulers of Europe, sober up before the curses and maledictions of your own people drive you from place and power in infamy and disgrace.

"If this republic, with its 100,000,000 souls, in possession of more financial resources than any country on earth, can live in peace and prosperity and conclude treaties of arbitration with both the weakest and the mightiest nations, it involves no sacrifice either of dignity or pride for you to do the same.

"The day of war is passing. The day of peace is nearly here. This is the last great war. Its very immensity and awful consequences are the best arguments for arbitrament and peace."

BISHOP BLAMES MILITARISM.

Bishop Charles P. Anderson blamed militarism for the continuance of war. He urged universal peace.

"It is well that we prayed for peace," he said. "All other appeals have been vain. The appeal to the welfare of the world's commerce is unavailing. The war goes on. Billions of hard-earned dollars and thousands of stalwart men have been sacrificed in this twentieth century of civilization, but the war goes on. The clock of human progress has been turned back for centuries, but the war goes on. A dying pope pleads with his loyal children to no purpose. A new pope's voice cannot be heard above the din of battle. A federation of Protestant churches, speaking, as I believe, for 19,000,000 Protestant Christians, has not been able to make itself heard.

"It is well that the great nation of the western hemisphere should gather under its leader to offer up prayer to the court of last resort—to the Lord God Omnipotent—and we reverently believe our prayer will be answered.

"The real cause of this war is the fact that modern civilization is resting on a false philosophy of human life and a false doctrine of human government.

"This war has proved false the doctrine that the way to have peace is to be prepared for war. The way to have war is to be prepared for peace."

MISS ADDAMS SPEAKS.

Miss Addams said in part: "A meeting of this nature only expresses more vividly the revolt of men against something in which they have believed for a long time. The same sort of revolt took place thousands of years ago when human sacrifices were made for religious purposes.

"It is the courageous man who refuses to go to war, who values human life and who says war must cease. We must all join this revolt against war."

Bishop Fallows said he considered the day unique in American history.

"We are mobilizing as a nation not for war but for peace," he declared. "There must be a peace which shall end once and for all the appeal to brute or military force in the settlement of disputed international questions. Before a tribunal with representatives enlightened, compelling and governed by the principles of equity and justice, every disputed question must be brought."

THE PRAYER FOR PEACE.

Following is a part of the prayer offered by Rev. John Timothy Stone, of Fourth Presbyterian Church:

"Call the nations to order, if it be Thy holy will, that they may stand in awe before Thee, the just and eternal One, realizing that Thou art a God of peace and that Thou dost call men and nations to love one another.

"If it be Thy holy will, speedily bring the warring peoples to terms of understanding and conditions of peace.

"Take from all hearts bitterness and hate.

"Relieve, we pray Thee, so to conclude this terrible war that the nations of earth may realize forevermore an established peace, in which armies and armaments no longer shall exist, and a day in which peoples may settle all differences of view and regulate all national interests by means of just and trustful arbitration, as God giveth counsel; and that the day may come before Thee and call Thee blessed.

"We ask it in the name of Thy Son, the Prince of Peace. Amen."

Chicago Plans for Convention.

Contracts have been signed by the Coliseum Company and the "Chicago 1915" World's Christian Endeavor convention committee for the entire Coliseum Building and annex to be used for the fifth world's and twenty-seventh international Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Chicago, July 7 to 12, 1915. Plans also are made to obtain the use of all the churches within a radius of a mile for the overflow meetings and denominational rallies. Sixteen thousand delegates are expected.

Ex-Governor Addresses Ministers.

Ministers of all religious bodies met on October 5, at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium in this city to hear the address, "Why I Changed Front on the Liquor Question," by Malcolm R. Patterson, Ex-Governor of Tennessee, given under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation Council.

Homeless Men's Hotel in Chicago.

The Homeless Men's hotel, on South State St., Chicago, was opened formally recently under the auspices of the Chicago Christian Industrial League. Popular Hall, the rescue mission conducted in connection with the hotel, was also dedicated. A. S. C. Clarke, moderator of the Chicago presbytery, and Rev. Edgar P. Hill, superintendent of the Presbyterian Church Extension Board, delivered the principal addresses. Rev. George A. Kilbey, superintendent of the Chicago Christian Industrial League, reviewed the history of the league and explained the system by which the league operates its workshops, stores and hotels for the benefit of jobless and homeless men.

Y. M. C. A. in South America.

The first South American continental convention of the Young Men's Christian Association convened the past summer in Montevideo. The South American Federation of Young Men's Christian Associations was organized at that time, the object being to promote activities of an international character, to study unoccupied fields, help in organizing new associations and strengthening existing organizations. The continental committee with one exception is composed of South Americans.

Chinese Y. M. C. A. Fights Tuberculosis.

The Y. M. C. A. has conducted an anti-tuberculosis campaign in Nanking which stirred the government and other leaders to an earnest effort to stamp out the disease.

Of Human Interest

When Mark Twain Studied French.

When the famous humorist was a young reporter, working on the San Francisco Call, he made up his mind to learn the French language. He did not want to go to the expense of a teacher, and so he bought a grammar and conversation book, and set to work. Before breakfast he pored over the lessons; late in the evening he was at it again; and every available moment of the day he employed with equal assiduity.

He soon began to look about for opportunities to make use of his new accomplishment. Accordingly he began to eat at a French restaurant once a week.

One day, as he and his roommate were coming out of the restaurant, they found on the sidewalk just outside the door a Frenchman. He was asking first one passer-by and then another the way to a certain street, but no one understood him. That was Mark's chance. The Frenchman looked at him with wistful eyes, and began to talk. Mark listened attentively. Three or four times the stranger was compelled to repeat his question; then Mark seemed to catch his drift. But he had scarcely spoken half a dozen words in reply, when the Frenchman fell to the sidewalk in a dead faint.

The true cause of the stranger's fainting may never be known. Very likely he was famished, and perhaps he had been put out of this restaurant because of his seedy appearance. But whatever the cause, the joke was on Mark for once. Mark's roommate was careful enough of his friendship not to tell the incident at the office of the Morning Call, but he teased the rising humorist a good deal about it. When the fun had lasted long enough, Mark set his jaw, and with unlimited determination written on his features announced: "I'll learn French if it kills every Frenchman in the country!"—Youth's Companion.

How a Reformer was "Called."

Lady Henry Somerset once told how her attention was first called to the work of relieving the sufferings of poor city children.

"It was this way," she said. "I was moved in that direction by the rare patience and imagination of one little boy. His example convinced me that patience was one of the qualities I needed most; and, in seeking it, I grew into that work. I was in a hospital on visiting day, while the doctors were changing a plaster cast which held a crippled boy's limb. The operation was exceedingly painful, I was told. Yet, to my surprise, the little sufferer neither stirred nor winced, but made a curious buzzing sound with his mouth. After the doctors left, I said to him:

"'How could you possibly stand it?'

"'That's nothin',' he answered. 'Why, I just made believe a bee was stingin' me. Bees don't hurt very much, you know. And I kept buzzin', because I was afraid I'd forget about it's being a bee if I didn't.'"

Time to Fire.

Bishop David H. Greer of New York was attending a meeting of Sunday-school managers, when one of the members made a novel proposal. Turning quickly to a successful superintendent, Bishop Greer asked, "What do you think about that?" "I think it an excellent idea, Bishop, and I must say that we have been aiming to do that very thing for two years," replied the superintendent. "Is that so?" queried the bishop. "Then, don't you think it is about time you fired?"

The Archbishop Didn't Bite.

A curate, anxious to bring himself to the notice of Archbishop Temple, informed His Grace that he had recently seen a wonderful example of the ways of Providence. "My aunt," said the curate, "intended taking a railway journey, but missed the train, owing to her cab being held up. That very train met with an accident, and many passengers were killed and injured. Was not that a wonderful intervention of Providence?" The archbishop looked at the curate, and, after pausing a moment, simply said, "I didn't know your aunt."

Good Use for Hebrew.

The celebrated church historian Neander, in passing through the fish market one day, took up a carp, and, holding it to his nose, began to quiz the vender as to its freshness. The woman, who considered these questions impertinent, resented and began to overwhelm the would-be buyer with all sorts of pleasant epithets.

The professor listened patiently for a while, trying in vain to get in a word of explanation. Finally he straightened up to his full height, and, with flashing eyes, began to recite the Hebrew alphabet: "Thou Beth, thou Gimel, thou Daleth, thou He, thou—"

But the fisherwoman did not allow him to complete the list. Breaking out in tears, she shouted at the top of her voice: "I'll not stand this! Such an insult! I am going straightway to police headquarters and have you arrested for insulting a poor woman by calling her such vile, nasty names!"

The following day, at the close of his lecture, the professor related the incident to his students, advising them not to neglect the study of Hebrew, since one never knew how handy it might come some day.

Being a Celebrity.

A small girl interested in snakes and eager to know what John Burroughs thought of them wrote to the famous naturalist, and showed herself more considerate than many of his correspondents by concluding her letter as follows: "Enclosed you will find a stamp, for I know it must be fearfully expensive and inconvenient to be a celebrity."

A Rare Orchid.

The late Joseph Chamberlain was fond of orchids, and at one time cultivated them assiduously at his Birmingham estate, where he had gathered a large collection of rare varieties of the tropical flower. The following characteristic anecdote, from Les Annales, is said to have been told by an officer of the British embassy at Paris.

One morning, when the officer and Mr. Chamberlain were walking together on the Quai aux Fleurs, the great statesman suddenly caught a glimpse of a rare specimen of his favorite flower.

"What is the price?" he asked, making his way to the person carrying the blossom.

"Five hundred francs, monsieur: it is the only one of its kind in France."

Mr. Chamberlain paid the price, crumpled the flower in his hand, and scuffled it underfoot.

"I have it in my collection," he explained to his astonished companion, "and I don't wish a foreigner to possess one like it."

A Whistler Story.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti once showed Whistler a sketch. "It has good points, Rossetti," said Whistler. "Go on with it by all means." Later he inquired about it. "All right," answered Rossetti, cheerfully. "I've ordered a stunning frame for it." In due time the canvas appeared at Rossetti's house beautifully framed. "You've done nothing to it since I saw it, have you?" said Whistler. "No-o," replied Rossetti, "but I've written a sonnet on the subject, if you'd like to hear it." He recited some lines of peculiar tenderness. "Rossetti," said Whistler, "take out the picture and frame the sonnet."

She Took Him Literally.

An English minister, who guarded his morning study hour very carefully, told the new maid that under no circumstances were callers to be admitted—except, of course, he added—in case of life and death. Half an hour later the maid knocked at his door.

"A gentleman to see you, sir."

"Why, I thought I told you—"

"Yes, I told him," she replied, "but he says it is a question of life and death."

So he went downstairs and found an insurance agent.

A Harry Lauder Story.

Harry Lauder tells a story about Rab McBeth, a friend of his, who went up to Glasgow once to see a brother off to America. They said "good-by" on board and then Rab went ashore, and as the great ship slowly drifted away from the quay, Rab continued to shout parting words of advice and encouragement to his brother standing on deck.

"Good-bye, Wull!"

"Buck up, Wull!"

"See an' behave yersel'!"

Every time he shouted the ship was a little farther away, and Rab accordingly kept raising his voice more and more. The other people who were shouting good-bys were hopelessly drowned in the roar of Rab's voice.

When the ship was about half a mile away Rab let himself go with a final tremendous shout:

"Mind and write hame, Wull!"

A man standing near went up and touched Rab's arm.

"If Wull doesn't write when he gets to America," he suggested, "you should just shout across to remind him."

On the Wrong Man.

Bret Harte is so frequently complimented in England as the author of Little Breeches that he was almost sorry that Secretary John Hay ever wrote it. A gushing lady, who prided herself on her literary tastes, said to him once, "I am so delighted to meet you, Mr. Harte! I have read everything you ever wrote, but of all your dialect verse, there is none that compares to your Little Breeches." "I quite agree with you, madam," answered Mr. Harte, "but you have put the 'little breeches' on the wrong man."

Disciples Table Talk

New York Pastor Resigns.

James M. Philputt has given up the work at Central Church, New York. He and Mrs. Philputt had planned a trip to the Orient this fall with the intention of visiting our mission stations, but the war has made it necessary to change their plans. They will remain in New York until about Christmas when they will probably go to Riverside, California, for the winter months.

Two Books By Disciples.

Considerable interest was manifested at Atlanta convention in two new books just from the press of Fleming H. Revell, New York: one by Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., entitled "The Inner Circle"; the other by Prof. W. J. Lhamon, Dean of Bible School, Drury College, Springfield, Mo., with the title, "The Character Christ." Mr. Jones' book presents a series of profitable studies for the Christian life, and Prof. Lhamon's work consists of a series of addresses delivered early this year at the College of Missions, Indianapolis.

Chicago Church Celebrates Anniversary.

The Hyde Park Church, Chicago, Celebrated its twentieth anniversary October 7. It was the beginning of the fifteenth year of the pastorate of E. S. Ames. There have been 66 additions during the year, with a net gain of 34. The money raised amounted to $5,136.55, of which $1,221.50 was contributed to foreign missions. Among the members who spoke at the anniversary dinner were Messrs. W. D. MacClintock, Ellsworth Faris, W. L. Carr, Harry McCormack and the pastor. The church is prospering and is happy in the success attending its practice of Christian Union and in its benevolent enterprises.

Dr. Powell Undergoes Operation.

The early days of the Atlanta convention were clouded by the reports of the serious illness of Dr. E. L. Powell, of First Church, Louisville. On Saturday, October 10, Doctor Powell underwent an operation for stone in the kidney, and late telegrams coming to Atlanta from his bedside reported that he was doing as well as could be expected.

Re-dedication at Danville, Ill.

The re-dedication of the building of the Second Church of Christ, was held September 27, with appropriate services. Stephen E. Fisher, pastor of the University Place church, Urbana, and J. F. Bickel, pastor of Danville First Church had charge of the dedicatory exercises assisted by Rev. Charles J. Adams, pastor of Second Church. Remodeling, the total cost of which aggregates $500, has been done at the Second Church and workmen are now engaged in improving the parsonage.

The Power of Suggestion.

A few days ago E. T. Edmonds, pastor of First Church, Jackson, Miss., directed his congregation to buy a bale of cotton, store it in the church, and hold until the price goes back to normal. Since that time, it is reported, many churches throughout the South have taken up the movement. An Associated Press dispatch from Jackson told of what Mr. Edmonds had done, and pastors in other cities promptly followed the example. Wonderful is the power of suggestion!

Brazil, Ind., Pastor Resigns.

Homer F. Cooke, pastor of First Christian Church, Brazil, Ind., tendered his resignation to take effect Nov. 1. The resignation was made necessary by the ill health of the pastor's wife. Mr. Cooke has been in Brazil two years and has made a splendid pastor and a good citizen. He will probably locate in the South in the hope of bettering his wife's health.

B. A. Abbott as Critic of the Times.

To have a live and regnant soul, finding its satisfaction of life through religion, was held up as an antidote for the "great wave of animal emotionalism" sweeping over the world and expressing itself "in immodest sex dances." by B. A. Abbott, before a large congregation at Union Avenue Christian Church, September 27. Diagnosing the moral state of American life, Mr. Abbott contended that, "for one thing, it is pitched too high. We are overstrained, and everything is in the tenor tone." He said in part: "The world has never seen a civilization so brilliant, so rich, so free, so fraught with magnificent possibilities of character, achievement and happiness as ours and yet, perhaps, the most characteristic thing about people is their restlessness.

Rev. E. L. Powell, Who is Recovering From A Serious Operation.

This is seen in many ways. A great wave of animal emotionalism has swept over the entire world and expresses itself in immodest sex dances. People fly from place to place, from sport to sport, seeking satisfaction and finding none. We have looked on aghast and a subtle despair has settled upon many hearts. It must have impressed us all that suicide seems to be increasing rapidly, indicating disgust with life. It reminds us of the old days in Rome as the nation came to the hours of decay. What is the matter? Is life a disappointment? Have we been cheated in our creation? Is civilization a failure? Or have we mismanaged our opportunities? Doubtless the latter. For the world is full of happiness-producing qualities and things and the human heart is naturally an optimist. But we have mismanaged life. For one thing, it is pitched too high. We are overstrained. Everything is in the tenor tone. Another thing, life is too full. We cannot get around. And men give up to the extremes of work and play. In most people this is the round of existence. We work in order to be able to play and we play to keep us fit to work. Thus life becomes a monotonous and a vicious circle. This is too narrow and barren and the soul made for immensities and eternities revolts. Many men and women are in open revolt against themselves. The real satisfactions of life spring out of the cultivation of the soul. The only way to keep civilization from turning to wormwood and gall is to keep the soul alive and regnant. The satisfactions of life are spiritual. Some of them are knowledge, friendship, love, service and religion. Religion includes all. It inclines man's soul to his fellow man and links his life to God. It incites to service; that is, causes one to invest something in life; and these are investments upon which we reap large returns in coins of golden happiness. No one who really practices religion is ever dissatisfied with it or with life. Millions have gone down into the valley of death, holding to the hand of Jesus Christ, but not one of them has ever been dissatisfied."

Praise for W. R. Motley.

In resolutions recently passed by the Newcastle, Ind., Ministerial Association, W. R. Motley, retiring pastor of the church there, is praised as "possessing marked ability as a speaker and pulpit orator with the faculty of portraying profound thoughts in such simple language that all understand," "and possessing the highest conception of morality." He is spoken of by the association as "an excellent and courageous member."Mr. Motley leaves the Newcastle pastorate to take a pastorate at Richmond, Ind.

Missouri Pastor Appreciated.

That Higginsville, Mo., is letting H. W. Hunter go with regret is evidenced by words of appreciation expressed in a local paper. He is praised both as minister and citizen: "This is Mr. Hunter's fifth year in Higginsville, during which time he has accomplished much for the church and his work has attracted widespread attention. He is not only a good minister and church worker but has proven a good citizen for the town in every sense that term implies. He has taken active interest in municipal affairs and when he could lend assistance to anything pertaining to the community's welfare he never faltered in doing his duty as he saw it." Mr. Hunter will leave for his new field in Wellington, Kans., about November 1. Wellington is a town of about 7,000 population, the Christian church of the town having a membership of 450, with a Sunday-school fully as large.

E. H. Clifford Goes to Ft. Wayne.

E. H. Clifford, of Indianapolis, has taken the pastorate of East Creighton church, Ft. Wayne, Ind. Mr. Clifford has just closed a meeting at Raleigh church, Rush County. Mr. Clifford has not been too busy to read "The Meaning of Baptism," and has this to say of it, writing to the author: "I am reading your book on baptism, with much interest and considerable satisfaction. I do not know that I agree with you (I have not finished) but you certainly take the question out of its former somewhat mechanical and machine like atmosphere, for which you are surely to be thanked."

Church Shows Right Spirit.

Central Church, Cincinnati, raised a purse to send their pastor, Claire L. Waite, to the Atlanta Convention, but circumstances arose which prevented his attendance. It is to be hoped that this is but one of several hundred churches that believe in keeping their ministers bright and shining by sending them to the national conventions. The Christian Century would like to know of other churches belonging to this class.

Western Pennsylvania Disciples Meet.

"The largest Western Pennsylvania Convention on record" was held at Connellsville September 22, 23, 24. A fine program and an attendance of 200 were features. The Connellsville church presented Robert S. Latimer with a beautiful loving cup in appreciation of his twenty-six years of service as president of the Society. He was first elected in Connellsville. Clark Buckner, pastor at Connellsville, writes that Dr. Dye made a great address to a packed house on Wednesday night of the convention.

Downey Ave., Indianapolis, Grows.

On September 27 the imposing addition to Downey Avenue Church, Indianapolis, was dedicated. The service was in charge of the pastor, Rev. C. H. Winders, and congratulatory remarks were made by Rev. Morton C. Pearson, Rev. Allan B. Philputt and Rev. J. T. Bickel and W. H. Martin. Rev. H. L. Herod of Second Church was another speaker. The addition to the church was built at a cost of $20,000, and is for the use of the Sunday-school departments. The structure is faced with stone veneer and is three stories in height.

What Is the Matter with the Church?

That is the question asked by W. F. Richardson, at First Church, Kansas City, in a recent sermon. It is a question, he pointed out, that is being asked frequently these days, sometimes by those friendly to the Church and sometimes by those unfriendly and critical. The chief weakness of the Church, Mr. Richardson believes, is its failure to use usefully and adequately its tremendous resources. Its great membership, he held, was not fully alive to its opportunities and the possibilities of an organization having such a powerful spiritual backing.

Pastor on Leave of Absence.

The church of Winterset, Iowa, has asked L. F. Davis to reconsider the resignation recently offered and has given him a six months' leave of absence, which will be spent in Texas, for the benefit of his wife's health.

F. B. Thomas Begins Campaign.

Frank B. Thomas, pastor-evangelist and former pastor of First Church, Danville, Ill., before leaving Danville for Homer, Ill., where he opened a whirlwind campaign for election to congress on the progressive ticket in the 19th district, delivered an ultimatum. "I'm going after votes just the same way I go about getting converts," said Mr. Thomas. "No muck-racking for me. I shall not attack Congressman Borchers, neither shall I make disparaging remarks on ex-Congressman McKinley. While Borchers has his record and McKinley his organization, I will battle them with facts."

Heroic Work in Rock Island.

The pastor and members of the Fifteenth Avenue church of Rock Island, Ill., are of the right sort. In the little mission chapel, which serves as a house of worship, Sunday-school room, and community center, they are laying the foundation for a work that promises to develop into a real and effective church. It is a modest building, in fact it is not even a church building in any sense of the word. Erected by the labor of the men interested in the work, the walls, roof and floor are about all that there is to it, but it serves every purpose from a place where the saints may pray, to a place where the boys may play; for if you will look about when you enter there, you will see the gymnasium apparatus tucked in the corners on Sundays, while the congregation meets to worship. On this plan the congregation, only a few members, but all of them enthusiastic, have been working for some time without a pastor; then came C. Lee Stauffer. He was the right man in the right place and his work has been effective. During the first week of the recent revival twenty new members were gathered in and a number of these have come from the boys and girls, who have been trained in the little mission chapel.

NEW N. B. A. FIELD MAN.

An important addition to the field forces of the National Benevolent Association has been made in the coming to the ranks of F. W. Harlow, of Hebron, Ind. We take pleasure in presenting him to our readers and in commending him most heartily to our people to whom he will come.

Mr. Harlow was with the association a short time a few years ago. He rendered excellent service, and it was with regret that we saw him give it up for a time. He is an energetic, tireless, resourceful worker. He brings to this task an enthusiasm and a deep devotion that will win the confidence of all, and that will insure success. He is coming at no small sacrifice to himself and to his family, from whom he will be separated a great deal as he goes out from his home upon his mission of mercy on behalf of motherless and fatherless little ones, and of homeless, aged brethren and sisters. His heart and that of his good wife are greatly enlisted in the benevolent enterprise.

NATIONAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

FIRST FRUITS OF CHURCH EXTENSION OFFERING.

The board is happy to report that there is a gain in receipts from the churches of $34.02 during the first twelve days of the September offering. We started into September with a gain of $1,000. This is all very hopeful in view of the condition of the country, and we are earnestly praying that the churches will keep up their gains.

We are sorry to report a loss of $2,194 in individual receipts. The loss is in Annuity Receipts. A good friend in Illinois has recently sent us $1,000 on the Annuity Plan. We hope other individuals will remember church extension by their gifts during this month.

There are many churches waiting on the results of the annual offering. The Brotherhood should know that our board has already overdrawn the general fund more than $18,000 and that we are behind in individual receipts more than $19,000. A great church like our own should make up this deficiency and it can be done on the last Sunday of September.

The churches should promptly remit their offerings on Monday, September 28, so as to reach our office by Wednesday, the 30th which is the day the books close. Remit to G. W. Muckley, secretary, 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

FIFTH SERIES

County Conferences of Churches, Eastern Indiana.

In co-operation with brethren of the county churches the state evangelist of the Eastern District of the Indiana Christian churches has arranged a series of county conferences of churches in Rush, Fayette, Union and Franklin counties according to the schedule given below:

Rush County at Rushville, Monday and Tuesday, October 19-20.

Fayette County at Connersville, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 20-21.

Union County at Liberty, Wednesday and Thursday, October 21-22.

Franklin County at Laurel, Thursday and Friday, October 22-23.

The great interests of our state work will be represented in these conferences by C. W. Canble, corresponding secretary I. C. M. A.; Garry L. Cook, state superintendent of Sunday-schools; Mrs. O. H. Greist, state president C. W. B. M.; Prof. C. E. Underwood of Butler College; Prof. J. C. Todd of the Bloomington Bible chair and the state evangelist of the Eastern District. The local interests of the churches will be represented by brethren of the county. The great interests of our common cause will receive consideration in these conferences.

Each conference will begin on the evening of the first day and conclude on the evening of the second day. The conference will be held in the Christian church of the place named. The Ladies' Aid Society of the entertaining church will serve a noon and evening luncheon on the second day of each conference.

These county conferences of churches are a part of the approved plan of work of our State Association. Each church is asked to send to its respective county conference as many representatives as it can secure to attend. The co-operation of all the churches of the brotherhood in these counties is earnestly solicited.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

There are now two Living-link churches in Australia. We refer to the Grote street, Adelaide, and to the Enmore Tabernacle, Sydney. There will probably be others in the future. "As much for others as for self" is a good slogan for any church of Christ.

Our veteran preacher in China, Shi Gwei Biao, is one of the most tremendous preachers in the empire. He was baptized by Doctor Macklin twenty-six years ago. He is seventy years old, but does not hesitate to walk fifty or a hundred miles across the country. F. M. Rains.

THE ARREST AND TRIAL OF JESUS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 1.

Matt. 26:47-68. Memory Verses, 63, 64.

Golden Text.—As a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before its shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. Isa. 53-7.

American Standard Bible.

And they that had taken Jesus led him away to the house of Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were gathered together. (58) But Peter followed him afar off, unto the court of the high priest, and entered in, and sat with the officers, to see the end. (59) Now the chief priests and the whole council sought false witness against Jesus, that they might put him to death; (60) and they found it not, though many false witnesses came. But afterward came two, (61) and said, This man said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days. (62) And the high priest stood up, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee? (63) But Jesus held his peace. And the high priest said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou art the Christ, the Son of God. (64) Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, Henceforth ye shall see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven. (65) Then the high priest rent his garments, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy: what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard the blasphemy: (66) what think ye? They answered and said, He is worthy of death. (67) Then did they spit in his face and buffet him: and some smote him with the palms of their hands, (68) saying, Prophesy unto us, thou Christ: who is he that struck thee?

Verse by Verse.

From Tarbell's Teacher's Guide.

v. 57. They that had taken Jesus. See vv. 47 and 49.—Led him to the house of Caiaphas. He it was who sent them forth to arrest Jesus. See his earlier decree in regard to Jesus, Jn. 11:47153.—The scribes and the elders. Members of the Sanhedrin. —Were gathered together. Awaiting their return.

v. 58. Peter followed him afar off. "Midway between courage and cowardice" (Bengel). John, too, followed; see Jn. 18:15-18. All the disciples had fled, panic-stricken, but these recovered sufficiently to follow from afar.—Court. The quadrangle round which the house was built. See Lesson VII.

v. 59. The whole council. A quorum of the Sanhedrin, at least 23 members.—Sought false witnesses. The judges were the prosecutors. They had already decided to have Jesus put to death, but the trial and the witnesses were necessary in order to have the semblance of legality, and it mattered not to them how false the testimony of the witnesses provided it sounded plausible. —That they might put him to death. That they might present such a charge to the Roman governor, Pilate, as would induce him to execute their death sentence.

v. 60. Though many false witnesses came. But their witnesses agreed not together, Mk. 14:56-59.—Came two. Two witnesses were required by law, Dt. 19:15.

v. 62. The high priest stood up. "He rose up, not because he felt the evidence just heard to be very serious, rather in irritation because the most damaging statements amounted to nothing more serious." A man could not be sentenced to death for a boastful word (Grotius).—Answerest thou nothing? "It is an attempt of a baffled man to draw Jesus into explanations about the saying which will make it more damaging as evidence against him. What about this pretentious word of yours: is it true that you said it, and what does it mean?" (Expositor's Greek Testament).

v. 63. Jesus held his peace. See Isa. 53:7.—I adjure thee by the living God. I put thee on oath in the presence of God as a Witness and Judge. Such an adjuration required an answer. Lev. 5:1.

v. 64. Thou hast said. See verse 25. This is equivalent to "I am." Mk. 14:61. See also Lk. 22:68. Silence under the circumstances, would have amounted to denial, but had he not broken his silence, they could have found no charge on which to condemn him to death.—Nevertheless. Further.—Ye shall see . . . Power. See Ps. 110:1; Mt. 22:24. His words meant as has well been said: "The time is coming when you and I shall change places: I the Judge, you the prisoners at the bar."—Coming on the clouds of heaven. A reference to Dan. 7:13. —At the right hand of Power. Note the capital in Power, which personifies God himself.

v. 65. Rent his garments. See Num. 14:6. He has spoken blasphemy. Blasphemy consisted in falsely claiming more than human powers and attributes. Compare Jn. 5:18. He called God his own Father, making himself equal with God. Also the charge before Pilate; We have a law, and by that law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God, Jn. 19:7.

v. 66. What think ye? In these words he put the question to vote.—Worthy of death. Greek liable to, RVm. Death was the punishment for blasphemy, Lev. 24:16.

When Loyalty Failed

The Lesson in Today's Life.*

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

He made his prayer for strength and it was given him. We often fail to notice this outstanding fact. Facing the soldiers that come out to take him, his superiority makes them fall back before him; standing before the august high-priest his kingly silence and marvelous self-control put that dignitary in a corner; looking deeply into the eyes of the Roman governor he reveals weakness in Pilate by his own masterful power; only once does he stagger and that is when his own bodily energy ebbs out under the load of his cross. Hanging there he forgives his enemies, considers the welfare of his mother and encourages the penitent thief. Oh, kingly Christ, how Thou dost challenge the enthusiasm of strong men!

Rev. John R. Ewers.

Returning from his prayer he sees the procession, headed by Judas, wending their way among the trees. They come upon him. "Whom seek ye?" "Jesus of Nazareth." "I am he"—and they fall back. It is meanness quailing before righteousness; inferiority consciously abashed in the presence of superiority; brutality conquered by spirit. When will we understand the power of truth, of righteousness, of spiritual reality? The world was built for goodness to triumph in.

"PUT UP THY SWORD."

Within the present year the world is to learn the deep meaning of the Master's word, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." No matter who wins in Europe—the same will be loser. Nothing is gained by brute strength. Europe is wrecked—slain regiments, mangled thousands, violated women, orphaned children, soiled youth, shattered cathedrals, burned homes, devastated fields, kindled hates, the knowledge of dastardly deeds, the remembrance of blood, fire, lust and beastliness—Europe is hell. Take the sword, but know that taking it you perish with it.

FLEEING DISCIPLES.

Blundering, short-sighted Peter makes his pathetically loyal defense. He strikes wildly and instead of splitting the fellow's head only succeeds in slicing off an ear. I remember that this was the only event in the Passion Play that elicited a smile. It is pathetically ludicrous. And yet we admire his stout devotion. "I will die with you," he had said a few hours before. He came very near to it here. But for Christ's intervention he would not have survived long. It was the folly of sword play. He meant well but his judgment was bad. It was another example of zeal without knowledge. We strike a blow for God and we knock down the house. We reform saloons with hatchets. We teach sex hygiene blatantly and do more damage than good. We defend some old fogey notion of the Bible and give a fine imitation of Don Quixote. We curse the church for being too slow in some reform and ride off a precipice with foolishly inscribed banner waving. Brave little Peters we would fight the whole world—with the wrong weapons.

And the disciples ran away. Where is all this loyal unto death talk now? Sounding brass. Big sermons and little love. Great loyalty "to the plea" and small missionary offerings. Vast admiration for the church and no service. Loud talk about our "movement" and no defense for a brother minister in distress. Much appreciation for prohibition and the anti-saloon league but no votes—not even registered—not even paying taxes. Large hopes for a great ingathering but no personal work. Vociferous prayers for the "poor and needy," but not a penny for charity. Let us not be too hard on Peter; he has many modern brothers.

"THOU HAST SAID."

"By the living God tell us whether you are the very Christ or not," and he answered in the tragic stillness, "I am." Let there be no doubt here. There are questions that we can debate. There are issues which are not vital; but the divinity, yes, if you will, the deity, of Jesus Christ is not one of them. Here we must plant our feet upon the eternal rock of reality. There has been too much conjuring with the word "divinity." "Yes, I believe that Jesus is divine," I heard a rabbi say, "but I think that he is divine just as I am divine," he added. Divinity is a word to toy with. By it we may mean anything or nothing. If we mean that Jesus was anything less than the God-man we should use some other word. The hour has come when we must say without equivocation, without mental reservation, without any shadowy doubts, without any "Ifs" and "Ands," without any "If you will let me define it"—the hour has come when we must say, "Yes, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and my Savior." "Who are you?" "I am Christ."

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 21.

The Father's House. John 14:1-11.

Where is the house of God? Wherever God is. Where can we find God? We think of him as being everywhere, but more especially where his children are. We can be in his house here on earth. If this is his world and we have the right attitude toward it, it is for us the Father's house. We ought to rejoice more than we do in the beauty of the earth and in the sublimity of the heavens. The human companionships of the earth are sources of great joy. But the world seems to have in it elements antagonistic to our interests. It may be that we often misread the facts; we doubtless do. After making due allowance for hasty judgments. we still have sin, and pain, and death to confound thought and break the heart.

THE MANY MANSIONS.

Interest in the architecture of heaven is not wide spread. Here and there is a man who thinks it is important to know the general and detailed structure of the heavenly mansions. The great majority of the Lord's disciples believe that the Almighty is able, without their aid, to draw up the plans for a city of model homes. Any aid that men may give will be in the form of work that has value here and now. The belief that comforts and sustains is that there is ample provision for the multitudes of earth. The hope of the disciple is large. I listened to a man recently who seemed to be pleased with the thought that he was on the road to heaven while the vast majority of men were going in the other direction. Very few of his hearers agreed with him. They regarded him with good natured contempt.

SEEING GOD.

To be in the Father's house is to see the Father. God is never absent from his home. The disciples who heard the discourse of Jesus on the future were anxious to see God. To their inquiry, Jesus replied: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Have we seen unselfish love? Do we know what it is to labor patiently with the ignorant and perverse? Are we hurt when injustice is done to the humblest of God's creatures? Do our sympathies go out to the races that are advancing with halting steps toward the light? If we answer in the affirmative, we have seen something of God. We may believe that God is in the advance of science that puts into the hands of men weapons against famine and disease. But we know only in part. We crave a fuller vision. The full glory of God we have never seen.

THE WAY.

"I am the way," says Jesus. Men have sought salvation by means of wonderful "schemes" of redemption. They have involved God in serious contradictions from which they have sought to deliver him by various expedients. It has been repugnant to their sense of the divine majesty that God should, in fatherly love, welcome a returning prodigal. Instead of consulting the hearts of fathers and mothers to discover the secret of forgiveness, the wise theologians invented a world of abstractions and tried to put God into it. They failed. Men cannot destroy completely their better feelings. In spite of theological obstructions, they see Jesus and the love of God is understood by them. The way to the house of God is the way of companionship, with good men, with Jesus, and with God, and all these companionships are one and the same. If we despise human goodness, we despise the goodness of God. If we know and honor a good man, we have some knowledge of God and pay him some measure of respect.

1 Kings 8:30; 2 Chron. 2:6; Job 22:12; Ps. 11:5; 123:1; Is. 57:15; 66:1; Rev. 21: 22-27; Matt. 5:3; 6:20; 19:21; Heb. 12: 22-24; 13:14.

"No Alum"

must be the watchword when the housewife buys baking powder.

Alum is well known to be a powerful astringent, and should never be used in food.

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M. D., of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "I consider the use of alum baking powder highly injurious to health."

Food economy now, more than ever, demands the purchase and use of those food articles of known high quality and absolute purity and healthfulness.

BURIED TREASURE FROM CAIRO.

The well-known Egyptologist, Prof. Flinders Petrie, recently found a treasure in a black pyramid that stands on a rock in the desert about sixty miles south of Cairo, according to the Youth's Companion. Almost all the pyramids as old as this one—more than five thousand years—have long ago been robbed of their treasures. But the builder of this pyramid took such great care to conceal the entrance to the recess that contained the treasure—it could only be reached through a stone trap in the floor of one of the fourteen tombs of the Egyptian royal family buried there—that the robbers who, as was the habit of such gentry, hid within the tomb at different times during the centuries never suspected the existence of the priceless plunder, although they must have often brushed the spot with their garments. Professor Petrie's men were at work in the tomb of a princess, when one of them noticed some hard mud in a small recess. Breaking into the mass with his pick, he uncovered a full pound of tubular gold beads.

RUSSIA TO PROFIT BY WAR.

Prince Kropotkin, who has been exiled because of his social democratic views, believes Russia will be liberalized by the war. Prince Kropotkin, though an exile, has kept in close touch with his native land and understands his country better than any living man. In his exile he has been a source of encouragement and support to all the liberalizing movements in Russia. He believes the war will result in the releasing of great democratic forces in Russia and that militarism will be slackened in its grip. In fact, it is confidently affirmed that the Czar is not a hearty supporter of militarism.

RAILWAYS AND SAFETY DEVICES.

The House Interstate Commerce Committee has made a favorable report on the safety devices bill introduced by Representative Stevens of New Hampshire. The bill gives the Interstate Commerce Commission full authority to compel railroads to install block-signal systems, and all other safety devices deemed necessary by the commission for the protection of the public, the passengers, and the railroad employes.

An Extraordinary Opportunity

Good for 30 Days Only

The Christian Century has arranged with the leading magazines for a series of very special BARGAINS IN MAGAZINE SUBSCRIPTIONS, good for 30 days only. The volume of subscription business has grown enormously within the last few years. Most people like to subscribe in November and December. The congestion in attempting to handle almost a year's business in a month or two is a very serious problem. A remedy has suggested itself. Why not induce our readers to subscribe early, thus reducing complaints and avoiding the rush? It is worth something to accomplish this, and the following money-saving offers are the result. The thrifty will profit. The rest will keep us busy enough in December. Here are all the worth while magazines. Every club on this page will positively cost more this Fall. THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

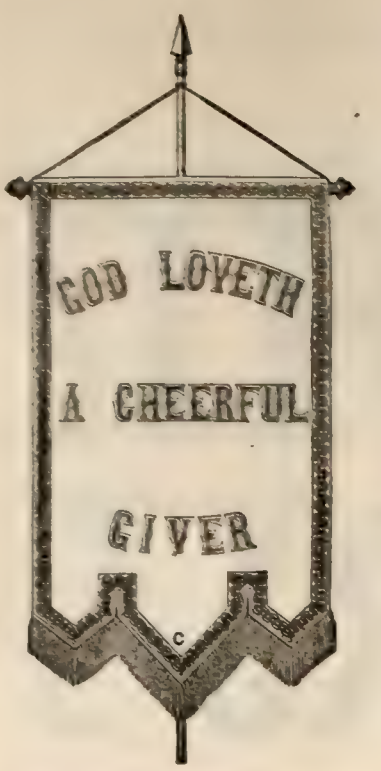
Vol. XXXI October 22, 1914 Number 43

Reports of the General Convention at Atlanta, with Excerpts of Addresses and Editorial Interpretations

CHICAGO



Cut of First and Second Banners.

Three Banners

are awaiting the three Sunday-schools that send in the largest number of correct, or nearly correct, lists of answers to the 100 questions to be submitted in the

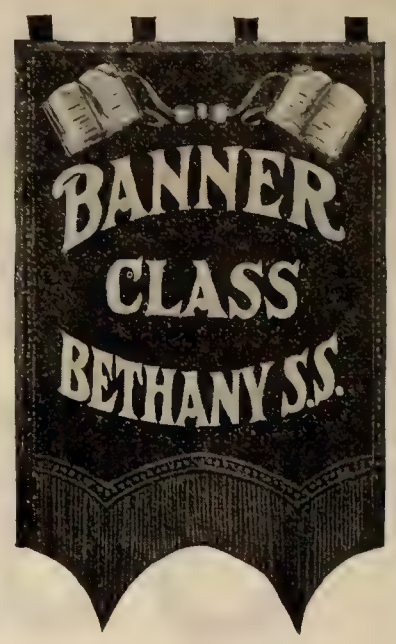
which is soon to be exploited in our adult and young people's weekly, "The Conquest." These prizes for schools will be in addition to the twenty-five prizes for individuals, which include a De Luxe edition of Harold Bell Wright's books; a fine American Revised Bible; a Christian Endeavor Watch Charm, and twenty-two smaller book prizes, including copies of Pollyanna, the most popular of recent stories.



Cut of Third Banner.

The Banners Described

BANNER NUMBER ONE: This Banner is made of satin, one side with merino back and with desired lettering on both sides. The size is 17 by 30 inches. This Banner can have the emblem of the open Bible in the center if so desired. Any color can be furnished.

BANNER NUMBER TWO: This Banner is made of satin, one side cambric back, lettering on one side only; size 17 by 30. Open Bible design may be included and any color can be furnished.

BANNER NUMBER THREE: This Banner is made of the best quality all wool felt, with letters of felt cut out and sewed on. These are hand-made letters of the best quality. This banner can have any wording desired which can go on the space and can be furnished in maroon, olive, green, purple and royal blue.

Your School Should Have One of These splendid Banners, and It Will, If You organize for the Contest Now! If your school as a whole does not participate, organize your class for the competition, and carry away the prizes.

PLAN OF THE CONTEST

ONE HUNDRED QUESTIONS ON THE BIBLE will be furnished "The Conquest" by leading Disciple ministers and teachers. Among these question-makers will be: Rev. Peter Ainslie, Prof. H. L. Willett, Rev. Finis Idleman, Rev. John R. Ewers, Rev. W. F. Rothenburger, Rev. H. D. Maclachlan, Prof. W. S. Athearn, Rev. Edgar D. Jones, Rev. John E. Pounds, Rev. P. J. Rice, Rev. H. H. Peters, Rev. H. T. Cree and others. These One Hundred Questions will be published in "The Conquest" from week to week, in instalments. Every issue will contain contest material. The contest will begin this quarter. Five Disciple leaders of authority in Bible scholarship will serve as judges in the contest. At the close of the competition they will award the TWENTY-FIVE PRIZES to individual contestants sending in the most nearly correct lists of answers to the One Hundred Questions. Then, in addition, the Three Banners above described will be awarded the three schools making the best records in the race.

Do These Three Things Now!

1. See that all your adult and young people's classes get a sufficient number of "The Conquest."
2. See that a contest manager is selected for the school.
3. Keep the talk about the contest going. Full list of the twenty-two smaller prizes for individuals will be published soon.

These Banners Will Be Contributed by the Practical Sunday-school Supplies Company of Chicago. That fact in itself gives assurance that the Banners will be such as will satisfy the most critical schools.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

A Call for Co-operation

THE undersigned committee was appointed at the large and enthusiastic mass meeting of the Disciples Publication Society and friends of The Christian Century held in the First Christian Church of Atlanta, Ga., on Saturday, October 10.

It has been the duty and privilege of the committee to take into consideration the claims of The Christian Century upon the brotherhood, the services it has rendered and is able to render, and to formulate a program by which the paper may enter upon an enlarged usefulness in giving voice to the great forward movement of the Church of Jesus Christ.

We have been deeply impressed with the spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice which has characterized the men who have been guiding the policies of the paper. We pay willing tribute to their courage, patience, unselfishness and generosity. We recognize the indispensable worth of the ideals for which The Christian Century stands—its devotion to the principle of equality and fraternity as among all bodies of Evangelical Christians; its insistence upon freedom of teaching and testimony as against a timid and faithless obscurantism; its advocacy of higher educational ideals, especially in the training of the ministry; its spirit of fairness and courtesy in the midst of necessary and inevitable controversy. For these and other characteristics, we believe The Christian Century is entitled to the hearty support of all Disciples.

When the material limitations of the paper are considered, this committee is amazed at the progress which has been made in the last few years in the realization of its ideals for the Disciples of Christ. The time has now come for its wide constituency of readers and sympathizers to have closer fellowship in the bearing of its burdens and the promotion of its influence. It is high time for the friends of The Christian Century to provide for it an adequate foundation and equipment, so that it may at once embrace the present opportunity for significant and constructive religious journalism among the Disciples of Christ. At a time when powerful forces are at work to fetter the thought and expression of scholarship in our colleges, when some Disciples are manifesting a tendency to return to the weak and beggarly elements of creed subscription and ecclesiastical authority, the Disciples need at least one fearless prophetic voice. The Christian Century has deserved well of our great free and intelligent brotherhood. We should loose it from its material limitations, and let it go, to utter fully and freely its message to the religious world.

This committee, in accordance with its instructions, plans to inaugurate an immediate campaign for an adequate fund to be used in developing the enterprise of the Disciples Publication Society. To that end we expect to employ an efficient man who shall devote his whole energy to the business management, so that Mr. Morrison may devote himself exclusively to editorial work. In carrying out this program we call upon all friends of The Christian Century for assistance. This may be given in several ways.

1. We call upon the hosts of ministers, college teachers and others of similar financial ability who read and appreciate the "Century," to subscribe to its support the sum of $50, to be paid in five annual installments of $10. We are advised that the Society will send The Christian Century for one year to ten new names accompanying each payment of ten dollars and we regard it as desirable that all contributors carefully make out such a list with a view to such new readers becoming permanent subscribers on their own account.

2. We urge upon our progressive-minded business men of means this unique opportunity to serve the cause of progress and Christian unity by making gifts to this fund. Vitally important as the co-operation of ministers and college teachers is, the enterprise cannot hope to be adequately financed by their gifts alone. Large gifts must be consecrated to this great cause.

3. We ask all friends to furnish this committee the names of persons who are able and who might be induced to subscribe these larger sums.

4. We request all Sunday-schools that are ambitious for the best results in their work to consider the merits of the Bethany Graded System of Sunday School Literature, published by the Disciples Publication Society, upon which it realizes a modest profit, which thus aids in publishing the "Century." By such patronage any Sunday School may secure a membership in the Society.

If the friends of The Christian Century will co-operate with us in the above plans, we confidently predict that a few months will see the whole enterprise placed upon an efficient working basis, and that a few years will suffice to develop a completely self-supporting institution. It will never be an enterprise for private profit, since its charter of incorporation makes it a missionary enterprise and provides that its profits shall be appropriated to the unselfish work of missions and religious education.

These are some of the children The Chicago Herald and The Conquest will help by sending them a "Christmas Ship" laden with new clothes of all sorts, household linen, books, toys, boxes of candy. This picture represents a group of school children in Ulm on the Danube, Germany. There are also millions of children in Belgium, France, Austria, Servia, etc., who will not have any Christmas this year unless it comes to them by way of Christian, peaceable America. Are you planning to help load the Christmas Ship?

Social Service

That's what it is—the sending of that great Christmas gift by much-blessed America to the children of the stricken peoples of the war zones of Europe. "Learning by doing" is a basic principle of modern pedagogy. If your school enlists in this campaign for the relief of these destitute ones—even the least of them, Christ's brethren—your children, youth and adults will actually learn more about Social Service than they would should they take a year's course in mere theory. Christian Century Readers are invited to participate in this enterprise of applied Christianity.

THE CHRISTMAS SHIP SAILS NOVEMBER 10

That means that your gifts must not only be in Brooklyn by that date but must have been sorted, packed, addressed and loaded on board the battleship.

There is no time for delay!

Ship your goods direct to the BUSH TERMINAL, Brooklyn, N. Y. Clothes are most needed. Do not send second hand garments.

Be sure to mark them plainly, "FOR THE CHRISTMAS SHIP."

Small parcels can be shipped by Parcel Post very cheaply.

CASH DONATIONS may be sent any time before Christmas to "Christmas Ship Department, The Conquest, 700 E. 40th St., Chicago." These contributions will be acknowledged and sent to the distributing centers in Europe.

Christian Loyalty and the War

THESE WAR TIMES TEST SEARCHINGLY THE QUALITY OF LOYALTY POSSESSED BY CHRIST'S CHURCHMEN.

It is a time of conservatism in business, caution in investments, curtailment in expenditures. There is no fear, no hysteria, no panic. But common sense suggests to go slow—at least until the actual orders from Europe and South America begin to come in.

But always it is the gift channel of expenditures that gets stopped up first. The pleasure channel, and the personal comfort channel, and the culture channel and the many other channels of ordinarily perfectly legitimate expenditure remain open and free-flowing long after the gift channel is closed.

This stopping up of the gift channel means the parching and withering away of many of the high idealistic and spiritual endeavors that, taken together, mean the coming of God's Kingdom among men.

These idealistic endeavors do not flourish by means of taxes or by commercial profits, but by free and voluntary gifts of loving and consecrated men and women. The finest flowers of our world grow on the bank of that stream whose waters take their rise in many springs which we call sacrifices. It isn't taxes nor profits that make the world go forward; it is gifts.

And to cut off the supply of gifts is to let the things most precious to the world wither and die.

Let us not, Christian reader, longer talk in figures of speech, but in figures of fact. Downright honest now, is it not a fact that you figured over your finances just the other day and saw the possibility of a slightly decreased income for the current year—and looked around to find something to curtail—and found, first thing, your pledge to missions and then your church pledge and then your pledge to charity—and you said, this I must reduce, and this, and this I must cut off altogether?

But you did not think of curtailing your automobile expense, or your social entertainment expense or your tobacco bill, or your travel or your winter vacation or your dress expense. And yet the Kingdom of God comes before all these things.

The mettle of our loyalty to Christ's Kingdom is being tried these days. One could not miss the aspect of grave concern on the faces of our missionary secretaries and leaders when they appeared at Atlanta. They talked with assurance and with the tone of faith. But one felt that it was a faith that they had to fight hard to keep up. They spoke gratefully of the gains of the year just closing and optimistically of the year just ahead, but between the lines of their speech one could easily detect a strain of doubt, certainly a note of grave concern.

Dr. McLean, Mrs. Atwater, Secretary Lewis, Dr. Cory and all the rest whose hearts bear the main weight of the far extending enterprises of unselfish service built up and sustained by Disciple gifts, were wondering whether the uncertain conditions of the year ahead would spell retrenchment for the Kingdom of God. Must we call home some of the missionaries? Must we scale down their scant salaries? Must we stop the building of this college, this orphanage, this chapel? Will the gifts from the brotherhood decrease?

The Woman's Society always sets an "aim" for itself. This year they raised over $419,000, and set their "aim" for only $425,000 for next year! Why not $450,000? Why not $500,000? Because the leaders feared that the womanhood of the Church will restrict its giving.

Some counsellors of Dr. Cory urge that the Men and Millions Movement be halted right now until times return to equilibrium again. Wisely and faithfully the leaders of this Movement are going straight forward.

Local churches feel the inhibitions put upon the gift impulse. Many pastors whose congregations usually send them to the annual convention stayed at home this year. This was probably wise economy for the Kingdom. But if the churches economize here and there in the "extras" of their work, let them consider well before curtailing the essentials of their work.

It ought to be borne home to the soul of every Disciple of Christ that this is the strategic hour for deliberate, systematic, deep-cutting self-sacrifice.

It is a time for our leaders to ask for more than ever!

France and Germany and Belgium and England have practically suspended their support of Christ's mission work in the heathen world. Upon the United States alone rests the burden of conserving what has already been won for our Lord in non-Christian lands.

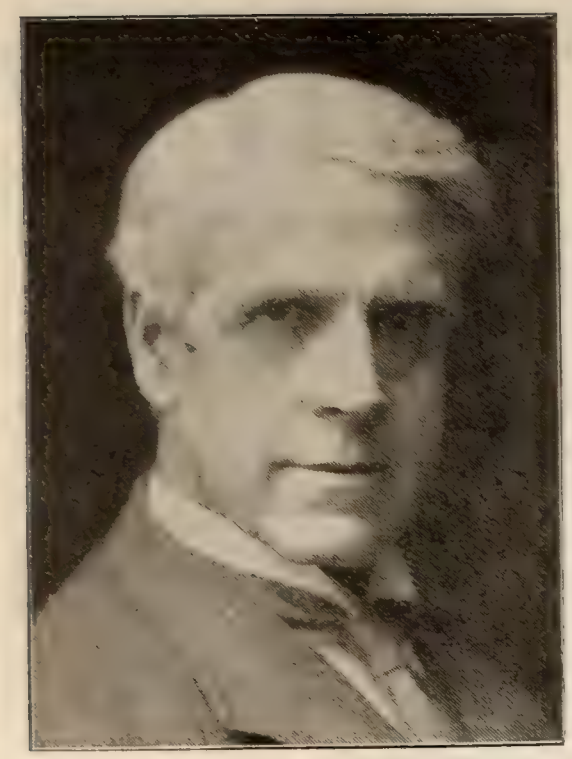
The American Church must not disappoint her Lord!

The United States is the one first-rank nation that stands to lose practically nothing but is in a position to gain immeasurably by the new economic adjustment the war will bring. Our present inconvenience is infinitesimal, it is contemptible, when placed beside our sister nations of Europe. Brain-staggering debts are being heaped upon every European nation. Rich men of Germany are coming forward voluntarily and giving—not loaning, but giving—one-half and three-fourths of their entire fortunes to the Fatherland. Canada the other day sent $140,000,000 to help England.

The purse of the United States is untouched by any of this sacrifice. But is our heart untouched by it? While other nations sacrifice for love of country shall not safe and prosperous America sacrifice for the Kingdom of God?

It is a time to open the unselfish channels and pour into them streams of sacrificial gifts until they overflow in blessing to every good cause that bears Christ's name.



Rev. A. McLean, LL.D., President Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President Woman's Missionary Society.

Rev. Grant K. Lewis, Secretary American Christian Missionary Society.

The Convening of the Convention

How the Hosts Gathered in Atlanta and How They Were Received.

BY CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON.

THE Atlanta Convention has begun and ended. The multitudes of Disciples of Christ from all over the land, and from other lands, that annually foregather in some large city to consider the tasks of the kingdom of God and to hold converse together on spiritual things have come and gone. Their words and deeds have passed into history. But each soul in attendance has gone home richer in the sense of fellowship with others and with God than before the convention met. Who can measure the value of these foregatherings in the life of the church and in the lives of churchmen! The pity is that out of so many there are relatively so few who either are able to go or being able have an adequate conception of the great blessing that awaits them there.

And yet an annual convention of the Disciples is the largest religious gathering held in the United States in the course of a year. We are a great convention people. Our convention programs are constructed so as to get us there. They are made out with great care. To be asked to have a part on a national program is an honor of the first magnitude and carries with it a deep and serious obligation to come up with ample preparation.

MANY ABSENTEES NOTED.

These conventions are sought for by the cities of first rank throughout the nation. And when a city is selected its machinery of hospitality is set going from that moment, with cumulative activity, until the last guest has left for his home. In this spirit, certainly, Atlanta conceived its function as hostess to the Disciples of Christ in 1914. No such persistent advertising, no more adequate local arrangements have ever been given a convention than were provided this year by the local church of Disciples and the beautiful city itself.

How many visitors and delegates were present has not yet been given out. It is doubtful if there were so many as 3,000. This means much the smallest convention for many years, smaller even than the Toronto gathering of last year, which was held far out on the rim of the territory in which our people are strong. Atlanta, too, is some distance from the center, but not so far as Toronto. The decreased attendance this year is due to perfectly obvious causes. It is not a time when people feel like spending their money in travel. Economic and industrial conditions, while not distressing, are regarded as uncertain, and business needs the close and conservative attention of those responsible for it. Many ministers, regular attendants at these annual gatherings, as well as their lay-parishioners, were conspicuously absent this year. There were Doctors Jenkins and Combs of Kansas City, Philputt, Winders, Paul and Lumley of Indianapolis, Waite of Cincinnati, Ewers of Pittsburg, Philputt of New York, Rothenburger and Goode of Cleveland, Batman and Ryan of Youngstown, Powell of Louisville, Breeden of Fresno, Harmon and Oeschger of Lincoln, Abbott of St. Louis, Wilfley of Washington, D. C., Scoville and Ames of Chicago, Collis of Lexington—these are but the vanguard of a troop of names that rush forward in one's mind as one tries to recall the figures prominent in other conventions but absent from this.

Rev. L. O. Bricker, of Atlanta's First Church, "The Convention Pastor."

A SHADOW OVER THE OPENING.

News of the serious illness of Doctor Breeden and Doctor Powell cast a gloom over the convention which was not dispelled until several days had elapsed. The report got itself circulated that Doctor Powell was near death's door, and it was even said that he was dead. The anxiety that found expression in repeated prayer for their recovery registered the deep place they hold not only in the affections of their brethren but in the program of progress in which their leadership is no less courageous that it is conspicuous. Since arriving home the editor of The Christian Century has received messages of reassurance from both Mrs. Breeden and Mrs. Powell and our readers will rejoice to know that the danger point seems to have been safely passed in both cases. Doctor Powell submitted to a surgical operation. Doctor Breeden is now convalescing from an attack of pneumonia.

FINDING THE FAMILIAR FACES.

But if many were absent one notable figure, missed in all our national conventions since 1910, reappeared, looking about four years younger than when last seen—the venerable W. T. Moore. There is always a certain strangeness about the first session of a national convention. The place is new. The majority of faces are new. The program has not yet got itself going with the swing it will take on next day. And one isn't right sure whether he should let himself feel at home or not. But when, on that first evening at Atlanta, the tall, white-bearded figure of Doctor Moore moved down the aisle it brought a sense of hominess to all long-time convention goers. Yonder, too, about a half-dozen rows from the front, one sees the familiar faces of Doctor and Mrs. Garrison—how fine it is that Mrs. Garrison has formed the convention habit!—without whose presence we would hardly know whether it was a convention of Disciples or some other kind of gathering. And there, right under the speaker's desk, one can spy the tall, white-haired form of J. B. Briney, "the sage of Pewee Valley," whom one of the newspapers of that morning called "the greatest debater in the Christian church," a rather dubious way of complimenting him, some would think.

We are seated about twenty-five rows from the front. There are perhaps twenty rows behind us. We cannot hear Doctor Bell, the president. We do not try so hard to make out what the mayor is saying in his address of welcome, knowing that whatever it is it is all right. The governor of the state speaks so he can be heard, and he speaks well and quits well. Dr. Robert E. Speer, Presbyterian missionary secretary, of New York, speaks clearly enough and with more effectiveness than most speakers, but by no means up to himself. And when he is done the crowd arises as if it had heard the fire-bell, and bolts for the exits.

TRYING TO HEAR THE PRESIDENT.

The president's address is still to be heard. So, moving forward, we pick out a seat about five rows from the front. in the wide range of seats left vacant by the retreating throng, and settle ourselves to hear Dr. Bell. Afterwards we were asked by persons sitting as near as ten rows back what the president had said. He was not heard by one-half the fraction of the original audience that had remained. The hall was far too large for the convention. There may have been 7,000 people at the communion service on Sunday afternoon, but the hall was not altogether filled then. Excepting that service the largest attendance during the week, Sunday evening when Professor Willett spoke, would not exceed 4,500 persons, and most of the time there were not more than 2,000 persons, if so many, present.

The fact is, there is considerable delusion among us as to the size of our convention audiences. At Toronto Massey Hall, with its 4,500 sittings, was never filled except at the communion service. This hall came nearer meeting the needs of the convention than any we have had since New Orleans in 1908. At Louisville, in the very heart of our people's population strength, the armory seating 8,000 persons was not filled even at the communion service. We would secure better order, deeper effect, and more intelligent participation by all if our conventions could be held in halls less capacious than are usually put at their disposal.

"THE VISITING ZONE."

The Exhibit Hall at Atlanta was most interesting. It opened off the main entrance, to the right, and contained booths of the publishing houses, missionary societies, colleges, etc., uniformly built around a circle and convenient of access. In the lobby in front of these booths was the "visiting zone." Here friends were constantly meeting friends, and hither the retreating delegates came who failed to get within comfortable hearing distance in the auditorium. The periods for public discussion on the floor of the convention were so irritatingly, so exasperatingly short that had it not been for the free mingling of delegates in this lobby it is likely that the good spirit in which the convention finally closed would have been impossible.

Atlanta was characteristically hospitable. Her hotels are adequate and reasonable. Her homes in many hundreds of cases were opened to receive delegates as guests. The Mayor and Governor extended cordial welcome on the first night, and every morning early there arose upon the convention the beaming countenance of Rev. L. O. Bricker, the Atlanta pastor, like a radiant sun to give light and cheer all day long.

LOCAL ARRANGEMENTS COMPLETE.

The local committees were active and very effective—how active may be illustrated by the fact that our train, delayed until two a. m., found a half-dozen members of the reception committee awaiting us at that unconscionable hour, who showed us how to get to the hotels even though street cars were not running, and charged us not to pay more than twenty-cents to the hack driver!

Next year we go to Los Angeles, and not in the fall as usual. but on the twenty-first of July. They say that California alone will turn out fully 3,000 strong to this event. And if they do the rest of the country ought to furnish at least another 3,000.

God's Will for the Investment of Life

Addressed to Christian Young People and their Christian Parents.

BY A. W. FORTUNE.

In his address at Atlanta on the Men and Millions Movement Dr. Abram E. Cory said that since coming to the convention he had been asked exactly 319 times how much money had already been secured, three times how many men had volunteered for the mission field, and not once concerning the every-member canvass. These three items represent the aims of the comprehensive movement of which Dr. Cory is the outstanding leader. But if popular attention is centered on the "Millions" no convention ever stressed "Men" more passionately than did the Atlanta gathering. On every hand voices were lifted up pleading for the consecration of young life to the work of God on the mission field. The address by Professor Fortune made a profound impression. His words seemed to be backed up by a personality so potent and sincere and spiritual that it projected them far and deep into the soul of every hearer. It is not a frequent custom of The Christian Century to reproduce formal platform deliverances, but this one seemed to possess a message and a quality that could be conveyed to the printed page without great loss.

WHAT shall be my life-calling? This question furnishes materials out of which ambitious boys and girls build their air-castles. It presents a problem which perplexes and at the same time inspires the youth of vision and determination. The young man or the young woman faces no more significant crisis than when the question is definitely answered as to how life shall be invested. A wrong decision means disappointment and a sense of failure. A wise decision means satisfaction and a feeling that life has been worth while.

PRINCIPLES WHICH DETERMINE LIFE-CALLING.

There are many in our day who believe the true standard of success is wealth, and that the most successful man is the one who has succeeded in turning his skill or his genius into the most money. There are many who, if they were to speak their convictions, would say to the young man seeking advice: Young man, wealth is the thing that counts; it is the thing that gives you influence; it is the thing that gives you social standing; it is the thing that gives you power; wealth is the key which unlocks the doors of the world's great store-houses; hence get all you can and get it in any way you can.

The young man who has been trained in that philosophy will be guided by it in choosing his life-work.

There are others who are controlled by the desire for fame. They think more of the praise of men than they do of the possession of gold. As it is stated in the title of a recent book, they want to live in "the eyes of the world." When young people have cultivated that desire they will seek to choose a life-calling that will keep them before the public gaze.

THE SELFISH LIFE.

There are still others who believe that to get the most out of life each one must look out for himself. They hold that life is a game and the successful man is the one who plays it to his own advantage. The young man who believes in that theory will choose a profession in which he will not be expected to make sacrifices. He will seek to get the most by giving the least. The great Teacher condemned that principle both by precept and by example. He taught that instead of one getting the most out of life by looking out for self, real satisfaction only comes when one begins to live for others. Jesus taught that instead of being here to grind something out of others for self, we are here to consecrate self for the uplift of others.

The true guide in the investment of our lives is the will of God. Jesus announced the principle that controlled him when he said, "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me." He laid down the principle which was to control his followers when he taught them to pray, "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth." If we are true children of the great Father we must seek to carry out his plan and his will. When young people are determined by the thought that their chief concern is to do the will of God they will seek to invest their lives where they will count for most in helping to make the world as he would like to have it.

THE MISSIONARY CALL.

Young men and women who are guided by the desire to make money will not volunteer for the foreign field, for they know the missionaries are poorly paid. Those who long for the praise of the world will not go out as Christ's ambassadors to pagan lands, for they know that to be his ambassadors they would have to lose themselves in the lands to which they go. Those who are guided by the desire to get the most out of life by putting the least into it will not hear the missionary call, for they know the life of the missionary is one of constant sacrifice. But those who are guided by the desire to do the will of God will give serious consideration to the foreign field, for they know it is the will of God that all the nations shall be Christianized.

GOD WILLS WORLD SALVATION.

When one reads the New Testament carefully he must be impressed with the fact that the one thing concerning which God is supremely anxious is the salvation of the world. He is "not wishing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." God is anxious that all people shall know him "from the least to the greatest of them." His plan includes all men. He so loved the world that he gave his son. Jesus believed he had been sent to win humanity, for he said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." The disciples were to go into all the world. They were not to stop until they had evangelized the last nation and reached the last man.

GOD'S WILL NOT YET CARRIED OUT.

A mere glance at the non-Christian world must convince one that God's will has not yet been carried out. The majority of the race does not recognize him as Father. Millions are looking to Buddha and Confucius and Mohammed for guidance in religious things rather than to Jesus. As long as there is idolatry and polygamy and infanticide and slavery and cruelty God's will has not been carried out. God can save the world only as his children co-operate with him. If he fails in the accomplishment of his plan it will be because we fail to have fellowship with him in the work. "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" The good news of salvation is for all men and we are to blame because there are many who have not yet heard it. We are God's messengers, and we bear the announcement of his love to an erring race and we tarry at the post of duty while they live and die without hearing it.

GOD WANTS OUR CO-OPERATION.

It is a good thing for a Christian to ask himself the question, What is the kind of work which God is anxious to have me do? God is interested in our daily tasks, and he is close to us when we are in the office or the shop or the store. But his chief concern is not these daily tasks in which most of us are absorbed. The man who builds a good house, or makes a good machine or a good suit of clothes is a public benefactor; but there are tasks which are more important than these. The man who redeems a life does more to bring in the kingdom of God than does the man who builds an air-ship. The man who helps one to overcome sin, who inspires one who has been living for the lower things to begin living for the higher is doing the work of God.

The man who helps to lift nations and peoples out of degradation and sin is doing the work which God is supremely anxious to have done.

When we meet in the other world we will not talk about how much money we made in our business, or how much people praised us, or what an easy time we had. We will tell of the things we did to help make the world what God wanted it to be.

BIGNESS OF THE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

The one who consecrates his life to the task of winning the non-Christian world has become a part of the biggest enterprise that is before us today. His task is not the mere announcement of salvation to individuals; it is the complete Christianizing of a social order. He is to help reconstruct the home life, the social life, the industrial life, the intellectual life and the political life of the people to whom he goes.

The missionary is to be a nation builder.

His task is so great that it calls for the brightest and most consecrated young people in the churches. No one who is anxious to make his life count for the uplift of humanity will be disappointed in the missionary enterprise. When Mackay went to Uganda to preach Christ to that degraded people many of his friends expressed their sympathy for him. After he had landed and had taken in the situation he wrote back to his friends: "I would not exchange places for the world. A powerful race here is to be won for Christ; men are to be brought to love God and one another; and, in order to do that, institutions that have lasted for ages must be uprooted; wisdom has to be planted. Who would not give his life for such a noble work as that?"

FRIENDSHIP OF GREAT SOULS.

Some of the greatest men and women of the past century were those who gave their lives for the uplift of the non-Christian world. Some of the greatest men and women of our day are those who are helping in "The Uplift of China" and "The Transformation of Hawaii." They are those who are helping to bring the "Daybreak in the Dark Continent" and the "Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom." These "Western Women in Eastern Lands;" these men and women who are in "The Nearer and Farther East;" these men and women who have responded to "The Call of the Waters" are they who are doing the most to turn the nations "From Darkness to Light."

We have the inspiration and guidance of all this glorious past, and God expects greater things from us. The gates leading into the darkest of these lands have been opened and highways have been made through the wilderness. Streams have been turned into the barren wastes and the seed-time has come. God is calling for laborers. What shall be our reply? That call is personal to each one of us, and when we understand its significance we will have a more definite part in the realization of God's will.

GOD'S WILL MEANS VOLUNTEERS.

The call of God will mean that some of us will go to these lands God is seeking to uplift. The condition of the world is a challenge to the men and women of the Church, and we must accept the challenge.

It is the heroic in Christianity which appeals to us.

We like to tell of Peter and the way he defied the Jewish officials when he said, "I cannot but speak the things which I have seen and heard."

We like to tell of Paul who, when he was stoned in one city, went on to another and began preaching the same gospel for which he had been persecuted.

We like to tell of Livingstone who said, "I am ready for any movement provided it is a forward movement," and then pushed on into the wilds of Africa until he fell.

We like to tell of Henry Martyn, who went out to India, and, on his arrival said, "Now let me burn out for God."

"We like to tell about the heroic in others who responded to the call of God, but if we seek to do God's will we will undertake tasks which will demand heroism in ourselves. In these days when the nations of Europe are sacrificing their best sons on the field of battle, the call comes to the church of America to consecrate her sons and daughters to the cause of world-conquest.

ONE'S COUNTRY AND GOD'S KINGDOM.

Loyalty to country has inspired millions in Europe to give up everything and lay their lives upon the altar. We need a loyalty for the kingdom of God which will inspire our best young men and women to make the same sacrifice. It is a great thing to die for one's country when the cause demands it. It is a far greater thing to live for the kingdom of God and for the righteousness and peace which it must ultimately bring. In a time of national need a man belongs to his country and when his country calls he must respond. In this age of religious need we all belong to God, and we should respond to the work to which he calls us.

Paul felt that he was an apostle by the will of God, and hence he was ready to go anywhere. He considered himself a bond-servant of Christ, and his ambition was to please his Master. We are not our own; we belong to God; and we should be ready to go where he calls us. The need of the foreign field is imperative, and he calls some of us to that work. As a teacher in one of our colleges which is training young men and women for the ministry, I pledge this convention and through it the great brotherhood that I will lose no opportunity to lay upon the hearts of the young people who enter my class room the claim of the foreign field.

GOD'S CALL MEANS CHILDREN CONSECRATED.

It is important that we consecrate our possessions to God, but it is even more important that we consecrate ourselves and our children to his great work. The number of volunteers for the foreign field will be determined to a large extent by the attitude of parents. If we impress our children with the feeling that wealth or fame or ease is the thing to be sought, the missionary call will make no impression upon them; but if we impress them with the feeling that God's will is the thing to be sought, and that his will means a life of service, we have prepared them to hear the call to go to the most destitute parts of the earth.

Our success in enlisting a thousand new workers for the field will depend to a large extent upon the attitude of parents. In an address at the opening of The World in Cincinnati, Secretary Hicks said he had recently attended a great missionary meeting where a great offering had been made for the work. When the offering was being counted a piece of paper was found on which a woman had written over her signature: "I give my boy to God." That is the offering which God wants some of us to make.

IT IS THE WILL OF GOD!

It was the cry: "It is the will of God! It is the will of God!" that aroused Europe to the crusades to deliver Jerusalem from the hands of the Turks. May it be the same cry that shall arouse the Church to a more significant crusade to deliver the pagan world from the superstition and ignorance and darkness in which it has so long been held. The advance guard of this mighty crusade has pushed into the very heart of the heathen world and has planted the banner of Christ on the walls of paganism. Many of these pioneer leaders fell at their post, but others rushed in to take their places.

The tombs of C. E. Garst in Japan, and G. L. Wharton in India, and Dr. Loftis in Batang, and Ray Eldred in Africa are a challenge to the Church to win for God the lands where these heroes fell. The struggle is on. The Captain of our salvation is leading and he has promised to be with us to the end. He has trusted us. Let us promise him that we will not betray that trust.

The Convention in Paragraphs

Features of the Program and the Golden Days of Fellowship.

The report presented by A. E. Cory regarding the possibilities of work in Russia was informing and convincing. He emphasized the fact that there is an undoubted opportunity for work among that great people in aid of the movement toward New Testament Christianity, that already has reached considerable proportions. But he also laid stress upon the work the English Baptists are doing there, and that which the American Baptists have wished to undertake and insisted, we believe with great wisdom, that whatever we attempt in that field should be done in co-operation with our Baptist brethren. They are the pioneers, and have already a fund of experience on which to draw. We hope that correspondence may be continued with them, following the interviews Mr. Cory has had with Baptist leaders on the subject.

The special session devoted to the work of the commission on Christian Unity was held in the First Christian Church and considered the reports of Secretary F. W. Burnham and President Peter Ainslie. The funds appropriated to the support of the commission were expended in contributing one thousand dollars to the treasury of the Federal Council of Churches, and in sending out literature relating to the movement in behalf of a united church. The conferences held by Dr. Ainslie with representatives of other religious bodies in England and America were described, and the work of the commission during the year was warmly approved.

The communion service held in the auditorium on Sunday afternoon was as nearly ideal as such a mass gathering can be. The lower ranges of the hall were completely filled. The order was perfect. The music was appropriate and uplifting. There were no addresses. The dispensation of the elements was accomplished with dignity and impressiveness. A brief announcement of the purpose of the offering replaced the usual exhortation. The offering itself was generous. We hope the communion service at Atlanta may remain as the model for future conventions.

The preparations for the convention were complete in every way. Mr. Bricker and his committee must have worked constantly since the Toronto convention. The hall arrangements, both for the meetings and the exhibition booths, were entirely satisfactory. The entertainment was generous and hearty. Several receptions were held, in honor of the delegates. An automobile ride about the city was provided. The churches of Atlanta welcomed Disciples into their pulpits and pews on the Sunday. Even the weather provided was the very best.

One of the most interesting features of our conventions is the presentation of the missionaries. These are the men and women of whom we have read, but whom we wish to see. Among those at Atlanta were W. C. MacDougall of Jubbulpore, India; Dr. Drummond of Harda, India, and H. C. Saum, of Bilaspur, India; S. G. Inman of the Mexican Mission.

The ghost of the old opposition to the delegate convention came up again at Atlanta. First it appeared in a surprising statement by President Hill M. Bell, that perhaps in view of dissatisfaction with the plan on the part of some, it would be better to substitute another form of delegate convention for the one proposed. This suggestion appeared to meet with favor from neither side of the controversy. Then in the regular sessions of the convention objections were made repeatedly by J. B. Briney, W. H. Book and W. K. Azbill. A resolution presented by Mr. Book, setting aside the entire plan was urged by these brethren, and by S. S. Lappin of the Christian Standard. But before a vote was reached it was withdrawn by its author. The delegate convention idea seems to be approved by a large majority of the churches, and from this time forward ought to operate without friction. Any new plan is likely to be misunderstood and opposed at first. But experience will justify this effort to bring our conventions from the mass meeting to a really efficient gathering for the transaction of business.

Dean Shailer Mathews of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago was the representative of the Federal Council of Churches, and gave a stirring address on Friday afternoon. Rev. H. F. Cope, secretary of the Religious Education Association, spoke on Saturday evening and held a conference on Monday morning. Mr. Fred B. Smith spoke at the session of the Brotherhood, and there were other official guests who had places on the program.

The members of the Disciples Divinity House and former students of the University of Chicago, held a luncheon and reunion on Saturday noon.

The colleges held their banquets and reunions on Friday evening. So far as reported they were well attended and enthusiastic. No more enjoyable feature is provided by the convention time than this, of the reviewing of college days, and the renewing of college friendships.

Judge F. A. Henry, of Cleveland, president of the Toronto Convention last year, appeared in the convention lobby for a few minutes one evening. Unable to attend the sessions of the convention, Judge Henry made the trip to Atlanta at Dr. Cory's urgent request, to sit in the councils of the Business Men's Commission of the Men and Millions Movement. The Commission worked at its problems all day Saturday and having completed the work for which it was appointed, adjourned sine die.

W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., preached in a Methodist pulpit on Sunday. Mr. Book, as everybody knows, is an evangelistic preacher, and before going into the pulpit asked the pastor if he might extend an "invitation" at the close of the sermon. "I am accustomed to do that, and I don't feel just right to preach and then quit without giving a chance for sinners to be saved," he said. The pastor assured him that it was perfectly proper to give the invitation. Mr. Book finished his fervent appeal and had the congregation arise and sing. A lady bearing a church letter came forward to take membership in this Methodist church. Imagine the emotions of the two preachers when the letter was found to come from the Disciples church in Macon, Ga.!

The New President

The election of Rev. Walter M. White, pastor of First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, as president of next year's General Convention, succeeding Dr. Hill M. Bell, is an honor appropriately bestowed. Mr. White commands the esteem and, indeed, the affection of his ministerial colleagues and of the large body of Disciples of Christ with whom his varied ministry has brought him into contact. He was born in 1868 in Tennessee. Graduated from Transylvania University and the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., in 1892. Since graduation his pastorates have been Shelbyville, Mayfield and Midway, Ky., West Side Church, San Francisco (seven years), Mexico, Missouri, First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., where he has been for over four years. Between his pastorates in San Francisco and Mexico, he spent two and one-half years as financial secretary of Transylvania University. Mr. White married Francis L. Atkins, of Milford, O., in 1893. Mrs. White is an active churchwoman. She led the "Conference of Pastors' Wives," at the Atlanta convention. The educational ideal has predominated in Mr. White's ministry at Cedar Rapids.

The beautiful new church edifice was designed especially to serve the instruction function which his leadership emphasizes.

The Dollars and Cents of the Year

Financial Exhibits of the National Societies of the Disciples of Christ.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The aim set for the year was $400,000. The receipts were $419,401, a gain of more than $38,000 over the previous year.

FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Total receipts $463,749.16, a gain over the previous year of $29,565.79. During the past six years the receipts have gained steadily each year, advancing from $274,324 in 1908. The number of workers has been doubled. Eighty-four new buildings have been provided, or about fourteen each year, or more than one each month. There has also been a considerable increase in the real estate held by the society.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Receipts for the year, $169,198.42, a decrease, compared with last year, amounting to $12,617.67. There is a gain in Church, Sunday-school, annuity and book sale receipts. The chief sources of the decrease are in receipts from the Moninger Memorial Fund, bequests and individuals. Solicitation of Moninger Memorial has ceased, which accounts for $8,000 of the decrease. The receipts from bequests explains $10,600 of the losses. The gain in receipts from churches amounts to $1,483.46, and from Sunday-schools, $1,630.64.

NATIONAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

Total revenue for the year, $134,624.24, the largest amount ever contributed to the association in a single year, and by a larger number of givers. An increase of $35,000 over last year. About 1,100 persons were aided during the year.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Total new receipts for the year $99,523.73.

Total receipts, including loans returned, $250,084.57.

Total now in Church Extension Fund, $1,115,475.09.

Number of churches aided in twenty-six years, 1,717.

Eighty-two new congregations were housed during the year with loans aggregating $201,150. These eighty-two congregations raised in cash for their buildings $402,300. The $201,150 loaned by the board therefore brought into existence this year $603,450 worth of church property in our mission fields.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

The expenses of the newly organized general convention are pro-rated among the various societies as follows:

National Benevolent Association	$270
Christian Woman's Board of Missions	660
American Christian Missionary Society	750
Ministerial Relief	210
Church Extension	270
Foreign Christian Missionary Society	900
Christian Union Commission	60
Board of Education	450
American Temperance Board	30
Total	$3,600

This provides for the following budget:

Stenographer	$750
Corresponding secretary	900
Printing	500
Postage	500
Traveling Expenses	350
Expenses up to time of fixing expense budget	600
Total	$3,600

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

Total receipts $39,686.45, a gain over last year of $5,728.29. The proposition of Mr. R. A. Long of Kansas City, made three years ago, to add 20 per cent to all offerings of others up to a total of $30,000 has stimulated a steady growth in the receipts, and this year the maximum was reached, thus securing $6,000 from Mr. Long. This amount is included in the total receipts.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Initial pledge by Mr. R. A. Long $1,000,000. Pledges secured in two Texas campaigns, $485,000. Other pledges bring the total up to $1,700,000. Dr. Cory and his associates are now working in Kentucky. The financial aim set by this movement is $6,000,000 to be paid in five years. All missionary, benevolent and educational agencies of the Disciples are its beneficiaries.

THE GENERAL CONVENTION.

Apart from the physical disadvantages of having a small convention in a very large hall, the only fly in the ointment of the entire week was the more than infelicitous talk of two aged brethren about the "misappropriation of funds." J. B. Briney, of Kentucky, and W. K. Azbill, of Ohio, the latter much more vehemently than the former, denounced the societies for paying their share of the expense of the General Convention (see an itemized statement of this expense under the heading "The Dollars and Cents of the Year") and used strong language that the newspapers took up. Later in a well intended attempt to set the matter right, Mr. Briney explained that he did not mean "embezzlement" when he said "misappropriation" and that he did not have in mind to reflect upon the moral purpose of the society officials, but only upon their discretion Mr. Azbill, however, had gone further in his original utterance, declaring that the only sufficient course for the officials to pursue was repentance and restitution. This wanton talk was not taken seriously by the convention, but it was picked up by the press, much to the distress of every sensitive delegate.

The opposition to the delegate convention was pale and helpless and inconsequential. In spite of all the advertising the Christian Standard had given the Atlanta gathering, and with its publishing interests conspicuously represented—in contrast to their deliberate absence from Toronto last year—it is safe to say that what might be called "the Standard faction" was even pitifully less at Atlanta than at Toronto. A vote on any issue vitally affecting the organization of the General Convention, which the Standard has been so vociferously opposing would have shown ten to one in favor of the steps of progress we have already taken.

The General Convention must have more time. It ought to have two hours a day or a half of each day for its work. The tiny half-hour each morning gave a chance only to "start something" and that something was usually mischief.

The status of President Bell's resolution looking toward a revision of the constitution next year, so as to do away with the delegate principle, is in doubt. Since our editorial pages went to press we have learned that a point of order has been raised to the effect that the resolution was presented by the secretary who had no purpose of voting for it next year, and that, therefore, the resolution will not be before next year's convention. When later information is received our readers will be advised.

Meanwhile would it not be a good thing to quit pulling up the roots of this plant and give it a chance to grow?

The Christian Century at Atlanta

Story of the Coming Together of a Large Company of Friends to Bear Testimony to the Value of this Newspaper.

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

A CERTAIN measure of anxiety possessed me in going to the Atlanta convention this year for it had been announced that The Christian Century intended to do the unprecedented thing in the religious journalism of the Disciples. The editor was going to take the public into his confidence in regard to the growth and the present business condition of the Disciples Publication Society. There was in my mind the thought of the harm that might come from the unfriendly criticism of those not in sympathy with the purposes of such an enterprise. More than this, I was aware that even some of its best friends might not approve the policy of laying bare before an open and public meeting the things that have always been regarded by every publishing interest among us as the property of a small circle of either interested or select men.

It has been a guiding principle of the Disciples Publication Society since its organization less than two years ago to thoroughly democratize our publishing work. The society had organized itself upon a plan which made its business quite as much a matter of public knowledge and public interest as that of a missionary society or a college. It seems to be provided in the charter of the Disciples' Publication Society that all co-operating churches and individuals are to be represented in its annual meetings and are to have the privilege of sharing its burdens and blessings and directing its policies.

FIRST ANNUAL MEETING.

On Saturday of the convention, a meeting was held in the First Christian Church. It was announced as the "first annual meeting of the Disciples Publication Society and friends of The Christian Century." Such an invitation was to reveal just what progress had been made in building up the ideal of a democratic and progressive publishing house in our midst which would interpret the truth of the Disciples to the modern age. No friend of the "Century" was optimistic enough to predict the audience that gathered. Though the convention itself was the smallest in many years, the audience comfortably filled the main auditorium of the large First Christian Church of Atlanta.

It was my duty to preside over the meeting. We sang one stanza of "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and were led in prayer by C. C. Morrison who brought the whole of his own and our common burden and hope up to the throne of God. In a short introductory statement, I set forth the problem of modern journalism which is to reconcile business principles with editorial ideals. The changing economic conditions have made the publishing of a church newspaper more difficult than formerly. There is an increase in price of paper, labor and office expense. There is a decrease of income from advertising and from other sources, for most religious journals. The subscription price for papers among the Disciples is lower than in any other communion. The result is an economic pressure upon our publishing business that means either a sacrifice of Christian ideals, or a sacrifice of private business interest for the kingdom's sake.

SACRIFICES OF EDITORS.

Disciples have been very anxious to save the souls of their editors. No class of men among us gets so much good advice, and so much earnest exhortation. Meanwhile, who of us has thought of the editor as a man with burdens? We have remembered the sacrifices of the missionary, and the worries of the pastor, but we have not sympathized with the man who gives us our religious weekly. It is not commonly known what sacrificial service our editors have made for our great cause. I can speak from personal knowledge of what The Christian Century has cost C. C. Morrison, H. L. Willett, and others who have been associated with them.

I was anxious to make clear the point of view of the meeting. It was a testimony meeting. It was not assumed that all friends present agreed with all the editorial utterances of The Christian Century. Many men who differ with its editor in many things would make personal sacrifices to foster the well-being of a journal of such spirit and purpose as the "Century" manifests. Truth has many angles. The speakers who were on our pragram were men who would not at all wish to be reported as endorsing everything in our publications, but then what paper could any man in our brotherhood endorse in toto every week? Such a paper would be a useless mouther of conventional phrases.

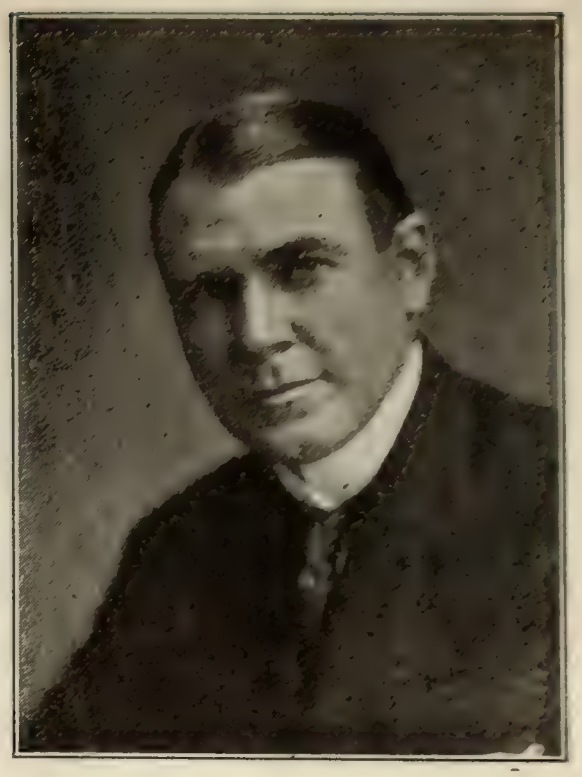
DR. MORGAN AND DR. AINSLIE.

The first speaker introduced was Carey E. Morgan of Nashville, Tenn. He testified to his deep personal pleasure in reading The Christian Century. His compliments upon our blushing editor were unrestrained and unqualified. He frankly set forth the need of a many-sided journalism among the Disciples. He proceeded to elucidate the ideal which has been dear to us all, that we might be progressive without being divisive. He urged that we should not give ground for any suspicious soul to say that we wished to lead a division in our brotherhood. This sentiment our editors and all our friends later affirmed with evident conviction.

Dr. Peter Ainslie of Baltimore was next presented. He is something of a journalist himself, and one of his former publications, the Christian Tribune, was taken over by The Christian Century in days gone by. He stated that he reads the "Century" every week with the deepest interest. It was a paper that he could loan to his religious neighbors without chagrin. Sometimes when he loaned a religious journal to a friend he was compelled to write a note upon the paper requesting the friend not to read certain articles. No such caution had been necessary in circulating The Christian Century. He urged that it should meet its financial problem by raising the subscription price and by abolishing the preacher's special rate.

Rev. Orvis F. Jordan, Pastor First Church, Evanston, Chicago.

Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D., Pastor Christian Temple, Baltimore.



Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, Pastor First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

He asserted that he believed the preach- did not wish this favor.

A SPIRITUAL, NOT A COMMERCIAL TASK.

. Morrison, the editor, followed Dr. He had led our thoughts in ayer at the opening of the meeting and deep religious note pervaded his ut- es. Our problem is more than a business problem, he affirmed. It is es- ially a religious work in which we engaged. Ours is a problem of re- ious interpretation and of applying the spirit of Christ's gospel to one of the holy s of the kingdom. He avowed his pur- se to conduct The Christian Cen- tury in such a way that no spirit of di- sion should be created, but that we s ould find our principle of liberty one of ue bonds of unity, as the fathers "The Christian Century is not and must not become a partisan journal. do not think of it or of myself as rep- senting any 'wing' or 'faction' or among us. We are striving to represent the essential, constructive ideals of the Disciples and bring them to con- reality. Let others call themselves 'conservatives' and 'radicals.' The Chris- ian Century desires to represent the Dis iples in a comprehensive and catholic spirit without discord and without par- tizanship." We were glad that Mr. Morri- n asserted his editorial independence. The privilege and duty of prophecy belongs to the editor as well as to the preacher. Mr. Morrison gracious- ly stated that no one should interpret the utterances of any of the friends in this meeting as an endorsement of his personal views. His ideal of jour- nalism is to conduct a paper where the points of view in the brother- hood may have an opportunity for ex- pression.

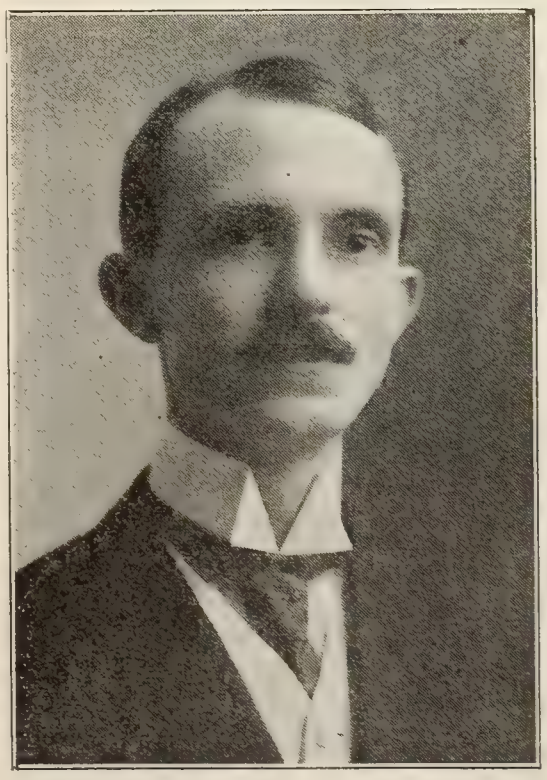
A RELIGIOUS CORPORATION.

Morrison outlined the form of or- ganization upon which The Christian Century and the Bethany System of Sun- day-school Literature now rests. He ex- plained that the Disciples Publication Society is a religious corporation not for private profit, constituted precisely as are our missionary societies. Its mem- berships are held by churches and Sun- day-schools that patronize it and by in- dividuals who aid it with their gifts. Whatever profits it may at any time make are to be applied, according to its charter, to the cause of "religious edu- cation, especially the higher education of the ministry," Mr. Morrison prom- ised that, at a later time in the sermon, he would present a financial statement prepared by the business office setting forth the present financial condition.

The applause which followed his ex- tended statement of principles indicated that the meeting was a unit in its ap- preciation of the brave, constructive work of this editor who was described by one of the previous speakers as the most brilliant and competent in our entire brotherhood.

DR. WILLETT'S SERVICES.

H. L. Willett was introduced amidst the applause which his gracious person- ality always evokes. I feel moved to vio- late some of our family confidences in Chicago and tell some things about the relation of Dr. Willett to the "Century." Longer than any of us, he has written for it. He has never been compensated for writing, though he does sell other lit- erary product in the open market al- ways at a good compensation. He has given the major portion of the literary product of his scholarly life to The Christian Century; he has given his time and counsel freely in director's meetings; and in addition he has given his own money generously to its support. It is at this cost that we have enjoyed his writings for the past fifteen years. His reasons for taking so profound an interest in The Christian Century held his audience in the closest attention.



Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark, Editor the Conquest and office Manager of the Christian Century.

AN OPEN FORUM.

He asserted that the cause of higher education needed a voice among us. Some voices were silent and some were hostile. but The Christian Century had stood con- sistently for a ministry possessed of the very best of modern training. In a time when the historical study of the Bible was not a common-place, The Christian Century alone of all our journals had opened its pages to enlighten the broth- erhood upon these urgent themes. In many another way, the paper had been an open forum and had not felt that its duty to truth had been done by keeping its readers in ignorance. Dr. Willett opened up his own soul with an inti- macy quite novel even to those who have heard him often. He interpreted the ex- periences in which he personally had been implicit during the past dozen years, with an insight and a disclosure of firm faith that heartened every one who heard his words. "Nobody gets angry when his real convictions are called in question," he said. "It is when our affected convictions are challenged that we get angry. We do not grow wrathy at the man who denies that the sun is the center of the solar system, or that the law of gravitation works. So the wrath and persecution that has arisen out of certain sources in our brotherhood against scholarship and the broader fel- lowship betrays its own weakness and even its own insincerity. That there would be a period of just such suspicion and partial ostracism all clear-minded men anticipated from the beginning. But the events of the new day into which we have now come confirm the wisdom of those who chose to hold ideals and prin- ciples above compromise and personal comfort."

RICHMOND PASTOR SPEAKS.

H. D. C. Maclachlan, of Richmond, Va., spoke somewhat more briefly, for I was compelled to exhort our enthusiastic speakers that they must keep nearer to the time limit which was set upon them. He insisted that a way should be found by which all might share in the enterprise of publishing religious literature. He reminded us that various denominations take offerings for a publication society and suggested that the churches and Sunday-schools which use and appreciate our literature should make an annual contribution. He reminded us that even two or three hundred organizations that would contribute an average of $10 a year would make a significant total that would go a long way in the direction of meeting the financial needs of the society. His address was loyal and was an admirable combination of practical sense and ideal considerations.

DR. IDLEMAN AND OTHERS.

Finis Idleman of DesMoines spoke next. I had listened to him in the long ago in Eureka College as he demolished his adversaries in debate, but for many years had not heard him speak. There was an unusual personal interest therefore in whatever he might say. Each of us has made a considerable journey in the past fifteen years, in our intellectual and religious experiences. His testimony was full of loyalty and appreciation. One by one the speakers had borne personal testimony to what The Christian Century meant to them. This address put a fine finish upon the more formal part of the program.

It was following this speech that the meeting was thrown open to talks from the floor. The time limit was two minutes. Among those who spoke were Mr. Charles Traxler, of Akron, L. J. Marshall, of Kansas City, R. E. Moss, of Crawfordsville, Ind., Bro. Workman, of Akron, Pres. Hill M. Bell, of Drake University, Dr. C. M. Sharpe, of Chicago, and others who have gotten away from my memory. C. M. Fillmore, of Indianapolis, was in the midst of a most enthusiastic tribute when I had to gavel him down. We were confronted with the near approach of the noon hour. Nearly two hours of speaking had been indulged in and the audience, save for a few who had duties on the program at the auditorium, stayed on. There were no pauses. If prayer-meetings could be made to go so spontaneously, our pastors would be glad. The spirit of the meeting was even more revealed in the quality of these two-minute speeches than in the longer ones.

PROFESSOR SHARPE'S EPITOME.

Dr. Sharpe seemed to embody the prevailing sentiment as he spoke on the need of an open forum among the Disciples. Our problems will never be solved without free speech, he said. The Christian Century is the only absolutely open paper for the expression of all points of view to be found in our brotherhood, he asserted with ringing emphasis. It was for this reason that men of every shade of opinion and doctrine who believed their ideas could bear the light of day would rejoice in the prosperity of the Disciples Publication Society.

THE BUSINESS REPORT.

It was at this point that Mr. Morrison arose and read the report of the business affairs of the society. I do not recall the figures contained in this report—they will no doubt be presented in printed form at the proper time, either through the columns of the "Century" or directly to all the churches, Sunday-schools and individuals concerned to have them—but the financial showing was one which was very heartening. It disclosed a hard struggle for the past six years against great difficulties, but it revealed such progress both in the circulation of the "Century" and the patronage of the Sunday-school literature as to confirm the faith of the business office and the editors that the whole enterprise can, in a few years, with proper support from its friends, be put upon a basis of complete business independence.

Mr. Morrison told of the critical experience through which the society had passed during the past summer. The selling of bonds upon which it could have realized immediate funds had been discontinued. The reason for discontinuing the bond plan was the frank adoption of the position that the society is not a business enterprise fundamentally but a missionary and educational work. Further issuance of bonds would have delayed its financial independence. It was discovered that its good friends would more willingly make gifts than investments, for their interest is in its religious work and they wish to have unselfish fellowship with all who are making sacrifices on behalf of the work.

Rev. E. L. Powell, Louisville, Ky., Who Would Have Spoken a Great Word of Loyalty and Appreciation at the Christian Century Meeting Had He Not Been Detained at Home by Serious Illness.

To relieve its embarrassment during the summer months, a neat sum was given the society by men in Chicago and vicinity, most of whom are pastors and teachers. This money was to care for the business, until a campaign might be launched in the fall which should make provision for permanent and adequate financial support.

AN UNPRECEDENTED ACTION.

This financial report is epoch-making among us. No publishing interest in our fellowship has ever made such a report. The Disciples Publication Society has proved its faith in democracy and in the good-will of the brotherhood by making public the office facts of its business.

Following this report, we requested the meeting to abstain from its tributes to The Christian Century and its editors and confine itself to the practical aspect of the situation. Some began insisting upon giving money though no definite program had been formulated for raising money. Several gifts were made in the open meeting toward a $2,000 fund that was to be paid within twenty days, this fund to be part of a total fund to be made the ultimate goal of the society. Many preachers wished to give $10 a year for five years. There was a shower of suggestions and plans in the few minutes before the closing of the meeting.

It was at this point that a suggestion developed to have a committee of five appointed to consider further the plan for securing an adequate fund. In accordance with a motion, I appointed as a committee: Charles Traxler, Akron, Ohio, chairman; L. J. Marshall, Kansas City; H. D. C. Maclachlan, Richmond, Va.; E. M. Bowman, of Chicago, Verle W. Blair, Eureka, Ill., and Howard T. Cree, Augusta, Ga. These men were to confer and call a later meeting at the Ansley hotel to hear their report.

Thus ended the big open meeting at the church. Many who attended said to me at the booth of The Christian Century afterwards that this meeting was the spiritual mountain peak of the entire convention. The spirit of the men who conduct The Christian Century was revealed to be that of prayer and brotherliness, as well as that of intellectual liberty and progress. The meeting had brought to the whole audience a vision of how Disciples should meet their problems, and had shown us all how brethren of varying views and interpretations might live together in the Christ-like spirit.

A TRUE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

The meeting at Atlanta developed some things which none of us expected, and it will not fail in reaching the ultimate practical ends that the dearest friends of the paper desired. We were anxious to give to the brotherhood a new interpretation of Christian journalism and a new point of view of our duty to those who are engaged in creating such a type of journalism. We were anxious to have all its friends conceive The Christian Century as a missionary enterprise. That the meeting did not fail in this, I believe every one who was there will admit. At future meetings, with this preliminary work done, we shall have more details, we shall have more "business," but we may never have another hour which shall mean so much to us as this hour when the nature of our task was so clearly revealed. We were gathered together as Christians, and the Holy Spirit was shed abroad in our hearts.

It is here that I would gladly end my story for I have no greater thing to tell. I realize, however, that those who read will wish to know the sequel of our Atlanta fellowship and what came of the later lunch meeting held at the Hotel Ansley on Monday following. With somewhat greater freedom and informality a group of forty-five men continued the discussion. The committee appointed on Saturday made its report. [The report is found on page 3 of this issue of The Christian Century.—THE EDITOR.] The committee recommended the raising of a sum sufficient to sustain the society for five years while it worked out the problem of its own self-support. It further advised the employment of a leader who would take the field and proceed in raising this money. Some men were mentioned for this work but it was too early to be able to announce definitely that any one had been secured. An hour of good fellowship and earnest planning ensued.

"LOOSE IT AND LET IT GO!"

Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., made an interpretation of the "Century" and spoke his testimony with an insight that even surpassed the speeches of Saturday, if that were possible. He declared that the hour had come when it was a sin that this instrument of progress should be hindered in its work by such material limitations as it has too long suffered. He pointed out the great opportunity for a few men of large means —or for one man alone—to do our cause the greatest single service that could be rendered it by financing The Christian Century. Our business men, he declared, must be made to see the opportunity until they shall come forward and loose the "Century" and let it go! Mr. Jones' words were taken up as a kind of slogan of the campaign about to be inaugurated.

J. D. Armistead, of Cynthiana, Ky., spoke in the same strain, bearing his testimony as to the service the "Century" had rendered in his own life. Many others spoke. One pastor had brought his Sunday-school superintendent and assistant superintendent with him so as to acquaint them with the spirit of the Disciples Publication Society.

VARYING BUT UNITED VOICES.

Before closing this account of what happened to The Christian Century at the Atlanta convention, I cannot forbear giving some impressions gained at the booth where we had a display of books and Sunday-school literature. In the first place, I was surprised at the volume of business which we were able to do in so small a convention. This business led us into many conversations. Some venerable grey-beards of the brotherhood counselled caution and moderation. But they never failed to say, after we had modestly listened to their counsels, that they were glad the brotherhood had the "Century." Then there were some young men who urged the paper to go much faster. They complained that it did not open up every issue of modern thought which is discussed in the great seminaries at Harvard, Yale, Union and Chicago. To them, The Christian Century had seemed too conservative upon many issues.

Among all these varying voices, Mr. Editor, there was one great note of unanimity. The brotherhood needs your paper and the Sunday-school literature published by your society (and we have said all too little of the latter contribution of the society to the brotherhood) and we must not allow any petty financial worry to cripple the influence of your work. The brethren who have given you this encouragement have given more than money. They are determined to bring this high venture of faith to success, and they will put the money into it that it ought to have.

Christian Endeavor at the Convention

Story of the Significant Sunday Evening Rally, Giving Evidence that Christian Endeavor is Still Going and Growing.

That the Christian Endeavor Movement is not dead or dying, was evidenced by the attendance and enthusiasm at the Christian Endeavor service, which was held in the Armory Auditorium on Sunday evening, October 11. Claude E. Hill, national superintendent of Endeavor for the Disciples, is promoting a genuine revival of Christian Endeavor. His report was one of the best that has been submitted for many years. Of especial interest was the announcement of results at the Christian Endeavor summer school, which held its first sessions at Bethany Park, Ind., last summer, and which will be an integral part of the work at the Park from year to year. A cottage has been bought there to afford a home for the school.

E. P. WISE SPEAKS.

W. E. M. Hackleman directed the music at the Christian Endeavor service, Austin Hunter, of Chicago, a natural leader of young people, presiding. E. P. Wise, pastor at East Liverpool, O., delivered the Christian Endeavor address. Mr. Wise pointed back to the great fundamentals of the movement, and insisted upon the necessity of regular Bible reading, loyalty to the Church, and above all of the worshipful spirit.

The climax of the meeting was reached when Dr. H. L. Willett, of Chicago, came forward to deliver his address on "The Changing Orient." Dr. Willett, by his wide travel and instinctive understanding of historical movements, has become recognized as an authority in the field of modern missions. Entertaining and enlightening were his remarks upon present day conditions in the Orient. With incontrovertible argument he pressed home upon the Church the duty of seizing the opportunities that now await the cause of the cross in the darkened but willing lands of the East.

Dr. Willett is a trustee of the national Christian Endeavor organization and found great pleasure in delivering his message to the four thousand or more assembled at the Sunday evening service.

EDITORIAL

SYMPATHY AND PRAYER.

FATHER BULL, in a suggestive article on "Spiritual Factors of Unity," in the September number of the Constructive Quarterly, speaks of "an edifice of sympathy and prayer," whose foundations are to be laid in a survey of spiritual fact and a quest for truth.

In this phrase are yoked two forces which are indispensable to the realization of the unity for which the Church of Christ is waiting.

Neither is sufficient without the other.

Sympathy, good will, the spirit of brotherhood, are terms which find inclusion in the vocabulary of the uniting church. But this sentiment is not enough.

Prayer is also necessary—earnest, importunate, absorbed and passionate prayer.

But neither is prayer alone effective, for doubtless many pray for the reunion of Christendom who picture it as a mere plan of inclusion in some already organized denomination. And in such a prayer the sense of true sympathy and brotherhood has but little part.

It is the linking of these two forces, sympathy and prayer, that will bring results.

When Christians feel toward each other the sentiment of fervent and affectionate good will, and set their faces to the open windows with the deep determination to have such speech with God as only importunate souls can hold, the new day of unity will dawn.

PRESIDENT BELL'S FALLACY.

SPEAKING from the pedestal of the presidential office at the Atlanta meeting of the General Convention of Churches of Christ, Dr. Hill M. Bell counselled a radical reorganization of the convention by which its character would be changed from a delegate body representative of the churches to a modified form of mass meeting representing only the individual Disciples that happened to be present.

Later on, President Bell embodied his plan in the form of a resolution for the revision of the constitution, giving notice that it would be brought up for action at the Los Angeles convention a year hence.

The proposal will no doubt receive such discussion during the coming year as its merits deserve and its esteemed author's name will command for it. Upon it The Christian Century has positive convictions which it will be free to state at the proper time.

For the present, however, we are concerned only to call attention to the fallacy implicit in Dr. Bell's statement of his motive for proposing so complete a reconstruction of the convention. In his presidential address, printed in The Christian Century of last week, Dr. Bell says:

> If the General Convention as now organized serves to promote dissension among us, we should have the courage to organize along different lines.
> I am pleading that we forget our differences to the extent of making every honorable concession of personal opinion and bias, in order that peace may prevail among us as a people. . . .
> We plead for the unity of God's people. But dissension and strife are so rampant among us that division is threatened. We apparently have no doubt as to its cause or seriousness. Knowing the cause, let us remove it.

To those who have studied deeply the causes underlying the present perturbation of the Disciples' brotherhood, President Bell's proposal to abolish the delegate convention in the interest of peace sounds pathetically naive. How casually and superficially has he discerned the spirit and purpose of the trouble-makers who imagines that the concession of this or that device of organization will reconcile them to take an attitude of humble and peaceable fellowship with their brethren henceforth!

This is Dr. Bell's fallacy: he assumes that the delegate convention is the cause of agitation, whereas it is only an occasion, one might say a mere pretext, for agitation.

We Disciples are having trouble these days because two radically irreconcilable conceptions of our mission as a people are clashing in our souls. And the trouble-makers have found it financially profitable to prolong the battle between these two ideals by inflaming the prejudices of the less informed and by coarse derision of our most venerable and devout leaders.

If the delegate convention were abolished tomorrow, other pretexts are abundant enough, and would surely be seized upon with intensified zeal, to continue the discussion which Dr. Bell amiably desires us to be rid of.

The only way to peace is to go forward in the determined doing of the things that are right and that make for the highest efficiency. This course consistently followed by all our recent conventions had already begun to reveal the pathetic leaderlessness of the reactionary forces—and their followerlessness also.

President Bell's failure to see this and his willingness to reckon with the opposition on terms of concession and truce restores to it a dignity of which in the eyes of most of our people it had been altogether shorn.

His proposal may have merit. But it should not have been put forward as a peace measure.

It does not make peace.

It reopens and prolongs a controversy that was practically settled.

THE NEWSPAPERS AND THE CONVENTION.

FOR the two conventions previous to that at Atlanta the editor of The Christian Century wrote a daily article for the leading daily paper of each city interpreting the convention's doings to the general public. This service fell to three competent hands this year. Rev. E. B. Bagby, Pres. F. D. Kershner, and Rev. L. B. Haskins wrote for the Journal, the Constitution and the Georgian, respectively. Their reports were of a high order and aided the public in making some sort of sense out of what otherwise would have seemed to be a hopeless and meaningless tangle of discussion. It is hoped that with the precedent so well established this kind of service may be regularly provided for future conventions.

A LITTLE DRAMA.

TIME: within the past month. Place: the United States. Dramatis Personæ: the officers and members of the board of trustees of one of the national societies of the Disciples of Christ. Upon coming to order a very wealthy trustee arose and addressed the president:

"Did you write an article which was published in The Christian Century recently, commenting upon the Berkeley church affair in California?"

The President: "I did."

The Rich Trustee: "Is this the article?" (taking from his pocket a paper and reading a few lines.)

The President: "It seems to be the article."

The Rich Trustee: "Then, brethren, this man does not represent our people. He is not one of us, and I move that we request his resignation."

The President: "Well, brethren, you need not go to the trouble to vote on that motion. I would not embarrass you nor hinder the work five minutes by remaining at its head. I simply withdraw from it here and now, and I hope earnestly you may find one to bear this burden who does represent you." (Sits down at table to write his resignation.)

The Other Trustees: "This will never do. You do represent us in this work, and you must stand by the work and by us."

So the man stood.

VOICES OF PEACE AND OF WAR.

IT IS one of the singular manifestations of the military spirit, which amounts almost to an obsession, that many journalistic voices are being lifted in favor of larger armaments for America. It is asserted that our small army and moderate navy are no adequate protection against the dangers of possible attack from abroad.

In the face of the present situation in Europe it is the simplest of truths that the last and least protection against war is an army and navy. Rather are they among the chief provocatives of conflict. A reasonable amount of military and naval equipment is not without value as a police power.

But armaments, after the size and manner of recent European armies and navies, are a menace to peace, an unspeakable burden to a nation, and a violation of the foundations of ethical relations among the peoples of the world.

A huge armament is a confession that a people is willing to live on the level of brute force. England confessed this fact in the proposal made to Germany a year ago that both nations abandon their policies of naval enlargement.

America has no excuse for an increase of her military and naval power.

The modesty of her present equipment is her best plea for international peace, and her best protection against war.

TARDY MAGNANIMITY.

REV. W. H. BOOK, of Columbus, Ind., gets the newspaper headlines at nearly all national conventions, and he receives more praise and patting on the back in the lobbies than any man in attendance. "That was a magnanimous thing you did today, Bro. Book," said everybody in greeting the Columbus pastor after he had withdrawn his resolution looking toward the abolishment of the General Convention. There had been five days of newspaper reportorial rioting in which Mr. Book's name appeared constantly as "the leader of the fight" on the General Convention. Then bold headlines appeared, gravely announcing that peace had again settled down upon the "Christians"! and all because of the magnanimity of the same Dr. Book who, though his convictions had not changed, withdrew his resolution in the interest of harmony among brethren, for all of whom, without partiality, he declared his undiminished affection.

Several recent conventions, notably that at Toronto, have witnessed much the same procedure.

We agree with the popular sentiment, always freely expressed after Mr. Book's amiable surrender, that the Columbus pastor is magnanimous and "big-hearted," but we could wish that he would not wait until the close of our conventions to get us to say it.

THE DIFFERENCE.

AN ENGLISHMAN notified Harvard University that he intended to cancel his will in which he had provided for a bequest of $10,000,000 to the university, unless the connection of Hugo Munsterberg as professor should be immediately severed. Objection to Dr. Munsterberg was based upon his recent pro-Germany utterances. Dr. Munsterberg handed his resignation to President Lowell immediately.

Straightway the board of trustees met and refused to accept the resignation on the ground that Prof. Munsterberg and the principle of academic freedom are more important to Harvard University than $10,000,000.

Some time ago a wealthy ranchman in Texas proposed to give $60,000 to partially endow and provide a building for the theological department of Texas Christian University at Ft. Worth, on condition that the institution should bear his name and embody in its charter a theological creed of his own devising, to which creed all professors and trustees must for all future time subscribe.

The trustees of Texas Christian University accepted the offer on the terms laid down, and the Brite College of the Bible is now an established institution, claiming organic fellowship with the Dicciples of Christ and a share in their common funds.

Historically, the Disciples of Christ have stood for religious freedom from the bondage of human creeds, and academic freedom in the search for and the re-formulation of religious and scientific truth.

Both of these principles are bluntly violated by Brite College of the Bible.

Harvard University would have, presumably, gotten a rich legacy had it sacrificed its academic birthright, but the Texas institution seems to have sold its birthright for a sheer mess of pottage.

NOT THE MASTER'S WAY.

A METHODIST Sunday-school at Brazil, Ind., seems to be engaged with the Disciples school at Canton, O., in a controversy over which is "the world's biggest" school. The Continent (Presbyterian) comes in as a disinterested onlooker to umpire the case. It appears to find that both schools are conducted under such high pressure and spasmodic methods as to make satisfactory comparison impossible. Of the Canton school it speaks as follows:

> The pastor of the latter congregation, Rev. P. H. Welshimer, appears to devote practically all his energy to his Bible-school, and after twelve years of steady work he has built the school up to an enrollment of 6,000. Of these, 1,800 are in a class of men and women which Mr. Welshimer teaches. There is a class of men which numbers 600. During the summer a special "contest" effort to drum up attendance resulted in a report of 7,716 present on June 28. But it is admitted that this "world's record" did not signify substantial growth in the school's own field. Delegations came from other towns to swell the numbers, and a considerable proportion of the crowd were not brought under any roof, but herded on the public park ground in the open air. It is asserted by dispassionate outside observers that in many respects the determination to achieve the distinction of "the world's biggest" has produced a structure quite artificial, if not fictitious.

It is doubtful—or is it doubtful?—that the quiet Master is honored by the noisy and strained efforts of some of his disciples to work up crowds in his name. The Master's method was the leavening method, the method that worked "without observation." He reckoned not his success in terms of numbers but in terms of spiritual life.

HUMILIATING THE MISSIONARIES.

MR. W. C. MACDOUGALL, missionary to India, speaking at a breakfast given to the missionaries at Atlanta expressed the deepest feeling of personal humiliation as he pictured himself going to the informed Indians with the gospel while they look on at Christian nations at war.

We may well rejoice that in many parts of the Orient distances are long and the means of public information few. The limitations under which the diffusion of news rests in the East are a blessing just now. Perhaps some of those alert and watchful people may not learn of our shame till it is past.

But it is not difficult to imagine with Mr. Macdougall the cynical interest with which the intelligent Shintoist of Japan, the cultured Confucionist of China, the proud Brahmin of India, and the ambitious Moslem of Turkey watch the revealing panorama of a half dozen Christian peoples plunging into the maelstrom of bloody conflict.

In some of the mission lands, notably Turkey, the old hatred of the Christians has broken out afresh, released by the native confidence that Christian Europe is powerless, or too much engaged, to protect the missionaries and the native Christians. In consequence no new missionaries are being sent to such places, and many are being recalled, while those who remain at their posts do so in full awareness that fanaticism may have its vindictive way with them at any moment.

Dare we hope that the Christian gospel will be taken seriously by the non-Christian world unless it is backed up by a Christian civilization—that is to say, a real human brotherhood—in the lands that have had it so long?

Armistice Planned for Christmas Day.

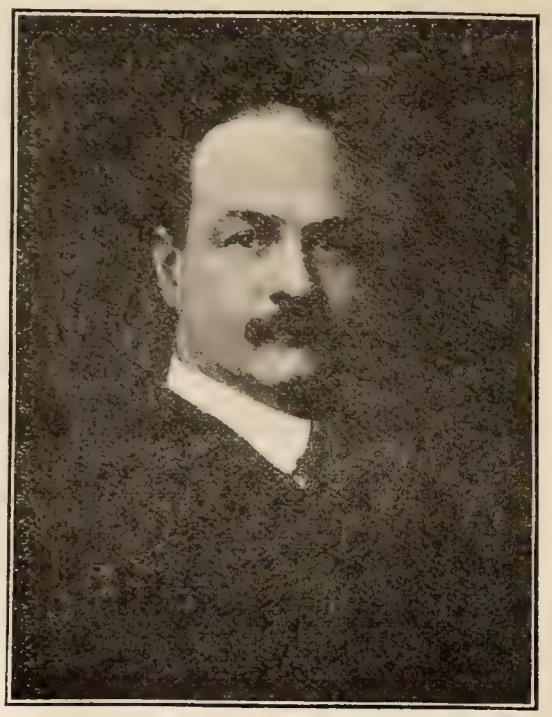
It is reported from New York that leading clericals and educators there have under discussion a movement to ask the warring powers to agree to an armistice on Christmas day. Bishop David H. Greer, of the Episcopal diocese of New York, Cardinal Farley, Rabbi H. Pedir Mendes of the Jewish synagogue, and President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University are mentioned as interested. This movement is in its infancy, but it has already enlisted the sympathies of many men of light and leading in educational and religious fields, in New York and throughout the country. The larger movement looking to a permanent cessation of hostilities is at present subordinated apparently to the movement for an armistice on Christmas day. Bishop Greer says details of the plan are still to be worked out, but that probably, if the movement meets with the expected support of all creeds and denominations, the proposal for a Christmas armistice will be made through President Wilson or the state department at Washington. The movement is all the more remarkable in that the idea of observing the day of "peace on earth" should have come from a rabbi. Rabbi Mendez, speaking of the plan, said: "It seems to me that if religion has any force in the world, and I believe it has, its voice ought to be heard now. We have had enough carnage and there is enough ruin, and I believe that public opinion in every land ought to insist first upon a truce and second upon the creation of an international tribunal of honor with power behind it to enforce its decisions."

War Not to Affect Tokyo Convention.

From both sides of the Atlantic have come inquiries as to whether or not the great war had interfered with plans for the holding of the next World's Sunday-school Convention in Tokyo, Japan, October 18-26, 1916. The World's Sunday-school Association announces that so far there has been no hitch, and that plans for a great Sunday-school gathering are being pushed both in America and in Japan. Should the European nations continue in the present unhappy conflict until 1916 the convention, of course, cannot be truly representative of all Christendom, but the Orient can still be reached, and there are strong reasons for pushing with ever increased energy the claims of Christ and religious education upon the Far East.

The Bible in Moving Pictures.

There has been recently organized in the city of Philadelphia The Religious and Educational Motion Picture Society, whose purpose is to install in churches, schools, Y. M. C. A.'s, missions, etc., a new motion-picture projecting machine, which will also display stereopticon slides. This society is now arranging to put on moving-picture films all the striking incidents in the Old and New Testaments, the complete story of home and foreign missionary progress all over the world, the great temperance movement from a practical, as well as a scientific point of view, together with all the effort that is being made for the mental, moral, social and spiritual uplift of the world in every department of human activity. These pictures, widely exhibited, will do a vast amount of good, and will undoubtedly stimulate a new interest in Bible study and prove a great benefit to the activities of the Church. Colonel S. S. McClure, the founder of McClure's Magazine, is President of the Society; Mr. H. J. Verner, of Verner & Co., Bankers, Philadelphia, is the treasurer. The Advisory Board comprises Rev. David James Burrell, Marble Collegiate Church, New York; Rev. F. B. Meyer, London, England; Rev. Dr. John McNeil, Toronto, Canada; Prof. Charles Foster Kent, Yale University; Dr. George F. Pentecost, successor of Dr. Spurgeon, London; Rev.



President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, Who Is Leading in the Movement For an Armistice For Christmas Day.

A. J. Rowland, D. D., Secretary American Baptist Publication Society; Rev. Rufus W. Miller, D. D., General Secretary Reform Church; Dr. David Starr Jordan, President Leland Stanford University; Ernest Thompson Seton, President Boy Scouts of America, and many others. Mr. George C. Hazleton, the celebrated Bible dramatist, is now preparing the scenario of the life of Moses, which will probably be edited by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. The machines for showing the pictures will shortly be ready, and over three thousand subjects of travel, scientific, industrial, religious and miscellaneous films are now available.

Are American Churches Growing?

Rev. Charles Stelzle is responsible for the following figures relating to the growth of the Church in the United States: In 1800, there were seven Protestant church members for each one hundred of the population; in 1850 the proportion had risen to fifteen per hundred; in 1870 there were seventeen; in 1880 there were twenty, in 1900 twenty-four, and in 1910 twenty-four, the growth in church membership that decade keeping even pace with the increase in population, which was 21 per cent. This looks encouraging on the surface, but Mr. Stelzle raises the question whether the members of the Church are as faithful as they were one hundred years ago. His qualifications are that the most intelligent workingmen are not now members of the Church, and that the young men are largely absent from the churches.

Germans and Americans Unite in Plan.

Germany and America have joined hands in an effort to deliver Palestine from the ravages of malaria and trachoma and make the Holy Land a healthful place. The work was initiated two and a half years ago by Nathan Straus, the New York philanthropist. He established a department of health for Palestine, with headquarters at Jerusalem, at the same time opening non-sectarian soup kitchens to feed the hungry and a small industrial school to teach the young how to earn a living, besides contributing to the support of an art school. He also took steps toward bringing about better sanitary conditions generally, and in particular toward improving the water cisterns, which used to be the main cause of breeding malaria. The following year he established in Jerusalem, in conjunction with the German organization, a Pasteur institute for protection against rabies. He also sent nurses to co-operate with the health department in combating the eye diseases that cause so much blindness in Palestine. Later the Hamburg Institute for Marine and Tropical Diseases became interested in the work, and an arrangement has been made with Mr. Straus for participation in this work by this institute and by the Society of Jewish Physicians and Scientists for Sanitary Interests in Palestine.

China Patronizes American Schools.

The newspapers have interesting pictures of a group of Chinese girls who have recently come to the United States to enter school. There are ten of them. In general looks, as to dressing of hair and garments and bodily pose, they have very much the appearance of a group of American girls of their ages. They come in the care of the Young Women's Christian Association. They will be maintained by the Chinese government from the fund established when the United States returned the portion of indemnity allotted to it, growing out of the Boxer insurrection. The sum amounted to $14,000,000 and was set aside by China for educational purposes. Many boys have been educated from it, but until now girls have not shared in it. The girls were chosen by competitive examinations held in English in Pekin. They are all Christians, and eight of them are daughters of Chinese Christian clergymen.

Baseball "Stars" are Christians.

Association Men, the journal of the Young Men's Christian Association, enumerates some of the eminent professional ball players of the country who are out-and-out Christians. Christy Matthewson of the New York Giants, the most famous player in the country, is "an earnest member of the Presbyterian Church." His contract stipulates that he will not play on Sunday. David Fultz of New York is a frequent and favorite speaker at church and Christian Association services, and is powerful in direct evangelistic appeal. Miller Huggins, the successful manager of the St. Louis Nationals, is a Methodist, as is also Charles Herzog, the Cincinnati manager. Branch Rickey, the manager of the American League team in St. Louis, belongs to the church, as do Ray Collins and "Tris" Speaker of Boston. These are all Protestants by church affiliation.

A Campaign for South America.

Many Americans do not think of South America as a mission field. Deceived by the splendor of a few great cities and by the number of great cathedrals, many of them very beautiful, they do not consider that North America has any responsibility for moral and religious conditions in the southern republics. Now that the attention of American business men is being drawn to South America as never before, in view of possible closer relations on the opening up of the Panama Canal, it is right that Christians in America should be brought to realize how shockingly low moral and religious conditions are in Latin America, under the control of a corrupt and decadent church. The World's Sunday-school Association will hold in November public meetings in Plainfield, Summit, Montclair, Bridgeton, Elizabeth and Trenton—all in New Jersey—to arouse interest in South America as a field for religious education and to secure support for a Sunday-school secretary. Among the speakers will be Dr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. S. Earl Taylor, Bisho p W. F. Oldham, Bishop T. B. Neeley, Mr. Frank L. Brown and Mr. Harry Wade Hicks.

Features in Last Missionary Year.

"The marked changes in the Moslem world and the new confidence revealed in our missionaries in China are among the outstanding features of the last missionary year," said James L. Barton of Boston, secretary of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions of the Congregational church, in his report submitted recently. "The redistribution of all Mexico in such a way that all the denominations through close and intimate co-operation shall approach the problem as a unit, and the great war in Europe" were also facts of commanding significance, he said.

Isn't This Going Too Far?

Mr. A. J. Drexel Biddle, of Philadelphia, has organized a chain of Bible classes throughout the land. Mr. Biddle is an athlete and sportsman, and the Biddle Bible classes are making an effort to serve the physical, the intellectual and the spiritual in man. Boxing bouts and other athletic sports have been emphasized from the first, and recently a Philadelphian daily had this news item: "A prize dansant will be given at the Biddle Bible Classes' Summer Home at Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, this evening. Three prizes for the best women dancers, and three for men will be presented by A. J. Drexel Biddle. The competition, which will embrace the modern dances, will be under the direction of the entertainment committee." Isn't this going a little too far?

Dr. Speer Speaks in Chicago.

"In the undeveloped men and women of the country lies the greatest wealth of the nation." This statement was made last Sunday evening by Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions of New York. He spoke at the Sunday Evening Club in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, before an audience of 3,000. Hundreds were turned away for lack of room. "The nation has begun to realize," he said, "that there is something far more valuable than its mineral wealth or the wealth of its soil or lumber. We are beginning to know that far more valuable than these are the life blood of our citizens and the well-being of our men and women. That is why legislation has been enacted for the betterment of working conditions, hours and remuneration. There is not a man, woman, boy or girl who could not be doubled in ability to contribute to the wealth of the nation and the well-being of the world. In every one there is level after level, stratum after stratum of undeveloped power and resource. All that is needed to arouse it is the right occasion. A few years ago the world stood aghast at the calamity of the Titanic, yet not entirely aghast. It looked with awe upon the heroes of that day. Men who years on years had been driven by their lusts suddenly became and died heroes. Where did this heroism come from? It was not in the iceberg, surely. No—it was dormant until the occasion brought it out.

"The greatest wealth in the world is the moral power that lies undeveloped within us. Arousing it will set us all at the business of making the world better. We are only one-half or one-quarter the men we might be. We are doing only one-half or one-quarter the work we might do. The great evils that exist could not endure one day if we would but arise in our strength. We could go a quarter of a mile from this hall and find men and women suffering for what other men and women could give them. The only reason this is so is that God has not yet found the men and women who will show the power to do His work for Him."

Fresno Endeavorers Fight Saloons.

The Christian Endeavorers of Fresno, Cal., at the recent Labor Day parade marched with banners calling for a "dry California" on November 3, 1914. A horse placarded with the legend, "I Drink Water," was in line. A riot was threatened when the "Brewery Workers' Union" just in front of the Endeavorers took exception to its company. Finally the "Brewery Workers' Union" refused to march, and disbanded! The young people, no longer allowed a place in the parade proper, forming a parade of their own, "countermarched down J Street in silent determination."

Capital City Churches Co-operate.

A report from Washington, D. C., announces the inauguration of a series of co-operative meetings on Sunday evenings by a number of churches of various fellowships, especially congregations in the near suburban sections. The first meeting was held Sunday, September 27, the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and Christian congregations of Brookland combining. These union services are to continue through fall and winter, and various civic and uplift problems are to be discussed.

Peace Sunday for United States.

A peace centenary committee, representing all evangelical Churches in the United States, has secured action from many Church bodies recommending February 14, 1915, being the date nearest the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of peace at the close of the War of 1812, as Peace Sunday in celebration of one hundred years of uninterrupted peace with Great Britain.

Colleges Promote Religious Education.

An Association of American Colleges composed especially of Christian workers in colleges has just been formed, in addition to the already existing Church Workers' Conference in State Universities and the official Council of Church Boards of Education. The aim of the new association is to bring together the efforts of churches in an endeavor to give religion its proper place in the educational system of the country.

Shall Clergy Go to War?

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the leading prelate of the Church of England, has been led by numerous inquiries to formally express an opinion on the question of clergymen enlisting as soldiers in the army. His advice is against their so doing. He says: "I have given careful attention to the question, which some people feel is a very difficult one. By every line of thought I have pursued I am led to the conclusion that I am right in maintaining that the position of an actual combatant in our army is incompatible to the position of one who has sought and received holy orders."

Christians in Nebraska College.

Over one-half of the 3,000 students in Nebraska universities and colleges last year were enrolled as members of the sixteen student Christian associations.

Christian Industrial League in Appeal.

To provide for the increasing number of calls for help to relieve distress among the unemployed, the Chicago Christian Industrial League has issued an appeal to the churches of Chicago and suburbs for a fund of $10,000. "The Chicago Christian Industrial League is recognized as one of the most efficient and far-reaching agencies for helping the poor in the city," says the appeal, which is signed by George A. Kilbey, the general manager. Here is the record for the last year: 70,134 nights' lodging have been furnished; 69,199 meals have been supplied; 30,514 days' work have been given in the workshops of the league; 93,600 poor women and children have been benefited by the renovated furniture, clothing and other goods disposed of at the six people's stores.

Of Human Interest

Lincoln's Sympathy.

Rev. T. D. Wallace, for many years a Presbyterian pastor in Chicago and now in California, as a very young soldier was severely wounded at the battle of Fredericksburg and some months after was taken to the Armory Square Hospital in Washington. Mr. Lincoln made frequent visits to this hospital, not at all in the way of inspection, but to manifest his sympathy. In a letter Dr. Wallace tells of seeing Mr. Lincoln "walking silently and sadly through, looking first to one side and then to the other at the soldiers as they lay on their cots wounded and suffering." Young Wallace was well except that his wound caused him much pain when it was dressed. No doubt his bright and youthful face attracted the President's attention. Dr. Wallace says:

"I recognized him as he came near the foot of my cot and he could see I was wide awake and looking straight at him. He stopped a moment, then turned into the little space between my cot and the next one and held out his hand, which I took with considerable vigor. Then after looking about for a moment he sat down upon a chair that stood near the head of my cot and began to talk most kindly and familiarly, as if he might have known me. I remember he asked me first about my regiment, then about my wounds and the battle. Then he asked about my home, where I was from and about my mother and the family. He talked much as a dear friend might who had come in on purpose to see me.

"I remember how solemn and sad his face seemed when he halted at the foot of many cots. Then as he made the various inquiries his face seemed to light up with an intimate, tender and loving sympathy and he seemed to be bearing on his heart the soldiers' pains and anxieties and the nation's sorrows.

"To me his presence and interest were a benediction. Nothing in my war experience was more vivid and it gave me new inspiration and nerved me for further strife.

"This was in April, 1863, one of the dark periods of the war, before Vicksburg and Gettysburg had been won to give the friends of the union new hope.'

Bryan a "Don Quixote?"

Bryan has never been able to adjust himself to the new world in which he lives. That is why he is so irresistibly funny to sophisticated newspapermen. His virtues, his habits, his ideas, are the simple, direct, shrewd qualities of early America. He is the true Don Quixote of our politics, for he moves in a world that has ceased to exist, declares Walter Lippmann in the Metropolitan Magazine.

He is a more genuine conservative than some propertied bigot. Bryan stands for the popular tradition of America, whereas most of his enemies stand merely for the power that is destroying that tradition. Bryan is what America was; his critics are generally defenders of what American has become. And neither seems to have any vision of what America is to be.

Yet there has always been great power behind Bryan, the power of those who in one way or another were hurt by the greater organization that America was developing. The Populists were part of that power. La Follette and the insurgent Republicans expressed it. It was easily a political majority of the American people. The Republican Party disintegrated under the pressure of the revolt. The Bull Moose gathered much of its strength from it. The Socialists have got some of it. But in 1912 it swept the Democratic Party and, by a combination of circumstances, carried the country. The plutocracy was beaten in politics, and the power that Bryan spoke for in 1896, the forces that had made muckraking popular, captured the government. They were led by a man who was no part of the power that he represented.

Jane Addams on the War.

To a reporter of the New York Evening Post Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, Chicago, expresses her appalled sense of the throwback to an archaic period and the return of an ancient mode of viewing life, which will be an inevitable result of the present European war. All the social gains of the past, she believes, will experience a reverse and the cause of the social worker languish for years. She observes:

"All is out of joint, out of character. Human sensibilities are more acute than ever before. The comradeship, the friendliness between nations has been brought upon a basis of mutual understanding further than ever before. By mechanical means we have been brought closer together in communication and in sympathy. Either we ought not to have equipped ourselves with these fine sensibilities or we ought not to face the horrors now confronting us. It is a too terrible inconsistency against which we should protest."

The world had reached a consciousness of strong social obligation, the effect of careful nurturing through years. But Miss Addams sees this work reduced to chaos, and is confronted by the conviction that public opinion will have to be worked up anew.

"The various woman's movements are greatly crippled, but that is only a small part of the harm done," Miss Addams declares. "One has a sort of vested right in the finer sensibilities of the human race, which are to be called upon for aid in the betterment of the conditions under which people live. Then comes along a thing like this war, and makes its appeal to brutish instincts, and we are thrown back. We get back to where we were once in perceptions and sensitiveness. . . .

"When a million men are suffering in trenches, wet and cold and wounded, what are a few children suffering under hard conditions in the factories? Take old-age pensions, upon which England, France, and Germany have been working. With widows and fatherless children numbered by the thousands in each of those countries, what are a few old people more or less? It will be years before these things are taken up again. The whole social fabric is tortured and twisted.

"Infant mortality is one of the things which we are just beginning to deal with. We are trying to learn why such numbers of little children under two years of age die. In Germany, the nation's statesmanship was challenged in the Reichstag because, out of approximately 2,000,000 children annually born in that country, some 500,000, or one-fourth, die. But what are half a million new-born children in comparison with such a slaughter—the hideous, wholesale slaughter of thousands of men a day?"

Mayor Mitchell on Home Rule.

Mayor Mitchel of New York said of a foolish suggestion for winning Ulster over to home rule:

"This remedy reminds me of the woman who looked up from the woman's magazine and said:

"'John, it tells me here that sliced onions scattered about the house will absorb the smell of fresh paint.'

"'That's right, I guess,' John answered, 'Decapitation, too will cure a cold in the head.'"

Tribute to Agassiz.

Of Prof. Agassiz Dr. Holmes once remarked that the professor was the Liebig's extract of the wisdom of ages. "When he goes off on long voyages to remote islands," added the poet, "I can't help thinking what a feast the cannibals would have if they boiled down such an extract."

An Ear-Boxing Helped Edison.

Frank Dyer and T. Commerford Martin, authors of "Edison: His Life and Inventions,"—the authorized biography which was prepared with the assistance of the great scientist himself—believe that Edison's deafness has been a help rather than a hindrance in his work. The cause was a severe box on the ears given by an angry conductor when the youthful inventor set fire to a car with his chemicals. "This deafness," says Edison himself, "has been of great advantage to me in various ways. When in a telegraph-office I could only hear the instrument directly on the table at which I sat, and, unlike the other operators, I was not bothered by the other instruments. Again, in experimenting on the telephone I had to improve the transmitter so I could hear it. It was the same with the phonograph. The great defect of that instrument was the rendering of the overtones in music and the hissing consonants in speech. Again, my nerves have been preserved intact. Broadway is as quiet to me as a country village is to a person with normal hearing."

COUNTRY-TOWN SAYINGS.

To the American Magazine E. W. Howe, the Kansas philosopher, contributes the following country-town sayings:

"Every country-town man who goes East has his picture taken with Niagara Falls for a background.

"There is usually enough of everything on the table except cream.

"The position a man gets away from home is never as good as his folks at home say it is.

"When a man is trying to sell you something, don't imagine he is that polite all the time.

"Whenever a boy comes anywhere near his mother, she says to him, 'Look at your hands!'

"When a man tells his friends that he has 'accepted' a new position that was offered him, he doesn't fool them any. They know from experience that the position was not offered him, but that he hounded it for months. Not one man in twenty ever had a position offered him."

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER (Reformed.)

. . . The Meaning of Baptism. By Charles Clayton Morrison. The unique purpose of this well-written volume is to find a common ground from which the various sections of the Baptist Church can form a union among themselves and unitedly cooperate with other Christians in their great evangelical movements to extend the kingdom of God throughout all the world. He asserts that it will never do to remain divided among themselves on so radical a doctrine as that of baptism. To secure such a union he advocates a revision of their idea of the true purpose of baptism, which, he says, denotes "induction into the Church and into Christ." He argues that all sections of the Baptist church have put an undue emphasis upon the manner in which baptism is indicated, insisting on immersion and thereby excluding themselves from all other branches of the Church; whereas, if they made the act of immersion a symbol of admission into the one Church built upon faith in Jesus Christ, they could at once join with a whole heart in the grand effort to accomplish the mission of the Church. The argument seems logical and the spirit of the writer is certainly as gentle in statement as it is urgent in appeal.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD, BOSTON.

A frank discussion of Baptism, by Clayton Morrison. A thorough treatise from the immersion point of view, but building a bridge toward the affusionist view.

ZION'S HERALD (Methodist, Boston.)

A frank discussion of Baptism, by Charles Clayton Morrison. Disciples Publication Society: Chicago. Price, $1.25 net.

Dr. Morrison, who is editor of The Christian Century, one of the official organs of the Disciples of Christ—a denomination which believes in immersion—handles with utmost frankness the position of his own denomination relative to baptism. The work is of unusual significance, as it is a complete abandonment of the immersion dogma by the editor of this leading publication in that denomination. "It is my conviction," he writes, "that those communions which have laid stress upon the physical act of immersion as equivalent to baptism and therefore invested with the authority of the Scriptures and of Christ Himself, will be forever under effective inhibition against committing themselves to the greater social and spiritual program of modern religion and to practical co-operation in any program of Christian unity unless they consciously and for good and sufficient reasons abandon their immersion dogma. This dogma eclipses the great objective task of the church for large majorities of Disciples and Baptists." Dr. Morrison desires to remove every obstacle in the way of Christian unity. His conviction is that the plea of the Disciples—and it is made over and over again—for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as this view of baptism persists among them. While holding that baptism by immersion is historically the method utilized by the early church, the real significance of baptism, he holds is spiritual. "The worst we can say of it [baptism in some other form than by immersion]is that it was irregularly performed . . . But immersion is not essential in order to give validity to initiation." Then he adds with emphasis, "Any doctrine of baptism whose effect is to unchurch the Church . . . is surely fallacious." Dr. Morrison's work is frankly done, and while arousing, doubtless, some criticism among those of his own denomination and the close communion remnant still to be found in certain localities, will be heartily received as a genuine contribution toward Christian unity, as it places the emphasis on the essentials and not on non-essentials, in baptism as in everything else.

THE KANSAS MESSENGER (Disciples.)

Charles Morrison, the editor of the Christian Century, in the Foreword of a recent book, says:

> "The great ideals of their movement for Christian unity have been much obscured, and, for many minds, wholly eclipsed by this doctrine of immersion which Alexander Campbell introduced into their thinking not many years after their movement was launched by his more catholic-minded father. My conviction is profound and urgent that the Disciples' plea for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as Mr. Campbell's view of baptism persists among them."

If this restoration movement could have had at its beginning Charles Morrison instead of Alexander Campbell as its leading spirit, and The Christian Century as its best expression, instead of the Christian System, the Harbinger, Bethany College, etc., would the movement be stronger than it is today, or would it be in the class with the Christian Church (Newlights)? Mr. Morrison unquestionably feels that it would have been much better if he could have been the Alexander Campbell of the movement, so that views on baptism more nearly like those of the "Newlights" might have prevailed.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH NEWS (California.)

Meaning of Baptism. The above-named book is from the Disciples' Publication Society, Chicago, and is written by C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century. It is a book of 250 pages.

It is not our purpose at this time to review this book. It is being reviewed in the Christian Standard. The book is written in the usual vigorous and versatile style of the author. It stimulats thought, and is a wide departure from the views generally held by the Disciples on the subject of water baptism. That there has been a great change going on among our people as to the real "meaning and purpose" of Christian baptism will not be denied, we presume, by the student of "our movement." At some more convenient season we shall call attention to these changes.

THE ADVANCE (Congregational.)

"The Meaning of Baptism." By Charles Clayton Morrison. (Disciples' Publication Society, Chicago, $1.25 net.) Dr. Morrison is editor of "The Christian Century," and in that paper has fought a good fight for a broader and more generally Christian attitude within the body of Christians known as the Disciples than either of the other two papers affiliated with that communion. Both with respect to scholarship and Christian comity this paper stands constantly for a broad and genuinely Christian attitude. In this volume Dr. Morrison takes up the important question of baptism. To a Congregationalist it is a question easily solved, for believing that the validity is in the motive rather than in the form, and that any application of water in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, if with the right motive and baptismal intent, is valid baptism, the subject is rather quickly disposed of, and every man may be fully persuaded in his own mind, but with the Disciples the question is not only important, but is generally regarded as fundamental.

Disciples are not close communionists. They administer the Lord's Supper every Sunday, and freely admit to the table Christians of every name. With open communion, how can they consistently practice close baptism?

Dr. Morrison carefully considers the whole problem of baptism, beginning with the theories of Alexander Campbell and working through the history of baptism as it was in Judaism, as practiced by John, and by the apostles down through the history of the Christian Church. Dr. Morrison is an immersionist, and makes out a strong case for immersion as the apostolic made of baptism, and while he earestly defends its use by the Disciples he insists that it is not so essential to church membership that Disciples may not receive into their fellowship on letter from other churches Christians who have been baptized by some other mode.

We commend this book to pastors who find the baptismal question up for discussion in the parishes. It is a strong contribution to the literature of the subject, and we believe the position herein advocated is one that the Disciples will be driven ultimately to adopt. We do not think it possible for them permanently to hold to close baptism without going the whole length of the Baptists and joining close communion to it. Nor do we think there is any logical way out in the attitude of the English Baptists, amiable as that is, though thoroughly inconsistent. Dr. Morrison himself takes up that rather elusive figment of the imagination, the uncovenanted mercies of God, and finds no place for it. "All God's mercies," he maintains, "are within the covenant, and are to be frankly accepted in any logical interpretation of Christian life and theology."

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (Nashville.)

The Meaning of Baptism. By Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century. Disciples' Publication Society, Chicago. Price, $1.35, postpaid.

In the foreword the author says: "Among my own people, the Disciples of Christ, I am frank to say that this dogma of immersion (by this I do not mean the practice of immersion) has been like a ten-cent piece held before the eye, shutting out the sun." The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion Church, the Disciples of Christ, or commonly known as Campbellites: and while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares: "It would be too much to say dogmatically that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." He is opposed to rebaptism, as practiced by the Baptists and others, declaring: "Such a procedure is the very essence of sectarianism. Indeed, it may properly be called congregational Phariseeism." He is opposed to infant baptism, but thinks it proper to dedicate little children to God publicly without baptism. The book is an indirect help to affusionists.

Disciples Table Talk

Butler Day at Columbus, Ind.

The Columbus, Ind., church at the suggestion of the pastor, W. H. Book, invited Butler College to arrange a Butler Day for Columbus the last Sunday in September. The college gladly accepted the invitation. President Howe and Professors Morro, Hall and Underwood participated. Professors Morro and Underwood taught adult Bible classes. President Howe spoke at the morning church service on the subject, "Butler College Indispensable to the Church." Professor Morro followed in the same service with an address on "The Need for a Student Aid Fund." Professors Morro, Hall and Underwood spoke at the Endeavor service. Professor Underwood spoke at the evening service on "Cultivation of the Religious Life at Butler College." Professor Hall closed the day's program fittingly with an appeal for "Consecration to Christian Service." The Columbus church was one of three Indiana churches to give largely to the endowment of Butler. Six members of the Board of Trustees of the college sat in the audience on this special day, all members of the Columbus Tabernacle Church. A former member of the Butler faculty, now candidate for United States Senator, listened to the addresses. Many of the alumni were present. A limited number of engagements for Butler day special programs will not be unacceptable, it is reported, especially in view of the coming Education Day, January 17.

Transylvania Has New Dormitory.

Transylvania University's new dormitory for men, Ewing Hall, costing about $75,000 complete, is one of the best buildings of this kind in the South, and is already well filled with students who are much pleased with their accommodations. There is great need, it is hinted, for a new building offering like accommodations for young women who are attending Transylvania and The College of the Bible. Every year marks an increase in the number of women who seek the advantages offered by these colleges. Last year there were sixty-four women in the student body, while thus early in the present session this number has been increased and the enrollment will doubtless reach near the hundred mark during the current school year. Already some liberal friends of Christian education are considering making large gifts to help forward this improvement.

New Missionaries for India.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray E. Rice of First Church, Lincoln, Neb., have received word from the Foreign Christian Missionary Society that they have engaged passage for them on the steamship Cedric, of the White Star Line, to sail on November 2 for India. This word has made the Rices very happy, as they were exceedingly disappointed not to go when they had their original bookings last September. The war situation caused the delay. Mr. Rice goes out in the name of the First Church as its Living Link, by the gift of Edwin Jeary and family of this congregation. The Omaha First Church likewise has deep interest, since Mrs. Rice goes as a Living Link of that congregation.

New Life at Broadway, Los Angeles.

Broadway Church, Los Angeles, Cal., observed October 11 as "Guest Day." The pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, used as his subject, "Jesus, a Guest in the Home." There were a large number of guests present, making it the best attended service since Mr. Hutslar's coming. At the closing of the services three young men, from a Sunday-school class, came out for Christ. A very important meeting of the ladies of the church was held on the afternoon of October 8. Mrs. Charles F. Hutslar had charge of the meeting and organized a missionary society, under the auspices of the C. W. B. M., with twenty-six charter members. Also, a Ladies' Aid Society was reorganized and activities resumed after the summer vacation. The Los Angeles church announces to eastern Disciples that an information bureau will be established shortly under the auspices of the Broadway Christian Church for the benefit of the eastern guests who will come for the winter, or to the 1915 convention. All are welcome to take advantage of such information. The church will be open every day for the benefit of strangers and visitors.

Des Moines Men Prepare for Revival.

The men of the Des Moines churches to the number of about a thousand recently met at the First Methodist church and formed the Rev. W. H. Sheffer, Pastor Linden Street Church, Memphis., Tenn., President for 1914 of the American Christian Missionary Society, Whose Address on "The Law of the Heart," was Considered One of the Masterful Deliverances of the Atlanta Convention.

Men's League to boost the Sunday meeting. The password is I. Cor. 9:22. The slogan, "Des Moines for Christ; Christ for Des Moines." Prof. C. N. Kinney was chosen for the men's leader of Disciple men. At least half the audience was made up of men from our churches, which shows that the Disciples of Christ are at the front of the battle line. Hundreds of prayer meetings are being held in the city. The building of the tabernacle is being rushed and it will soon be completed. It will seat over 8,000. Over 200 ushers will be required at each service. Mr. Sunday will arrive Oct. 31.

Yale's "Campbell Club" Meets.

The Campbell Club, comprising the Disciples registered in the School of Religion, Yale University, held its regular monthly meeting recently. The new men were asked to tell why they became Disciples, what college trained them, and why they came to Yale. Professor Bacon was present and elected an honorary member of the club. In a few felicitous words, he expressed Yale's welcome to the Disciples. The colleges are represented as follows: Butler, 4; Bethany, 3; Cotner, 3; Transylvania, 3; Eureka, 3; University of Missouri, 2; University of Kansas, 1, and Hiram, 1. There are twenty Disciples registered this year in the School of Religion, six less than last year.

Of the 112 divinity students, there are 31 Congregationalists, 22 Methodists, 20 Disciples, 12 Presbyterians, 10 Baptists, the remainder being distributed among seven other religious bodies.

Kansas City School Supports Missionary.

The Independence Boulevard Sunday-school, Kansas City, Mo., will in the future support Mrs. Arthur Bowman as their Living-Link. There are three other Sunday-schools that are supporting a missionary each.

New Missionaries to China.

Sailing on the S. S. "China," September 19, the following new missionaries went to China: Dr. and Mrs. G. L. Hagman, Clarence H. Hamilton, E. P. Gish. Dr. Hagman will have charge of the hospital at Nantungchow, Professor Hamilton will teach in the University of Nankin, and Mr. Gish will take up the evangelistic work in Nankin.

Pastor Out for Mayor.

Rev. Harley Jackson, pastor of the church at Pullman, Wash., has announced his candidacy for mayor for the fall municipal election. Mr. Jackson has outlined his platform, one of the most important planks in which is the pledge that in case he is elected he will appoint an advisory committee, composed of representatives from the chamber of commerce, school board, women's societies and other organizations to act in conjunction with the city authorities in all civic matters.

Hammond, Ind., Has Peace Parade.

Hammond, Indiana's first peace pageant, a big parade of the Sunday-school of the First Christian church with 1,150 on floats and in line of march, was witnessed by ten thousand people who lined the sidewalks of Hammond on October 11. A hundred men, a hundred women, two hundred boys, young men and young women and five hundred children marched, and each carried a Bible. From fifty to a hundred automobiles followed in the wake. The affair was arranged and carried out by C. J. Sharp, the pastor. Rev. C. G. Kindred, of Englewood, spoke from a decorated automobile which was one of the most attractive in the festival parade. He was introduced by Mr. Sharp and said among other things: "There is only one solution of the war problem. It is the word of God, open before every soul, speaking God's will, God's thought and marking God's plan. After the battles of this break and failure of civilization have been fought the question of right and wrong will not have been settled, no matter what people shall claim the victory all will be losers. There will be no east, no west, no north, no south when God's people unite in one cause. The army of the Sunday-school is the mightiest army of the world. One in heart, one in doctrine, one in brotherhood, one in unity and one in Christian fellowship."

Hutchinson, Kans., Goes to Sunday-school.

First Church School, Hutchinson, Kan., where K. F. Nance ministers, along with seventeen other city schools of the city, observed "Go-to-Sunday-school Day" October 11. The entire city was divided into districts and each Sunday-school was held responsible for making a house-to-house canvas of one of these districts inviting every one to attend Sunday-school in the district. The special effort is reported to have met with great success.

First Church, Springfield, Ill., Celebrates.

At First Church, Springfield, Ill., on October 4, the anniversary of the church, which was established in 1833, was observed at both services. In the evening F. W. Burnham, former pastor, now pastor of Wilshire Christian church, Los Angeles, Cal., delivered the sermon, taking for his subject, "The Hope of the Gospel." The history of this church goes back to 1832. In that year Josephus Hewitt did the first preaching for the Disciples of Christ in Springfield. In 1833 the congregation was organized with twelve charter members. In 1834 a brick church building was erected in Madison St., and the following year Josephus Hewitt became the first regular pastor. In 1840 the first "state meeting" among the Disciples of Illinois was held at Springfield. In 1848 a Sunday-school was organized in the church. Oct. 2, 1852, a new church building was dedicated and occupied for thirty years. During this period Isaac Errett held two meetings for the church. Feb. 12, 1882, another building was dedicated. The national convention of the Christian churches has been twice entertained by this church, in 1888 and 1896. Jan. 5, 1902, the West Side Christian church was organized with 110 members from the First Christian Church. In the summer of 1905, following a tent meeting by C. C.

Morrison, the Stuart street church was organized with eighty-five members. The building was dedicated May 13, 1906, at a cost of $9,000. Early in 1909 steps were taken toward the erection of the present house of worship. This commodious building was dedicated June 23, 1912. F. W. Burnham, now of Los Angeles, Cal., led in the enterprise. The following ministers have served the church as pastors: Josephus Hewitt, Alexander Graham, J. P. Lancaster, J. H. Hughes, A. J. Kane, W. M. Brown, Alexander Johnson, S. E. Pearre, D. R. Howe, L. B. Wilkes, T. T. Crane, E. T. Williams, J. M. Atwater, J. B. Allen, J. Z. Taylor, E. V. Zollars, J. B. Briney, A. P. Cobb, J. E. Lynn, H. T. Morrison, C. C. Morrison, Frederick W. Burnham and Frank W. Allen.

At Disciples Divinity House, Chicago.

Among the men in residence in the Disciples Divinity House are W. C. MacDougall of Jubbulpore, India, and G. B. Baird of Luchu-fu, China. The wealth of instructional and library material available for the study of missions, comparative religion, oriental language, and other disciplines serviceable to missionaries, makes the University of Chicago the equal of any institution in the world for missionary training. And the large number of returned and prospective missionaries, in residence every quarter, gives evidence that its advantages are appreciated. The members of the Disciples' Divinity House have a weekly assembly at which addresses are made, dealing with present interests and tendencies in the brotherhood. Dr. Sharpe concluded a course in "Doctrinal Restatement" during the summer quarter, and Dr. Gates is now giving a course in the "History of the Disciples."

J. M. Lucas Suffers Stroke of Paralysis.

J. M. Lucas, one of the long-time active members of University Place church, Des Moines, and for many years treasurer of the Iowa Christian Missionary Society, suffered a stroke of paralysis a few days ago, affecting his entire right side. He is conscious and his mind seems to be right, but he is unable to speak. Mr. Lucas is a brother of D. R. Lucas, Disciple "warhorse" of Iowa and Indiana.

Death of Mrs. G. P. Rutledge.

The Columbus, (O.) Christian records the death of Mrs. Rutledge, wife of Dr. George P. Rutledge, pastor of the Broad street church. The Christian Century extends sympathy to the bereaved family.

Japan Missionaries Return to Work.

Miss Mary Rioch, missionary to Tokyo, Japan, in company with her mother, of Hamilton, Ont., sailed September 19 on the S. S. "China" from San Francisco. After a year spent in the language school at Tokyo, Miss Gretchen Garst returns to Akita. She has had a good year and returns to her work in the very best of spirits.

W. H. Coleman Returns to Florida.

W. H. Coleman, who has been pastor of the church at Carlisle, Iowa, for the past year, has returned to his former home at Ocala, Florida. He came to Iowa for his wife's health, which has been completely restored. Mr. Coleman is an old Iowa preacher and was pastor at Carlisle several years ago, before removing to Florida.

W. N. Lemmon's Son to be Missionary.

Ralph Lemmon, a son of Dr. W. N. Lemmon, has just completed his academic work at Baguio, and has matriculated for his A. B. degree in the University of the Philippines. He expects, like his father, to be a medical missionary.

Missouri Pastor Injured.

Thomas H. Popplewell, for many years a minister of the Disciples, and at present the much beloved pastor of the church at Windsor, Mo., was thrown from a horse while acting as marshal of the day at a public gathering in that town on Sept. 19. The animal which threw him kicked him in the head as he fell, causing an interior fracture of the skull. For two weeks he lay in a comatose condition. He is now convalescing slowly and his physicians think he will recover.

Medical Missionaries at Battle Creek.

It is said that fully 200 missionaries will attend the Sixth Annual Medical Missionary Conference to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., November 17 to 20.

Leslie Wolfe in Virginia.

Leslie Wolfe has been spending about a month visiting the district conventions in West Virginia. This he does at the invitation of the state secretary, O. G. White.

From Clarkston to Palouse, Wash.

David Lloyd Morgan, who for five years has been pastor of the church at Clarkston, Wash., announces his purpose of taking up the work in Palouse. Under his pastorate the Clarkston congregation has grown to 400 and a $16,000 church has been erected.

One Church Starts Right.

Granville Snell, Evangelist for Seventh District, Missouri, writes that he has recently closed a meeting at Wilcox, Mo., a rural community in which was effected an organization of sixty-three members, arrangements being made to call J. M. Brewster to serve the church one-half time. Mr. Brewster was present during this meeting, assisting in the song service. Wilcox is in a good community and the church there had been closed for several years. An offering was taken during the recent meeting for each of the missionary and benevolent enterprises working under the general convention, thus giving a start in "the Real Business of the Kingdom." This Mr. Snell believes to be "the legitimate work of a New Testament evangelist."

New Church Rises From Ashes.

The disastrous fire which destroyed both the old and the new homes of First Church, Kansas City, Mo., may not prove, after all, a calamity. After the fire of last May, W. F. Richardson led his congregation in making plans for a new and better building. These plans are now matured and it is expected that the building will have advanced far enough by Christmas so that the congregation may hold its services in its own home. When the new plans are carried out, a six-story, fire-proof building, 132x72 feet, will be ready for service. Three office floors will rise above the lower floors devoted to regular church and social center activities. For the present only three stories and the future Sunday-school auditorium, together with the many social rooms necessary for institutional work, will be completed. The building will be finished in white enamel. Dr. Richardson is making a record as a "stayer" in the Kansas City pulpit. He began his twenty-first year as pastor there on October 1. During these twenty years, Mr. Richardson has preached 2,057 sermons, made 556 other addresses and lectures; officiated at 753 weddings and 518 funerals; made 14,432 pastoral visits; added 2,282 members to First Church and 440 to other churches where he has preached; has served on many city, state and national boards and committees, as David Teachout Threatened with Boycott.

Entirely consistent with the past record of David Teachout, layman and "Men and Millions" leader of Cleveland, is his recent activities for the "drys" in the face of a threatened boycott of his business. Mr. Teachout is chairman of the finance committee of the Ohio "Drys" and is speaking nightly in the interest of prohibition. The liquor dealers demanded in return that his firm discount all bills owing it one per cent for furthering the "wet" campaign and upon his refusal to comply, is seeking to boycott his firm.

Some Wise Ohio Churches.

The Cincinnati Disciples revealed their business wisdom when they sent their pastors to the Atlanta convention. Norwood sent C. R. Stauffer; North Side, C. L. Garrison; Walnut Hills, R. E. Elmore; Central arranged to send Claire L. Waite, but he was unable to go. Another Ohio church, Central at Lima, sent its pastor, A. B. Houze, to the convention.

Peace Eloquence at Springfield, Ill.

One of the most eloquent pronouncements on the present war is reported from Springfield, Ill. Frank Waller Allen, speaking on "The Eyes of the Master," introduced his sermon with the words: "Cathedrals are magnificent to look upon, and 'art treasures' in addition to their beauty, possess a certain historic interest, but the world should save its indignation for those guilty of provoking the slaughter of flesh and blood of human beings now going on in Europe. A pile so noble as that at Rheims can be restored, and even a picture by Rubens, such as that alleged to have been destroyed at Louvain, may be surpassed by one more cunning yet to come. But who, by word or effort, can put life and beauty back into the still brain of the builder, or by his utmost re-arm the dead hand of the painter with a vanished cunning? At what place in the evolution of human thought,—curious anomaly that it is —did the things that men create with their brains and fashion with their hands, become of more value than men themselves—stones and mortar, cloth and colors, goods and bank notes, more precious than human life? German "vandalism" is reprehensible, to be sure, but as between the smoking towers and ruined facade of the cathedral at Rheims, and the thousands of dead bodies scattered along the Aisne, where does the heart of the world lay? When history has summed up the causes of this, the world's greatest tragedy, upon whom will it lay the hand of an everlasting condemnation, the commander who ordered his artillery turned upon a Gothic church tower, or those who hurled millions of disinterested human beings to death in the most senseless war the world has ever known."

Florida Convention Preparing.

The churches of Florida, are looking forward to the state convention in St. Petersburg, Nov. 10-12. A good program has been prepared and a large delegation is expected. The St. Petersburg church is making extensive improvements on the building and getting ready to entertain the delegates. Homer F. Cooke, of Brazil, Ind., has accepted the work there and will be in charge during the convention. J. E. Gorsuch, recently pastor in this field, had to give up the work because of his health. It is reported that this year more tourists than ever are flocking to the land of flowers.

John R. Golden Shows Wisdom.

John R. Golden, the new Field Secretary of Illinois, is showing his wisdom in co-operating with the Sunday-school forces of the state. Mr. Golden, with State Sunday-school Superintendent De Pew, is making a tour of Central Illinois. It is the intention of the secretaries to come in touch with every church in this territory through representatives to the central point rallies, and to reach every church and Sunday-school before the middle of December. It will be a most vigorous and much needed campaign, to interest all the churches in the state work and Sunday-chool plans.

Dedication at Cheney, Washington.

The Cheney Christian Church, Washington Memorial, built by the Disciples and their friends of eastern Washington, was dedicated Sunday, September 27, reports James Egbert, pastor. Harley Jackson, pastor at Pullman, dedicated the building. The attendance was so large that an overflow meeting was held in the basement, at which J. Quincy Biggs, of Spokane University, gave an address. An indebtedness of $4,500 was cleared, the Church Extension Board having granted a $3,000 loan. The day closed with the addition to the church forces of nine new members. The new Cheney edifice is a beautiful brick structure costing $12,000. S. V. Mackey, an elder in the church, builder and contractor, supervised the construction, doing himself great credit in giving the church a plant equal to any $20,000 edifice in the city. The auditorium, seating 400, is perfect. The Sunday-school room, and, in the basement, the toilet rooms, kitchen and fine dining room accommodating 300 at tables, afford a plant second to none in the city. It is heated throughout with steam.

Rev. W. D. Endres, Who Succeeds J. M. Rudy at First, Quincy, Ill.

Cleveland Pastor as Reformer.

W. F. Rothenburger, of Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, is winning a reputation as an apostle of social service. He has served as chairman of the Social Betterment Committee of the Cleveland Federation of Churches for the past year. This committee carried on investigations and made reports which are accomplishing the gradual elimination of the segregated districts in Cleveland and are also reducing the number of divorces granted. Another campaign looking to a medical examination of candidates for marriage licenses has been prosecuted and has received endorsement of the Cleveland Academy of Medicine.

Kentucky's Busiest Man.

H. W. Elliott, Kentucky's State Secretary, is a busy man these autumn days. Beginning with the first day of September with the convention at Ashland he has been at work almost day and night, for he has worked much of the time until ten or eleven o'clock at night. He visited seven churches, dedicated one house of worship and received for the work of State Missions, $1,013.41.

Still Another Candidate.

George C. Ritchey, pastor at Newberg, Ore., is the prohibition nominee for State Legislature from his district. Prospects are bringht for his election. That Mr. Ritchie has not neglected his church is evidenced by the fact that the Newberg church has six young men in Eugene Bible College and expects to provide ten of the thousand volunteers called for by the Men and Millions Movement.

M. M. Davis Makes Record at Dallas.

On October 4, M. M. Davis, dean of Dallas Disciple pastors, completed twenty-four years of service in that city. During these years Mr. Davis preached 3,410 sermons and has had 3,929 additions. Besides his pastoral duties, he has found time to write seven books.

Washington, Pa., Pastor Happy.

Walter Mansell, pastor at Washington, Pa., First, was one of the happiest preachers in attendance at the convention. Just before he started for Atlanta the congregation raised $2,250 to purchase a lot adjoining the present property, looking forward to extending the church's activities. Another reason for Mr. Mansell's cheerful view of life was the fact that the Washington Church sent both himself and wife to the convention.

Florida Church for Community Betterment.

The East Broadway Church, at Ocala, Fla., where Roy B. Bowers ministers, has planned for a "Community Betterment Campaign" to begin on the last Sunday evening in October. The editors of the two daily papers of the city, neither of whom are members of this church, were asked to select the speakers from men who are prominent in the city's activities. The mayor of the city is expected to appear first on the program. Among the speakers are also the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Superintendent of City Schools, the President of the Woman's Clubs, etc. There will be about six or seven speakers in all. At the close of the campaign the minister will deliver a series of Sunday evening addresses on the problems of the city in their relation to the church. Mr. Bowers writes that among the results expected from the campaign are, first: a knowledge of the attitude of the business men of the city, many of whom are not church members, toward the church and religion; an understanding of the church; relationship to the city life; an expression of its interest in community problems, and a repudiation of the holier-than-thou claims of the church. Mr. Bowers believes that the publicity given the church will be of help, but states that this is the motive least considered in the campaign.

F. M. Rogers Begins New Work.

F. M. Rogers has just closed a six years' pastorate with the splendid First Church, Long Beach, Cal., and now makes one brief report for the six years. Total accessions, 965, all but 120 in regular services. Over $69,000 raised for local work and $19,400 for missions. The church now enrols 1,163 members, and is in splendid condition for a great forward movement, writes the pastor. Mr. Rogers, upon his return from Atlanta, enters upon his new work as Secretary of the Christian Missionary Society of Southern California.

J. E. Pickett Leaving Orange, Cal.

J. E. Pickett writes that he is just closing a year's service with the Orange, California, church. During the year fifty-three persons have been received into the fellowship of the church, seventeen of the number being on profession of faith. A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor has been organized and now has a membership of over sixty. A movement to reduce and gradually extinguish a four thousand dollar debt on the church property has been inaugurated successfully. The church continues in the Living Link ranks, supporting Harry Smith, in Liberia, Africa, under the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Mr. Pickett writes that his successor will find a united and harmonious church.

Rockford, Ill., Church Makes Progress.

Central Church, Rockford, Ill., has made commendable progress during the fiscal year just closed. The pastor, Wm. B. Clemmer, reports: 61 sermons, 1,359 calls, 846 letters, 437 postcards, 236 circular letters, and 310 meetings and conferences other than Sunday attended. Forty-six were added to the membership, 23 of whom came through the Lockhart meetings, when over $3,000 was pledged to care for building needs. In spite of the heavy handicap of a building enterprise and of meeting four months in the court house with morning services only and the balance of the time in an unfinished building. Mr. Clemmer writes that the new year opens with the best prospects for permanent gains. An every-member canvass was put on by the men of the church, Sunday, September 27, with results of an increase in the number of pledges increased 75 per cent over same time last year and 25 per cent in amount in the face of heavy building obligations. Mr. A. G. Snell, the superintendent of the Rockford & Interurban railway, is the new Sunday-school superintendent. Over $20,000 has been put in the building alone, $10,000 of which has been loaned by the church extension board. The church will not be finished this year, although Mr. Clemmer writes that the work is within $5,000 of completion.

Working Dr. Dye Overtime.

"How is this for working a fine horse?" writes Clark Buckner, pastor at Connellsville, Pa. Dr. R. J. Dye was in Connellsville on October 9, arriving at 10 a. m., and leaving at 3 p. m. the next morning. Total of eleven hours. He was speaking during six of these hours. Spoke to eighth grade High School; banquet at my home; evening service at church and again after service!"

Bethany College Reports.

From Frank Lappin, Bethany College reporter, comes the announcement that sixty young men have enrolled in the Ministerial Association at Bethany, and there is a prospect that fully twenty-five members will enroll in the Volunteer Mission Band. The reception given to new students by the Y. M. C. A. of the college was marked by good fellowship and enthusiasm for old Bethany.

Study Church History at Prayer Meeting.

H. E. Stafford, pastor at Massillon, O., is trying to make his prayer-meetings bear fruit. A course of study in Church History is being taken up at the services. The minister will deliver a popular talk, each evening, presenting the history of the church in story form, each evening. At the initial meeting the "Establishment, Growth and Influence of the Church and the Life of That Time" was discussed. The course will be in part as follows: "The Apostolic Age (1-100 A. D.)"; The Life in the Gentile and Jewish World, The Founding of the Church, Christian Life, Influence, Worship and Teaching, The Literature of the New Testament. "The Progress of Christianity in the Roman Empire (100-313)"; Roman Persecution and the Spread of the Gospel, Government and Discipline in the Church, How the Books of the New Testament were Selected and the Literature of the Time, Life, Worship and Doctrine. Free discussion is insisted upon in these sessions. Many from outside the church are taking advantage of this opportunity for instruction.

A cablegram from Herbert L. Willett, Jr., from Naples, reports his safe arrival there and his hope of being able to leave there for the Syrian coast within a week.

Mrs. Chas. E. Garst, of the School of Missions, at Indianapolis, who spoke at the Chicago meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions a fortnight since, was the guest of the Woman's Society of Memorial Church on Thursday of last week, and her message on missionary work in general, and especially in Japan, was deeply appreciated by all who heard it.

The Chicago delegation to the Atlanta convention included Mr. E. M. Bowman, Rev. W. F. Shaw and wife, Mrs. Kinney, Rev. O. F. Jordan, Rev. C. C. Morrison, Prof. H. L. Willett, Prof. C. M. Sharpe and Mr. T. C. Clark.

Prof. B. C. Hagerman, formerly of the Campbell-Hagerman School in Lexington, Ky., is at present supplying the pulpit of Memorial Church, Chicago.

While in Atlanta attending the general convention, Dr. Willett read a paper at the monthly meeting of the "Unity Club," a group of ministers and teachers of that city, and delivered an address at the opening of the new "Wesley" Memorial Institute," a school for theological training and preparation for various forms of Christian service.

At the University of Chicago

The attendance at the University of Chicago for the summer quarter has just been announced, and shows a striking advance over the registration for the corresponding quarter a year ago.

The total number of men registered in the Graduate Schools of Arts, Literature, and Science was 860 and of women, 528, a total of 1,388; in the Senior and Junior Colleges 572 men and 605 women, a total of 1,177; in the Professional Schools, Divinity 282, Medicine 135, Law 163. Education 991, making a total of 1,571; and excluding duplications, the registration for the entire University was 3,974, the largest summer registration in the history of the institution.

In the convocation held at the close of the summer quarter thirty-one states were represented among the candidates, as well as the British West Indies, Canada, Cuba,

Mr. J. A. Macdonald, Editor of the Toronto Globe, Who Will Speak at the University of Chicago in November.

Germany, and Japan, showing the remarkably varied constituency from which the University of Chicago draws its students.

The list of university preachers for the autumn quarter beginning October 1 is as follows: Professor Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard University, who spoke on October 4 and 11. On October 18 Dr. Robert E. Speer, of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, New York City, was the speaker and October 25 Bishop William Fraser McDowell, of Chicago, gives the address.

For November 1 the speaker has not been chosen, but the speakers for the rest of that month are as follows: Dr. H. M. Sanders, of New York City; Dean Charles R. Brown, of the Yale Divinity School; and Dr. J. A. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, Canada.

For the month of December Bishop Charles D. Williams, of Michigan, and President Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin College, are the speakers, the latter being the convocation preacher on December 20.

One of the most important of the official publications of the Univeristy of Chicago, the Annual Register, has just appeared from the University of Chicago Press. The volume, of 750 pages, contains many matters of interest showing the development of the institution, among them the annual enrolment of students.

In the opening year of the university, 1892-93, there were 742 students; at the end of the first ten years there were 4,450 and at the end of the second ten years 6,506. During the year ending June 30, 1914, 7,301 different students were registered.

The total number of graduates for the first year was 31 and for the present year 766, while the whole number graduated from the institution is 8,363. The toal number of students that have matriculated during the twenty-two years of the university's history is over 50,000.

The new Geology Building, contributed by Mr. Julius Rosenwald, is nearing completion, and will be ready for use in January. The Classics Building is nearly ready for the roof.

The south end of South Divinity Hall, which was closed during the erection of the adjacent Classics Building, will be released for use in the winter quarter. The office of the Disciples Divinity House has already been reopened at 128 S. Divinity Hall.

A new circular regarding the work of the Disciples House has just been issued, and will be sent to any one requesting it. It contains a cut of the proposed buildings.

Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Divinity School, made an important address at the Atlanta Convention, as President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Hiram College Notes

The college is having a fine opening with an exceptionally large Freshman class. Students are still coming.

The spirit of the student body was never better. The religious tone is the very best. The college Y. M. C. A. meetings are crowded and full of enthusiasm. Nearly all of the young men have identified themselves with the association. A corresponding spirit prevails among the young women.

The College Commons, inaugurated with the new year, is providing board in attractive quarters and style at cost. The majority of the young men are availing themselves of the advantages thus offered.

W. E. Gordon, from Jhansi, India, is enrolled as a student. Mr. Gordon was a former student at Hiram and is availing himself of his furlough to resume his studies. His children are at the Wharton Missionary Home in Hiram.

The Disciples' Club which was so valuable a feature of last year's work, has resumed its studies this year with still larger attendance and deeper interest. The program for the year, so far as now mapped out, will include the following topics:

A. The Campbells and the Presbyterians.
1. Presbyterianism of 1809.
2. Thomas Campbell and the Presbytery of Chartiers.
3. New Points of Emphasis in the Declaration and Address.
4. Alexander Campbell and his Relations with the Presbyterians subsequent to 1809.

B. Early Relations Between Disciples and Baptists.
1. Common Ground.
2. The Disciples and the Redstone Association.
3. Factors Which Produced the Break Between Disciples and Baptists.
4. The Present Baptist Position.

C. Polity Among the Disciples.
1. Thomas Campbell and the Problem of Polity.
2. Alexander Campbell and the Problem of Polity.
3. The Significance of the Problem in the Light of the Plea of the Disciples for Unity.
4. "The Marks of the True Church."

D. The Disciples and Evangelism.
1. Current Evangelism 100 Years Ago.
2. Beginnings Under Walter Scott.
3. Early Evangelism Among the Disciples and the Plea for Unity.
4. The Missionary Idea Among the Disciples: Genesis and Development.

So far as arranged President Bates, S. H. Bartlett, I. J. Cahill, J. E. Pounds and Professors Peckham, Dean and Stauffer are to be the lecturers. An hour and a half is given to each session, the last half hour to a general discussion of the topic of the evening.

Sunday-School Cause Prospers

Some Features of the Report of Secretary R. M. Hopkins and Others Made at the Atlanta Convention.

That the Sunday-schools of our brotherhood are making progress is evidenced by the reports of the secretaries made at Atlanta. Some of the points of advance noted are as follows:

1. The notable work for the Elementary Division done by Miss Hazel Lewis, since her appointment as elementary superintendent in 1912. Miss Lewis has traveled 27,656 miles during the past year, and has attended 24 schools of methods, given 82 addresses, 252 lectures and has conducted 83 conferences. She has spent 264 days in the field.

2. Progress in the Adult Division, under the superintendency of W. J. Clarke. The annual report covers only a period of 9 months. By June, 1914, 271 certified adult classes had been added to the 8,367 Disciple classes, reported January 1. This gives a total of 8,638 certified classes among the Disciples. The total enrollment of these classes today is about 350,000. Mr. Clarke has spent Secretary R. M. Hopkins.

229 days in the field, having traveled 20,608 miles, visiting 26 states. Special addresses made, 107; conferences conducted, 112. During the year 249 lectures in schools of methods were delivered.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

The following states have had Sunday-school workers under the direction of state boards during a part or all of last year: California, North, Fred B. Wallis; Colorado, Charles Wm. Dean; Illinois, Clarence L. DePew; Indiana, Garry L. Cook; Iowa, Leon S. Dudley; Kansas, David H. Owen; Kentucky, W. E. Frazee; Minnesota, Hugh Cooper; Missouri, District Superintendents; Nebraska, L. C. Oberlies; Ohio, Myron C. Settle; Oklahoma, H. S. Gilliam; Oregon, Mrs. Clara G. Esson; Tennessee, Kyle Brooks; Virginia, G. L. Carter; West Virginia, O. G. White; Wisconsin, J. Harry Bullock.

The secretaries have co-operated in the formation of new plans and ideas for teacher-training. It is to be hoped that the plan for syndicated courses of training—uniform texts to be used by all Disciples—can be carried out.

One of the most significant indications of progress during the year has been the series of schools of methods which have been successfully held. Schools are reported at Los Angeles, Cal.; San Jose, Cal.; St. Thomas, Ont., Can.; Grand Junction, Colo.; Arcadia, Ind.; Bethany Park, Ind.; Frankfort, Ind.; Hartford City, Ind.; Muncie, Ind.; Caldwell, Idaho; Lawrence, Kans.; Barbourville, Ky.; Lexington, Ky.; Louisville, Ky.; Owosso, Mich.; Kansas City, Mo.; Lebanon, Mo.; Lincoln, Neb.; Keuka Park, N. Y.; Kinston, N. C.; Cleveland, Ohio; Columbus, Ohio; Salem, Ore; Shelbyville, Tenn.; Richmond, Va.; Seattle, Wash.; Spokane, Wash.; Bethany College, W. Va. A total of 4,603 have been enrolled in these schools, as against 1,576 for the previous year.

Other signs of a better time in the Sunday-school field noted by the secretaries are: Greater co-operation between the Sunday-schools and colleges; the demand for a higher standard of uniform lessons; the church's growing consciousness of its responsibility for the religious education of its members; higher ideals for lesson committees; a more favorable attitude toward reading of the Bible in the public schools; growing literature of missionary education; enlarging work among negroes; front rank standard development; progress in the New Crusade, with the goal of winning 500,000 souls to Christ within five years.

DOUBLE BOON FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The recommendation which is printed below, will save our Sunday-schools thousands of dollars heretofore wasted on cheap candies. At the same time, it will give an expression to the real Christmas spirit that will bless the child, the home and the church.

Of all the wonderful discoveries in modern Bible-school work, nothing excels the "White Gifts for the King" in marvelous success. It makes the King's Birthday another and greater Decision Day. It develops the unselfish good will of child and adult. It turns back the tide of worldliness that has threatened the sweet wholesomeness of Christmas.

Even if the Sunday before Christmas had not long been recognized as Ministerial Relief Day in the churches, no fitter use could have been found for our gifts of substance than their consecration to those who have given all their life and labor to the King. In recognition of this, the impartial publishers of the "White Gifts" exercises, have put at the head of the suggestions for gifts of "Substance," all of which are fully subordinated to the gift of "Self" and "Service," this item:

"$———— To Ministerial Relief for those who, having given self and service fully, until disabled, should be made guests at the King's table."

Gifts in kind, as well as in cash, are usually made; a pound of rice, a bag of flour; a linen towel; a bolt of muslin. Scattered all over America are the 111 housholds supported wholly or in part supported by our pensions. No Bible-school is far away from one or more of these, and delivery can be made promptly and easily.

The sample packet of exercises and supplies will be sent free for examination to any superintendent or minister. On adoption, complete outfits according to size of Bible-school will be furnished, where the gifts are to be devoted to the veterans.

"RECOMMENDATION."

"The International Convention assembled in Atlanta, Georgia, October 7-14, 1914, recommends that all Bible-schools join the advance from Christmas treat to "Giving Christmas' and that, in harmony with the churches' observance of the Sunday before Christmas as Ministerial Relief Day and in view of the vital need of increasing our pension fund for ministers and missionaries, they forward their offerings to the Board of Ministerial Relief, Indianapolis, Ind.

"The convention further recommends that, in order to give this important day its largest spiritual value, the Board of Ministerial Relief furnish such schools as will use them, the supplies for the "White Gifts for the King" exercises with their emphasis upon the consecration of self and service as well as substance."

It is time to get ready for Christmas. Send today a postal card request for samples and particulars to

Flashlights

From the Annual Report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio, October 1, 1913, to September 30, 1914.

FROM THE MISSION FIELDS.

ADDITIONS: Africa, 1,034; China, 253; Cuba, 18 ; England, 132; India, 136; Japan, 155; Philippine Islands, 996. Total, 2,729.

MEDICAL: Hospitals and dispensaries, 22; medical missionaries, 18; treatments, 181,564, or about 500 daily or 20 hourly, a gain of 20,848 over last year. Two new hospitals have been erected, one at Harda, India, and one at Manila, Philippine Islands.

EDUCATIONAL: Schools and colleges, 115, a gain of 8; number in attendance, 5,494, a loss of 189. Of this number 281 are preparing for the ministry, a loss of 2. Educational work helps to make the work permanent.

ORPHANAGES: Number of orphanages, 3; number of orphans supported, 130, a loss of 45; smallest number in many years.

CHURCHES: Organized churches 154, a gain of 7; present membership, 15,445, a gain of 993. Year by year the number increases.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS: Number 308, a gain of 58; membership, 18,077, a gain of 839. The schools are among the most valuable agencies for the evangelization of the nations. The missionaries are seeking constantly to increase the number and efficiency of the schools.

PRINTING PRESSES: The Society conducts printing presses in the Philippine Islands, India and Africa. These do a vast amount of good. They are all being enlarged. The press in Africa alone printed 3,560 books and booklets, embracing 292,000 pages.

MISSIONARIES: The number of missionaries is 176, a loss of 5. Some have died, some have broken in health, and others have resigned. This is the number in spite of the fact that fifteen new missionaries have gone to the field.

FEES: The medical fees reached $11,749, a gain of $791. The school fees raised were $9,060, a gain of $1,693; total fee, $20,809, a gain of $2,484. This is the largest amount in fees the Society has ever received in any one year. The largest medical fees are from the Philippine Islands, $9,530. The largest school fees are from China, $3,528.

Secretary F. M. Rains.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS: Government grants made during the year in aid of our work amounted to $6,143. This is the largest amount granted the Society in any one year.

NEW BUILDINGS: Money was expended for new buildings last year as follows: China, $17,200; Japan; $1,500; Africa, $4,823; India, $8,750; Philippine Islands, $12,318; Cuba, $4,331; Tibet, $1,100; total, $63,422.

EXPENDITURES: Last year the money expended on the field was as follows: China, $165,797; Japan, $76,725; India, $60,282; Philippine Islands, $54,943; Africa, $40,567; Tibet, $12,812; Cuba, $10,336; England, $7,424; Scandinavia, $1,629; Hawaiian Islands, $1,262; Turkey, $372. It requires over $1,200 daily to carry on the work of the Society.

NATIVE HELPERS: The native arm of the evangelistic service is most important and is as follows: Africa, 286; China, 201; Cuba, 2; India, 148; Japan, 87; Philippine Islands, 81; total 805.

MISSION HOMES: No missionaries in the world are better housed. Good homes conserve good health and increased efficiency. There are 54 homes worth $207,560. This includes lots and lands.

ENDEAVORER SOCIETIES: Already the missionaries are developing Endeavor Societies. They number 71 with a membership of 4,123.

CHURCH BUILDINGS: On the whole field we have only 149 church buildings and chapels, a gain of 11. The value is $250,354.

RECEIPTS: Native contributions for missions, $6,169; contributions for self-support, $16,192; total native contributions, $23,692. Contributions by missionaries, $4,130. Total raised on field, $47,293.

W. D. Endres Begins Quincy, Ill., Work.

W. D. Endres, who has served the church at Kirksville, Mo., for several years, has begun his new work at First Church, Quincy, Ill., to which he was recently unanimously called. Mr. Endres succeeds J. M. Rudy, the "fighting parson," who resigned recently to become a candidate for nomination as representative on the progressive ticket. He was defeated in this by Roy Johnson, a young lawyer. Mr. Endres is a graduate of Christian University, Canton, Mo., and afterwards was graduated from Drake. He is a pulpit orator of ability and has a strong personality. The Quincy church has a membership of four hundred. Influential members of the congregation state that the church needs just such a man as Mr. Endres will no doubt prove to be—one who can unite all factions of the congregation and cause them to "pull together." The work at Kirksville is now in the hands of R. W. Lilley, who Mr. Endres reports, has started off with fine promise.

Dedication at Billings, Mont.

Dedicatory services for the handsome new structure of the Billings, Mont., First Church, were held two weeks ago. There were three principal services, the dedicatory sermon at eleven o'clock by I. N. McCash, president of Spokane University; a fellowship meeting at 2:30 o'clock addressed by Rev. Walter Jordan of Butte, formerly pastor of the church; an evening service at 7:30 o'clock with greetings from other ministers, and a sermon by Dr. McCash. The church building is a renaissance of the Spanish mission quite common in southern California but not often seen in the Northwest.

Special Sermons at Rockford, Ill.

William B. Clemmer, pastor of Central Christian Church, Rockford, Ill., announces a series of popular sermons for Sunday evenings, the topics to be on everyday life surrounding the theme of Home. His subjects are: October 11, "Memories of Home;" October 18, "Love and Locksmiths;" October 25, "The Wedded Life."

L. S. Cupp Pleased With New Work.

That Louis S. Cupp is delighted with his new field at Eugene, Ore., is evidenced by the following message sent to a Missouri daily: "Took charge of church in Eugene September 13. Membership over 1,000. Best building on coast. Forty-eight added first three Sundays. Modern city of 15,000. Three railroads and two interurban lines. Seat of University and of our own Bible University. A land of fine fruits and flowers and a sportsman's paradise."

Two Live Endeavor Societies in West.

In the only church of the Disciples of Christ in Utah, that in Salt Lake City, there is a live Christian Endeavor society of thirty-five members. They are interested in missionary work in Japan, and give $25 a year to a mission school at Jotsuya. Fresno, Cal., county Endeavorers are heartily at work in the campaign for a "dry" California. They have taken up the tithing-week idea with enthusiasm, and will give a tenth of their income for one week to temperance work. They have also started a "Christian Endeavor World" campaign to secure funds with which to send a representative to Chicago next year.

Attendance at Butler.

Attendance figures a few days ago, at Butler College, showed the following results: Men enrolled 120, women enrolled 187; total 307. Of these 120 are new students, and 187 are old students. The increase in attendance over last year comes with the old students. The decrease in the mortality rate is especially gratifying. Another gratifying feature is the large number of seniors. It seems certain that this year's class will outnumber last year's class. Since the class of 1914 broke all records for size this situation calls for congratulation.

Disciples at Purdue.

Among the newcomers at Purdue University ninety have stated preference for or membership in the Christian church. This is not as large a number as last year. However the Students' Bible Class has started with an enrollment on the first two Sundays of 150 or more and an attendance that promises to break all records. It is hoped to enroll 200 and to maintain an average attendance at class of ninety or more. There was an average attendance of between fifty and sixty last year.

C. M. Chilton at Liberty, Mo.

Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., is rejoicing in the coming to this church, October 19, of C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo. Mr. Chilton will hold a meeting of two weeks or more. Mr. Frank will assist the St. Joseph church in a return meeting in November.

Central, Youngstown, Scores Victory.

Nine hundred and sixty-six is the record of Youngstown, Central, school, for two weeks ago. Until this year there have never been as many as six hundred during September of any year. Only five times in the entire history of the church has there been reported a larger attendance than on "Ryan Day," two weeks ago. W. D. Ryan, the pastor, is proud and happy. Work in earnest will now start to secure six hundred new scholars in six months' time. The result of the campaign will be to bring the regular attendance up close to the 1,000 mark.

C. W. B. M. in Kansas and Indiana.

The C. W. B. M. membership in Kansas grew last year from 3,823 to 4,979. At the close of the year, June 30, 1914, Indiana had 7,389 members, reports the Indiana Bulletin. A gain of 2,611 would reach the membership aim of 10,000.

Fishing in Michigan.

J. H. Wilson, of Winchester, Ind., spent his vacation in Northern Michigan, and preached five Sundays for the Burt Lake church. He also held a short meeting for them, with sixteen baptisms as a result. The Burt Lake brethren want a good man to locate with them, permanently.

Warren, O., Promotes Prayer-meetings.

The churches of Warren, Ohio, have entered into a united effort to secure the cooperation of all Christian people in building up the mid-week prayer-meetings of the church.

Kentucky to Washington, D. C.

J. P. Bornwasser, who was graduated from The College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., last June, has accepted a call to the church at Bennings, D. C., a suburb of Washington. He began his work there the first Sunday in October.

A. L. Wills to Columbia University.

A. L. Wills, College of the Bible, Lexington, 1914, has entered Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary. Mr. Wills won the Southern Inter-Collegiate Oratorical contest in the spring of 1913.

New Sunday-school Worker for Kentucky.

Roy K. Roadruck of Morocco, Indiana, has accepted the call of the Kentucky Christian Bible-school Association to become the Bible-school Field Worker for West Kentucky, and has already entered upon his labors.

Kindergarten Work in Japan.

The city records show that our kindergarten in Osaka, Japan, begun in the M. B. Madden home, is the first Christian kindergarten in that great city nearly as large as Chicago.

Miss Emma Lyon on Furlough.

Miss Emma A. Lyon, principal of the Girls College in Nankin, China, reached home this fall on her furlough. She is spending a little time with relatives in Toronto. She will go from there to Washington, Pa., her home.

Drake University Has Wireless Outfit.

Drake University is rejoicing in the possession of a complete wireless outfit, including telegraph apparatus. It is a gift from Samuel J. Wifoat. The executive committee, at their recent meeting, adopted a vote of thanks. It is very complete and cost $500.

New Workers for Nanking.

Mrs. Verna Waugh, Chillicothe, Mo., has been employed for special work by the Union Bible Seminary of Nanking, China. She sailed on the S. S. China, September 19. Miss E. Grace Taylor, of Harlan, Iowa, sailed on the same ship under special contract as teacher in the University of Nanking.

Des Moines Disciples Meet.

On Tuesday evening, Oct. 20, the Disciples' Union of Des Moines, met in its semi-annual banquet at Central Church. Two subjects were uppermost on that occasion: The Atlanta Convention, reports of which were given by returning delegates; and the "Billy" Sunday meeting, which is now busily preparing. The tabernacle is under construction.

Three New Professors for Drake.

Drake University opens with three new professors. Prof. Van Katwijk comes from the National Conservatory of Music of Helsingfors, Finland, to take charge of the piano department. Edwin B. Evans, head of the Dramatic Art, comes from Illinois. Irvin E. Stringfellow takes a position in the Bible College. He is a Drake graduate and has spent three years at Princeton.

SOWING AND REAPING.

Gal. 6:1-10. Memory Verses, 1, 2.

Golden Text.—Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. 6:7.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(1) Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted. (2) Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. (3) For if a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. (4) But let each man prove his own work, and then shall he have his glorying in regard of himself alone, and not of his neighbor. (5) For each man shall bear his own burden.

(6) But let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things. (7) Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (8) For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life. (9) And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. (10) So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 1. Brethren: Paul shows how very affectionately he regarded the Galatian Christians by this word. Even: It was not to be expected that their lives should be entirely free from sin. A man: He refers not to Christians alone but to all men. Overtaken in a trespass: The sin which Paul has in mind is the sin which comes at a sudden temptation. There are other sins which cannot be dealt with in this manner. Ye who are spiritual: Spirit filled people are so for the very purpose of filling other lives with the spirit. Restore such a one in the spirit of gentleness: This is a sure protection against "otherworldism." True piety expresses itself, not in the peculiar intonations of voice or forbidding gravity of facial expression, but in such Christian service as the apostle recommends. Looking to thyself lest thou also be tempted: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

v. 2. Bear ye one another's burdens: The word here translated "burden" means "heavy weight." It is that kind of a burden which cannot be borne by oneself. There is not one of us but is carrying burdens today which we would have broken down under had it not been for the help of others. As we have been helped let us help others. And so fulfil the law of Christ: See Matt. 8:17.

v. 3. If a man thinketh himself to be something, when he is nothing: "Those who suppose themselves to excel all others in piety, understanding, etc., while they are harsh, censorious, and overbearing, prove that they have not the charity that thinketh no evil: and, in the sight of God, are only as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal" (Clarke). He deceiveth himself: The springs of self deception are very deeply rooted.

v. 4. But let each man: It is an individual matter about which he is now speaking. Shall he have his glorying in regard of himself alone: Paul is here disapproving that empty party pride, which is so common today. Men become conceited over the accomplishments of members of their family, or fellowtownsmen, or members of their party, when they themselves are in no way responsible for the accomplishments.

v. 5. For each man shall bear his own burden: This is a different word from that used in verse 2. This word was used to denote the "pack" which beasts of burden carried. The "pack" which we are to bear as Christians consists of those things which none other can do for us. No one else can confess Christ for us: no one can be baptized for us: no one can do the Christian service which Christ calls upon us for doing.

v. 6. Let him that is taught—communicate: It is a deep debt which we owe to those who teach us. In this verse Paul is teaching that Christians should support their Bible teachers. The religious "sponger" ought to be helped by this passage.

v. 7. Be not deceived: Do not think you evade your own burden. God is not mocked: God is not to be treated with contempt. That shall he also reap: The law of the spiritual harvest is like unto the law of natural harvest.

v. 8. He that soweth unto his own flesh: The flesh is the evil nature of man.

v. 9. We shall reap, if we faint not: The rewards of righteousness are not always paid at the end of the day, but they are certain to be paid.

v. 10. And especially toward them that are of the household of faith: We are perfectly justified in showing special attention to the needy of our own faith. Charity begins at home.

Christianity and the Prohibition Question

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

A very smart attitude is assumed by many young and middle aged men today. They can "take it or leave it alone." They believe in being broad-minded and in assuming a superior position. They think that they show their strength by doing as they please about wines and liquors. But one does not know that he can leave it alone until he tries it. He knows he can take it but he needs to demonstrate that he can leave it alone. We are familiar with the chap who boasts, "Oh, I take a glass of beer whenever I feel like it." We do not estimate him highly. Nor should we highly assess the seemingly broad-minded hero who, "takes it or leaves it alone." At best he is making his brother to offend and at worst he is on the way to become a "Down-and-outer."

Rev. John R. Ewers.

HOW TO HELP.

The strong are to bear the burdens of the weak. The best way to help is to prohibit. "How It Worked in Kansas" makes fine reading. Empty jails and full banks. Fewer imbeciles. Fewer inmates in almshouses. Greater happiness and prosperity all through the state. It is the truth. We are to help our weaker brother by removing temptation. That is the big factor. Just as we are bound to have wars when we prepare forts and guns, just so are we bound to have drunkards, murderers and idiots when we provide open saloons. There is only one attitude for a Christian and that is absolute national prohibition. What we now demand is a concerted, consistent, nation-wide wiping out of the entire liquor business in manufacture, shipment and sale. The tidal wave mounts high.

CHRISTIANITY HANDICAPPED.

From all sides we are hearing that this is to be a hard winter for the churches. It is true. But the churches are going to meet this terrible crisis by a fine display of new energy, by a wonderful deepening of spiritual life. Only thus can we even hold our own. Skeptics are being made, by the war, by the thousands. "Where is now thy God?" they tauntingly cry. God has some job on his hands when the Kaiser on the one hand and the Archbishop of Canterbury on the other hand ask him to bless their arms and lead their hosts to victory. Brothers fight and then ask God to bless them. What high nonsense! What sublime absurdity! Handicapped by war abroad and by whiskey at home the church is in a bad way. The other day I passed four wide-open saloons to enter one of our churches. I felt tortured to think of these four gates of hell being constantly wide open while our church was open and active only twice a week. A sleepy church surrounded by four grinning devils.

BILLY SUNDAY'S STORY.

Billy Sunday tells a most effective story about the way in which they determine how crazy a man is in one of our western states. They put him into a cement room with a tap running. They give him a mop. If he tries to mop up the water without turning off the tap they conclude that he is hopelessly demented; but if he turns off the water and then mops up the room they conclude that he has some hope of recovery. Nuf-said. States and counties which spend their time in mopping up the wreckage of open saloons are crazy indeed. Shut it off!

First then close the saloons. Remove the temptations. Then there is one other thing that can be done. Many men's classes now are actively putting men on on their feet and many women's classes are helping the wives and families. This is modern good-samaritanism. I know of many classes where men are being made over in this manner.

"SHORTY."

I remember one fellow six feet and six. Drink had brought him to the depths. In his home he asked me to pray for him. One day he met me and told me about his wife and little girl and how ashamed he was of the little he did for them. He joined the church. There is no half-way station in reform. He took his Saviour into partnership. He never took another drop. He won back his lost business, bought a home, established a fine office and today controls one whole section of a state in his prospering business. If the Lord could save "Shorty" he can save anyone. Here is our program: Close the saloons, then help the fellows who are down and out. When saloons are all closed this class will be small.

CONVICTION.

"Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion." One class of men draws out my unlimited disgust—the broadly tolerant men with no conviction about the liquor business. "Oh, its all right, I'm not bothering about it; if a man wants to take a glass now and then I have no objection." Great God, have we no backbone at all! Have we lost all sense of bearing the burdens of the weak! It is the old, old story—"Am I my brother's keeper?" How long does it take you to learn?

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 28.

My Favorite Passage.

This is to be a quotation service. We are invited to make use of those portions of the Bible that appeal to us most strongly. The decision as to what verses to quote will be easy for some of us, because certain verses have come to us as aids in so many crises that they are for us the heart of the Bible. Others will be embarrassed by the riches of the Bible. Their experience has been wide and deep and they have been instructed and quickened by many kinds of scripture. The unfortunate person is he who is so little acquainted with the sacred writings that he has no favorite passages. This person will probably be absent from the prayer-meeting.

WORDS OF CONFESSION.

"Other nations have been our teachers in art and wisdom and government. But she (Israel) is our mistress in pain and in patience, teaching men with what conscience they should bear the chastening of the Almighty, with what hope and humility they should wait for God. Surely not less lovable, but more human, that her pale cheeks flush for a moment with the hate of the enemy and the assurance of revenge. Her passion is soon gone, for she feels her guilt to be greater; and, seeking forgiveness, her last word is what man's must ever be, praise to the grace and mercy of God." This is the comment of George Adam Smith on the last words of the Book of Micah. Micah is only one of the books that instruct us in the art of penitence. In these days we are growing doubtful about the propriety of public confession of sin that is not sin known to the public. We can use the scripture to express our penitential feeling.

WORDS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

We need to be brought back frequently to the fundamental question of conduct. The artist mistakes art for the whole of life. The thinker judges men by their logic. The worshipper mistakes emotion for spirituality. The religious man is thought to be the man of feeling. He is, but his feeling must be connected rationally with conduct if he is to wear the name of Christ. There is a vital defect in a prayer meeting in which there is not frequent use of the prophets of Israel. The prophets were champions of a God of justice and kindness and they insisted that God was reasonable in his requirements. That priests and kings are afraid of the Bible in the language of the people is natural, for it lays upon the people the duty of passing upon the acts of their leaders and of declining to submit uncomplainingly to the word of authority.

WORDS OF HOPE.

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust." The shortness of human life is often dwelt upon by the biblical writers. The vanity of human achievement receives emphasis. When Koheleth writes, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," he does not set himself over against all the other writers of the Bible. Others felt what he felt. Shallow optimism is about as bad as the blackest pessimism. Great spiritual leaders know what despair is. The Bible would not be worth reading if it gave us only roseate views of life. Its optimism is the kind that must be won by hard labor. It grows in the dust and heat of the world. When the shallow optimist quotes a great text of the Bible, his tones betray ignorance of its meaning. The words of hope found in the Bible are for those who can understand the man who says all is vanity and a striving after wind.

I have longed for thy salvation, O Jehovah;
And thy law is my delight.
Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee;
And let thine ordinances help me.
The opening of thy words giveth light.

WHY Your School Should Use the Bethany System of Sunday-school Literature.

1. Because it is more easily handled than any other series in the practical work of the school.
   Thus It Helps the Superintendent.
2. Because its Teacher's Manuals contain fully a third more material than the manuals of any other series.
   Thus It Helps the Teacher.
3. Because its arrangement for study, its illustration and mechanical attractiveness are unequaled by any other body of Graded literature.
   Thus It Helps the Pupil.
4. Because it is Scriptural in teaching.
   Thus It Helps the Cause of Bible Study.
5. Because it is used not only by Disciples, but also by Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, etc.
   Thus It Helps in Graded Union Work.
6. Because it is free from the sectarian spirit, and is produced by the editorial cooperation of the foremost religious bodies.
   Thus It Helps the Cause of Christian Unity, for which the Disciples Stand.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this fall. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

A Story With a Moral

Here is a story which came to us at the Atlanta Convention. It is a story worth reading, especially if you are interested in higher ideals for Sunday Schools in general and in particular for your school.

A certain Sunday school of the Southland, in one of the largest and best known churches of the brotherhood of Disciples, determined last summer to adopt graded literature in all its departments. (Previous to this time only the Beginners and Primary Departments were using the Graded Lessons.)

The Director of Religious Education in the school is a graduate of the University of Virginia, and for many years was a teacher in one of the leading educational institutions of the South. He is a ripe scholar, without prejudice and with enthusiasm for high educational ideals—and withal a very practical Sunday school man.

This educational director called his nineteen teachers together. He said, "We will send for samples of the graded literature produced by our three leading publishers." The teachers agreed upon the plan. The literature was ordered.

When the sample texts arrived, the Director again called together his teachers. "Now," he said, "we will tear off the covers of these Intermediate text books, in all three systems."

"Now," said the Director, "I will read to you a sample lesson from each of these Intermediate texts. I will choose corresponding lessons in each of the texts. I want you to listen to the reading from the three systems of literature, weigh each carefully, then tell me which you think is best adapted to the educational work we are doing for your children and mine."

The reading began. The chapter from System Number One was read. Then from Number Two. Last, from Number Three. The Director went down the line of nineteen teachers, asking each of them which treatment of the lesson would aid him best in training his pupils in the Christian religion. What was the result? Each of the nineteen teachers voted. ALL VOTED without exception for System Number Two.

A second lesson was read by the Director from System Number One, System Number Two, and System Number Three. The same question as before was put to the nineteen teachers. When the teachers had all voted, it was found that they were all again agreed in their preference for System Number Two.

SYSTEM NUMBER TWO WAS THE BETHANY SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

OF COURSE, there was no hesitation on the part of the Religious Director of that Sunday school and his teachers in making choice of literature for their school.

This story has a moral, and the moral is for you, Mr. Pastor, Mr. Superintendent, Mr. Teacher.

Have you made a test of the merits of the various systems of Graded Literature available, before deciding upon the spiritual food that is to go into the character of your young people? Do this, and without delay. January is the nick of time to make a WISE CHOICE. Do not neglect in your examination ANY GOOD SYSTEM published.

Gentlemen:

We would like to make a thorough comparison of the various systems of Graded Sunday school literature, with view to placing in our school what we find is the best. Please send me samples of the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Frank Waller Allen, pastor of First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen.

BAD PEOPLE AND GOOD.

Good people are only half as good, bad people are only half as bad, as other people regard them. The word "sinner," just to look at it or to apply it to a person, looks and sounds unutterably horrible. If you wish it to look as rose-colored and soft as a summer sunset, and sound as sweetly as a lover's whisperings, just apply it to your own actions. It is the other fellow who sins, and it is oneself who makes mistakes.

Individuals are good as they relate themselves to the ideals and movements which produce a more just and righteous civilization. He is good who fellowships with high purposes and men who purpose high.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The War and the Future of Religion

TOMORROW, WHEN THIS WAR IS OVER, WILL BE THE GREATEST DAY FOR RELIGION SINCE THE CHRISTIAN ERA BEGAN.

Already there are evidences of the beginning of a vast spiritual reconstruction.

The non-combatant part of the world has been shocked into a mood of profound meditation, disillusionment and inquiry that is pregnant with new and great impulses toward God and spiritual life.

And the combatant part of the world will some day return from the field of carnage to the presence of peace stricken with grief and humiliation and awe, and stretching forth lame hands in piteous appeal to God.

It is through trouble, disaster, and the wreck caused by sin, that this human race of ours grows conscious of God and enriches its experience of Him. It is a paradox, and an infinitely sad paradox, that what God wants to do for us He cannot do until He has allowed us to taste experiences from which His loving nature would defend us.

It would be His way—the divine way—to lead mankind by steady increment of life up to finer fellowship with Himself. It would be His way to make each new stage of culture a higher revelation of Himself; to make each increase of secular prosperity a fresh occasion for gratitude in the heart of prosperous mankind; to make each advance of civilization a step toward His Kingdom.

But the somber fact is that progress in the attainment of the world's goods, knowledge, wealth and civilization —goods which the divine Father wills that we should have—is often made at the expense of the thing He most wishes us to have and we most need to attain, that is, spiritual fellowship with Himself. And when our prosperity and our culture and our success have blinded our eyes to the higher values, or made us content with so little of the higher values as we may have learned to enjoy, then there is but one way left by which God can make us aware of the supreme good, and that is to shock our souls through trouble, through the reversal of life's normal processes, through actually taking away from us the goods which shut Him out.

It is to the humbled soul alone that God can make His disclosure of the basic meanings and values of life. Culture often puffs up the soul. Wealth often hardens the soul. And civilization often surfeits the soul. Religion may continue, but it is formal, institutional, customary, respectable and lacking in vital spiritual reality.

Only with the soul that feels its leanness, its hollowness, its helplessness, can the divine will have its gracious way. What we Christians have seen in individual lives, and many of us have experienced, of the spiritual reconstruction made possible upon the ruins of this world's possessions, is a fair analogy of the spiritual reconstruction our social order is bound to undergo in the tomorrow that follows the war.

It will be that, or it will be moral chaos. And none of us with a grain of faith believes it will be moral chaos.

No, stricken with shame, the blood-stained, debt-burdened nations will return to their devastated fields, their decimated factories, their bereaved homes, and the hearts of men will cry out for God, for God who alone into all this wreck of goods and hopes and loves can bring reorganization and comfort and healing.

Religion after the war will bear the aspect of a new religion. The obsession of much that is old and merely traditional will have been broken by the shock and awe of war. Much that is now technically orthodox will fall away in the presence of the surging call of humanity for life, the life of God.

The divisions amongst Christians will seem based on petty and contemptible differences. The remoteness from human life and the utter irrelevance of much that is in our historic creeds will stand revealed when the fountains of human passion for God are opened up. Confronted by the tide of emotion and appeal which the war has already started rising, the Church will be ashamed that it ever wasted the world's time and lost the world's patience by trying to make out that the living God is gravely concerned over such matters as the historic episcopate or the correct mode of baptism.

In that hour God's great life-commandments will stand out imperially, and His alleged letter-commandments will confess their own unreality.

* * *

This is not the time nor is this the pen to draw the outlines of that richer faith toward which many forces have been steadily impelling mankind for many decades, and which this war will make more clear and more inevitable. The mood of the present hour is a mood of expectancy. We are in the stage of wonder—and if wonder is the beginning of knowledge it is also the beginning of religion.

But there are several things we do know:

We know that mankind is disenchanted with respect to the glamour of its civilization.

We may be sure that the secular life of Christendom, its politics, its economics, its industry, its culture, will be thoroughly reorganized when this war is done.

We may also be sure that from August, 1914, will date a new epoch in the history of the world.

We may be sure of these things. And we may not doubt that the spirit of the creative and redeeming God is brooding over the chaos of the world and that He will bring to birth some child upon whose shoulders the social order of the future shall rest.

Perhaps Christ will be born again!

Let us not say perhaps; let us open our eyes, and behold his star already in the sky!

And with one heart let us go seek the place where even now the prince is lying.

The Limits of Christian Fellowship

BY ERRETT GATES.

Dealing not with concrete instances, but with the principles involved in the question of fellowship, Dr. Gates' article is especially timely just now when the tumult and shouting over the California excommunication case is dying down. He shows how radically un-Christian the whole idea of excluding a Christian brother or a Christian Church is. If the historic principles of the Disciples of Christ condemn the policy of exclusion much more does the teaching of our Lord himself. Dr. Gates carries the question up to the mind of Christ and finds there an answer plain and unescapable.

WHEN is a disciple of Christ justified in saying to his brother: "I will withdraw my love and fellowship from you and treat you as if you were not my brother. I will not worship with you in the services of the church and if the church does not cast you out of its fellowship and turn away from you, I will turn away from the church and refuse to have fellowship with it?" In other words, what is the limit of Christian love and fellowship?

This is the question which Peter propounded to Jesus in the inquiry, "How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him?" Is there not a limit to the Christian love and regard with which I should treat a brother? Jesus as much as says to Peter, There should be no limit to your willingness to love and forgive your brother. In the thought of Jesus "seventy times seven" is the symbol of boundlessness. It does not mean that love and forgiveness should cease when the precise number of 490 offenses against you has been reached. When that number has been reached there is no more reason for refusing forgiveness than when seven before it was reached. Seventy times seven is not a fatal sum which naturally and automatically and divinely exhausts forgiveness and relieves one of the duty of further patience and consideration.

LIMITS OF A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Does a mother ever ask, How oft shall my son sin against me and I forgive him? Does a mother ever set a fixed sum of offences where her love and forgiveness end? Does she not go on loving and forgiving her wayward boy when all of her neighbors and the rest of the family have ceased to forgive? As long as he lives and as far as he wanders she follows him with her love; and if he ever returns to her door and asks comfort and companionship, she gives them. She loves and is willing to forgive seventy times seven. That is the measure of brotherly love as a disciple of Christ.

But you ask, Who is this, my brother, who should be forgiven seventy times seven? Is he my brother according to the flesh, the man who lives with me under my father's roof in the same family? Jesus taught his disciples to love and forgive more than one's own kinsmen according to the flesh. Is my brother he who is my fellow church member who worships and communes with me at the Lord's table? Jesus had no thought of limiting the love of his disciples to their fellow-members in the Jewish church. Is my brother he who is my fellow-citizen, my countryman, he of my race and language?

WHAT JESUS SAYS.

Brotherhood, as Jesus taught it, overran the boundaries of family, of church, of race, and embraced within its folds every child of God beneath the sun, of whatever color, or race, or tongue. Jesus used the term "brother" in two senses, a narrower religious sense, and in a broader human sense. When he said to his disciples, "One is your master, and all ye are brethren," he meant it doubtless in the narrower sense of those who sat at his feet and listened to his words and joined his company. When his brothers with his mother sought him on one occasion, and the word was brought to him that his mother and his brothers were seeking him, he said, "Who is my mother and who are my brethren?" And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, "Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father who is in heaven, he is my brother, and sister, and mother." He was then thinking of that spiritual brotherhood of all good men who were doing God's will.

The question which Peter brought to him, "How oft shall my brother sin against me," doubtless refers to this religious brotherhood.

But there was a wider sense in which he used the word, as when he said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Here the word neighbor stands for brother in the universal human sense, and includes all those who, like the man ministered to by the good Samaritan, are in need, whether in fellowship of the religious society to which you belong, or the man outside of it. The duty to love my brother in the church does not carry with it the duty to exclude all other men from my love and forgiveness. As a follower of Jesus Christ I must do good to all men, but especially to those who are of the household of faith.

FELLOWSHIP WITHIN THE CHURCH.

But let us limit our inquiry to the brother in the narrower religious sense, and ask, what is the limit of love and fellowship within the Christian Society? Is the duty of love and fellowship within the church boundless? "How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him," and of course, go on extending fellowship to him? Can there be no end of patient endurance of him?

Suppose my brother falls into sin, is he still my brother, and shall I do what I can to preserve fellowship with him? He falls into sin not merely once, but again and again, shall I go on loving and forgiving him endlessly? I should, if as often as he sins he turns away from his sin and seeks forgiveness. When I extended Christian fellowship to him at the beginning of his Christian life, I did not ask him if he had reached perfection of goodness, or lay upon him perfect goodness and sinlessness as a test of fellowship. The church does not lay claim to the attainment of perfection; but it does ask that its members strive to be perfect as their Father in heaven is perfect. And until every one of us attains perfection the church must bear with and be ready to forgive the imperfect. The man who makes a misstep and falls into sin is not wholly bad. There may be possibilities of great goodness and virtue in him. The church should be like a patient mother to her erring ones. That does not mean to overlook and condone faults, but to be tireless in seeking a remedy for them. The church must care for its own, and the strong bear the infirmities of the weak. It is not care merely to judge and condemn and excommunicate; but to protect and educate and inspire and lead. We are our brother's keeper.

TREATMENT OF ENEMIES.

But suppose my brother injures me without cause and becomes my enemy; shall I love and keep fellowship with him? The enmity of your brother does not excuse you from loving him. Your enemy is doubtless somebody's friend, well-beloved and tender; and he certainly is God's child. Both of you live together in your Father's great house. Enmity between men is the utmost reach of human disfellowship, but the distance between enemies is a not impassable gulf. An enemy is not a creature of another species. He is still human and as long as he lives there is a possibility of converting him from an enemy into a friend. Have you ever seriously tried it? W. T. Stead wrote in a book which he left behind, "My enemies, what good have I done them? For an enemy is the man with whom you have failed. It may not be your fault, but if he is your enemy, you have failed; for it is failure when any fail to realize that One is your Father, and all ye are brethren. Whom you dislike, that is an enemy, a failure—have you ever done anything to make him a success?"

WHAT JESUS SAYS.

I can not even turn away from my enemy, and say, "I have no more responsibility for him." Jesus said, "Love your enemies; Do good to them that hate you; Bless them that curse you; Pray for them that despitefully use you, that you may be the sons of your Father who is in heaven."

But there is another thing that men make the cause of estrangement and disfellowship in the church besides sin and personal injury; it is difference of opinion. Have I sinned against my brother when I express a religious opinion which differs from his? How oft shall my brother differ from me and I still treat him as a brother? Until seven times? What would Jesus have answered to such a question? Would he have said as some men have thought he said, I say not unto you until seven times, but until the second time? Forgive him the first time, but if he dares to express a thought which conflicts with your thoughts a second time, turn away from him and treat him as a heathen and a publican. Of course Jesus never said that, and what is more he never said anything that implies that. It never seemed to occur to him to base Christian love and fellowship on correctness of opinions. If he taught that love and forgiveness should be exercised without limit toward a brother who sins against me, how much more should love and forgiveness be exercised toward a brother who differs in opinion with me. Who has committed the wrong, the man who has expressed a differing opinion or the one who has seized upon it to hate and malign and renounce fellowship with a brother? Such things might take place among political parties, or between medical schools based on doctrines and opinions; but it is inconceivable how such a thing could take place in the church of God which is based on brotherly love and fellowship. Those who do such things always give themselves a good reason for doing it; it is to preserve the church from doctrines which they think false.

THE QUESTION PUT TO DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

Their plan is to run false doctrine out of the church by running in strife and enmity; and thus the last state of the church is worse than the first.

But the last place we should expect to find opinions made a test of fellowship would be among the people with whom we are identified—the disciples of Christ. Yet we have not entirely escaped the baleful example of the first great mistake made by the church after Jesus' day, when it turned the company of believers—the church—into a school of thinkers and philosophers. Since that day the church has been more careful about what men thought than the way they lived. There was a time when it was safer to be a bad man and believe correctly, than to be a good man and believe incorrectly. The criminal was then less dangerous than the heretic. Who were these men who were dragged from their homes without warning and thrust into dungeons without due process of law; and after a trial which was a mockery of justice and fairness, were torn limb from limb, and were chained like wild beasts to piles of wood and burned to death? They must have been enemies of their kind, desperate criminals, doers of all kinds of wickedness, to have earned such a fate; who were they? They were good fathers and loving husbands; they loved their neighbors as they loved themselves; they did justly, loved mercy and walked humbly with God; they had clean hands and pure hearts. They were the best men of their communities.

PERSECUTION IN EARLY DAYS OF THE MOVEMENT.

But they did not believe in the doctrines of the ruling church, and they were put to death. For them there was no forgiveness. They had sinned the unpardonable sin—they dared to differ in opinion from the ecclesiastical rulers.

The fathers of the present movement represented by the Disciples of Christ, tasted the bitterness of persecution for difference of opinion, they were cast out from the fellowship of their people, and every means was taken to hurt them that was in the legal power of their persecutors. They were compelled to go alone, and when they set up new churches in which to worship God, they said, We will not build upon men's human opinions and make them tests of fellowship and causes of disfellowship. It is passing strange now that among a people who are following in their paths there should ever arise a persecution for difference of religious opinion. It is not often that it happens, but sometimes it does. One disciple turning away from another disciple of Christ treating him as an alien and a criminal because of difference of opinion! Such a thing ought not to be named among us, who have always proclaimed to the world that our unity was a unity of faith and not of opinion, and that we stood fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made us free.

ARE WE TRUE TO OUR PRINCIPLES?

Suppose a man presents himself here for membership in this church and says, "I believe that Jesus is the Christ the son of God, and I want to follow him," dare we question him any further? Not if we are true to the principles of the movement we represent. Suppose it became known, sometime after he took fellowship here, that he believed in the doctrine of evolution; could we with good conscience say to him, "Brother, it is not possible for you to believe in that doctrine and keep our fellowship; you must either give it up or give up your membership in this church." Suppose it became known still further that he believed in the doctrine of universal salvation; would that be sufficient cause for withdrawing our fellowship from him? I myself do not believe in that doctrine; but if a man who does believe in it comes and asks for my Christian fellowship, saying that he believes in Jesus with all his heart and wants to live his life he may have my fellowship.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL QUOTED.

Alexander Campbell said in the Christian Baptist in 1826: "The Scriptures speak of the forbearance of God, and teach that Christians in certain cases should forbear with one another in cases of injury sustained, but never, that I can see, on account of matters of opinion. A person might as well be said to forbear with his natural brother because he was only ten years old, or five feet high, or because he had grey eyes; as to forbear with his Christian brother because he differed from him in some opinions. And I am willing to carry this principle to its greatest possible extent; though as you say, there is and must be a stopping place. So long as any man, woman or child declares his confidence in Jesus of Nazareth as God's own Son, that he was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification; or in other words, that Jesus is the Messiah, the saviour of men, and so long as he exhibits a willingness to obey him in all things according to his knowledge, so long will I receive him as a Christian brother and treat him as such."

I have quoted these words from Alexander Campbell, not because I think he settles the matter either for you or me, but because he was a great and respected teacher among us and has in these words expressed the fundamental principle on which our fellowship is built. It has been the aim of this body to establish a fellowship as broad, as all-embracing as discipleship in the company of Jesus; to make it possible for every one who believes in Jesus Christ and wants to serve him, to have a Christian fellowship in that belief and service alone. That is a platform broad enough and simple enough to unite all of the people of God. I count myself fortunate to be a minister among a people with such a platform of union. If this basis of union will not cure the divisions among the people of God, then I despair of finding one that will. I believe in and love this people and their principles, and ask for no more joyous ministry than the proclamation of these principles.

NOT KNOWLEDGE BUT LOVE.

It is not knowledge or even belief that constitutes the Christian life according to the teaching of Jesus, but love and good works. If knowledge or opinion made a man a Christian then the learned would be the good and the simple and ignorant, the bad. It is not knowledge or intellectual belief that constitutes the church, any more than it constitutes the family; for the church is not so much a school as it is a family. Can you imagine what would happen to the family if intellectual agreement were legally made the bond of union and basis of obligation between parents and children and husband and wife; if it were possible for a father to cast off his children and a husband to put away his wife for difference of opinion? The love and innocence and helplessness of childhood would then count for nothing; and the pain and sacrifice of motherhood would mean nothing in the face of difference of opinion.

THE TRUE FELLOWSHIP.

Divorce for difference of opinion! If that were possible, the most perfect home might be destroyed. As a matter of fact such a thing is not possible in our civilization, though there have been times when it was possible—when an heretical wife might be cast off as a common criminal by consent of the church.

Exclusion from the fellowship of the church for difference of opinion! That is just as unnatural and revolting as exclusion from the home for difference of opinion. Neither the church nor the family is built on agreement in doctrine, but on mutual love and service: and where there is love and virtue and faithfulness to every duty, there may be a good home, and a true church, whether there is agreement in opinion or not. In the church as in the family there are human beings of all kinds and conditions, and they cannot be forced into intellectual likeness any more than into physical or moral likeness. There are young and old, ignorant and learned, the innocent and the guilty, the worthy and unworthy, all bound together by common needs and aspirations. They are brothers and sisters not because they think alike or look alike, but because they need each other. When we come to recognize that our fellowship with each other in the church grows out of our duty to each other, as well as our need of each other, the church then will be truly Christian.

Treats Prisoners Like Human Beings

How Edmund M. Allen, Warden, has Revolutionized Conditions at the Illinois State Penitentiary, at Joliet.

BY A. R. PERSON.

COMPARATIVELY few persons visit a penitentiary and learn from observation just what sort of a place such an institution is.

As commonly conceived, a penitentiary is a place where the officers punish and the prisoners suffer.

Years ago this might have been a sufficiently complete characterization. More recently it would have been inadequate and now at many prisons it can hardly be said to be true.

Warden Edmund M. Allen, who has inaugurated a more human system of treatment of prisoners at the Illinois State Penitentiary.

The new administration of the Illinois State Penitentiary has changed things completely during the past twenty months.

This prison is now a community of men and a small number of women in the women's department, all of whom—even the life term men—have some hope and many of whom have very bright hopes indeed.

People here do not live the same natural life they would live outside where they would have their homes and families but, still, life here is all the time becoming more normal—always, however, with the limitation which the requirements here and the conditions make.

The barrier which opinion has built up between the general public and the persons who have been convicted in a court, has for some time been breaking down and many persons are beginning to see that the "class" to which it said a person who has been convicted comes suddenly to belong, is a class only in people's opinion: that by nature, instinct and purpose, the person is just what he was before his conviction—earnest and true in general purpose, if he was earnest and true before, even though he may have gone wrong in some one thing.

Of course there are a number of men here who, if free, would over-ride others' rights but also there are a great many here who in no degree wish as a general policy to do any such thing.

PRISONERS ARE HUMAN BEINGS.

The public once thought that prisoners should be put squarely under the heel of social power. Now, there is a recognition that men and women who have been imprisoned, are still human beings and that they have rights the same as they have ever had.

In a recent address at Camp Dunne, one of the honor road camps where men have gone from here to work on the Illinois roads, Governor Dunne said: "We are beginning to see the prisoner's side of the story. We already realize that his rights are as important as those of the state."

In acknowledgement of these natural human rights, which the governor says the state is now to recognize, and to provide for establishing some of them in practice, the new administration here has done many things.

To enable the prisoners to gain a better connection with the world outside, the men are now allowed to write and to have visits once a week. Previously to this there were visits only once a month and letters could be written only once in five weeks.

The restriction in writing letters made it impossible for men to reply to letters that came from their various friends and in time the friends, receiving no word, would write no more.

In the days gone by, this letter could not have been written as it is now being written by a resident of this institution; the readers of this paper could not possibly have had such a communication from a prisoner in which he publicly reports the conditions at the state penitentiary. Such a letter would not have been allowed to go out and if it should have been stealthily sent and published, the prisoner would have, for some months, lost the privilege to write.

But now, under the new order of things, not only can such a communication as this be sent to the press, but the prisoners have a press of their own.

Our magazine, The Joliet Prison Post, is one of a great number of prison publications. About thirty prison papers are received here in exchange.

THE PRISON NEWSPAPER.

The Joliet Prison Post is more than a local sheet. It is a forty-eight page magazine (some months still larger) and it deals intelligently, forcefully and freely with every prison question. Recently a large Eastern daily gave the greater portion of a double column editorial to a consideration of the magazine issued at this institution.

The magazine deals with prison questions in the light of general social principles. "The new Joliet prison magazine steps into the ranks of first-class journalism to consider the question of social betterment—forty-eight to seventy-two pages of clear reasoning on living social questions."

This description of our publication will help the readers of this article to see what this community is doing. We are thinking of ourselves now, not as a prison, but as a community with problems which are to be and which must be worked out.

Of course, all that we are doing has been made possible by the prison administration and particularly by Warden Edmund M. Allen.

The men now have meetings once a month in which they freely discuss questions and through which requests from the men reach the Warden. The meetings have effected many changes and will bring more. We have a band of twenty-four pieces which plays each day as the men march to and from work and also during two meals a day in the dining room.

The readers of this article will please understand that we are putting no extra burden on the state for any of this. What is being done, is done by ourselves and within the customary appropriation. We, as residents of this community, are ourselves raising the community to better things. None of the good that is coming to us, is being bestowed upon us from the outside. We do not want it that way. What we have we want to earn and the Warden frequently says, "Boys, it's up to you;" says that the men shall have all to which they will become eligible.

Our magazine serves in leading the men and women—we have a "town" of over fifteen hundred here—and it helps them and the administration to become unified. Besides, as Governor Dunne says, the magazine gives "the prisoner's side of the story," to the public, which is also a great help.

Christianity in Madagascar.

A writer in The East and the West states that from Tananarive, the capital of Madagascar, 200 churches can be seen with the help of a field glass and 150 with the naked eye! A missionary organization of the Madagascar Christians called Isan-Emin-Bolana supports thirteen evangelists in the northern part of the island, and this is not the only such missionary society. Its meetings are held every six months at the capital and fully 10,000 delegates attend them. There are separate meetings for men, for women, for youths, for girls.

Inadequate Religions

How the Religion of Jesus Christ Fares Amid the Wreckage of Ancient Faiths.

BY ROBERT ELLIOTT SPEER.

THE great non-Christian religions are today confessing their inadequacy, even in our own ears. I have seen myself—and my life has been no long life—I have seen great non-Christian religions die. I mave seen Confucianism slain in Korea. I have seen Shintoism publicly degraded from the status of a religion to a mere code of court etiquette in Japan.

We are—all of us—witnessing now one of the greatest religious transformations that ever took place in the non-Christian world passing over Hinduism. There is a very interesting letter in "The Life of Phillips Brooks," written from Calcutta to his brother Arthur, after Phillips Brooks had had an interview with Keshab Chander Sen. Phillips Brooks thought that he saw in the rise of the Drama Somaj a great schism running through Hinduism that was to issue in a reform movement that would bring up in India great masses of men to pure theistic conviction, from which they would be ready to step over into a Christian faith.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' PROPHECY.

If you will compare the actual facts today with Phillips Brooks' prophecy you will see that he misread not at all unnaturally but entirely the signs of the coming days. Why? Hinduism has so readjusted itself as to make it unnecessary for the Brahmos to revolt from it. It has simply made room in its expansive folds for the ethical conceptions of Christianity, so that it is comfortable for a man who wants to hold those conceptions to stay inside the Hindu faith and live the Hindu life if that is his desire. Hinduism is engaged in a great apologetic adaptation.

In like manner all the great non-Christian religions are disintegrating or undergoing some form of significant transformation. What Griffith Jones says in "The Ascent Through Christ" is manifestly true: "The nations called Christian are everywhere pressing hard upon all other nations. Western civilization in all directions is disintegrating both the customs of savage nations and the more stable civilization of the east, and it is everywhere being shown that in this general break-up of old and effete orders there is an imminent peril. For where our civilization penetrates without our religion it is invariably disastrous in its effects. It never fails to destroy the confidence of the subject races in their own creeds and customs, without furnishing anything in place of their sanctions and restraints. The result is everywhere to be seen in the way in which heathen nations neglect our virtues and emulate our vices.

"The advice sometimes given to the missionary, therefore, to leave the people to whom he ministers to their simpler faith, is beside the mark. These faiths are inevitably going—soon they will be gone—and the question presses, what then? If history proves anything, it proves that a nation without a faith is a doomed nation; that it cannot hold together; that it inevitably decays and dies.

ETHNIC RELIGIONS PERISHING.

"From this point of view alone, then, there is a tremendous responsibility laid upon us. The impact of our civilization is breaking up the fabric and undermining the foundations of the ethnic religions. Without religion of some sort nations must perish. Therefore we must see to it that we give something in the place of what we take away, and that something must be Christian faith or it will be nothing."

We stand in the midst of a great world of wrecked religions. Heresy after heresy has shot schism upon schism through what we used to look upon as the solid mass of Mohammedanism, and all the other non-Christian religions are attempting, in greater or less degree, to transform themselves beneath our eyes. They are confessing, every one of them, their inadequacy to meet the needs of men.

"CALVARY CLOSES THE QUESTION."

For the Christian Calvary closes the question. All the non-Christian religions, except Mohammedanism—which in actual consequences rejects and supersedes Christ and therefore condemns itself—were here when Jesus Christ came. If the missionary enterprise is a mistake, it is not our mistake: it is the mistake of God. If the laying down of life in the attempt to evangelize the world is an illegitimate waste, let the reproach of it rest on that one priceless Life that was therefore laid down needlessly for the world.

Nineteen hundred years ago, to the best of all the non-Christian religions—the religion between which and all the other non-Christian religions a great gulf is fixed, Judaism—Jesus Christ came, and that, the best of all religions, He declared to be outworn and inadequate. The time had at last come, He taught, to supplant it with the full and perfect truth that was in Him. No word needs to be spoken to us beyond His word, "I came to save the world," and the great word of the man who had loved him dearly, whose life had been changed from weakness into strength by his power, and who was to die in His service: "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved."

International Good Samaritanism

How Some of the Warring Nations of Europe are Welcoming the Christmas Ship Enterprise Planned by Christian America.

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

THE present war does not prove that Christianity has failed. It has brought out one very concrete illustration that Christianity is not dead! Seldom has the religion of Jesus Christ brought forth a more worthy fruit in practical life than in the Christmas ship enterprise. Significant, as revealing the spirit of Christianity in action, this Christmas gift from loving America to her stricken sisters across the water, bids fair to do much toward preparing the way for final peace and adjustment.

It is cheering news that the warring nations are expressing warm appreciation of the Christmas ship which America is soon to send to them.

GREAT BRITAIN AND RUSSIA PLEASED.

Great Britain and Russia have communicated formally to the Chicago headquarters of the Christmas Ship their acceptance of the Christmas gifts which the children of America are about to send to the orphans of the European war.

Not only will the British government receive with gratitude the offerings of America, but, according to its ambassador in Washington, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, it will do everything in its power to forward gifts to other countries which cannot be reached by the American naval vessel conveying them across the ocean.

All of the diplomats representing the belligerent nations have displayed intense interest in the plan; none more so than Sir Cecil Spring-Rice.

This ambassador, who, by reason of previous service in the United States, has an intimate knowledge of the real feelings which inspire the American people and who appreciates their large charity, promptly declared his belief that the London government would accept with gratitude the proportion of the gifts assigned to England, Scotland and Ireland, and, moreover, would be willing to cooperate in every possible way to see that the gifts reached their destination, even though that destination should be hostile.

That his belief was justified is shown by the cablegram he has received from Sir Edward Grey, the British minister for foreign affairs.

Not the slightest objection will be raised to the children's gifts going to Germany and Austria. The British cruisers which are holding up vessels suspected of carrying contraband of war will signal "Godspeed" to the American Christmas ship.

In addition, a British man-of-war will convey from England to Norway, for transmission to Russia, the gifts intended for the orphans of the Russian Empire. A British vessel also will convey to Belgium, if desirable, the Christmas gifts addressed to the needy children of that devastated country. The German government will permit free entrance of this ship into Belgian ports, which its army controls.

BRITISH ENVOY'S LETTER.

Here is a letter received by John Callan O'Laughlin, of the Chicago Herald, from the British ambassador:

British Embassy, Washington,
Oct. 16, 1914.

Dear Mr. O'Laughlin:—I have communicated to Sir Edward Grey your kind and touching message and I have received an answer from him in which he tells me that the British government appreciates the kindly spirit shown by the American people and the Secretary of the Navy in the dispatch of an American warship in order to carry to the countries afflicted by the war a Christmas cargo of useful presents.

He is sure that this generous and beneficent thought will bring pleasure and comfort to many afflicted households and of course he will do all in his power to join such assistance and advise through Ambassador Page as may be in his power with respect to the question of forwarding those gifts to their destination in England and elsewhere.

I hope you will inform this embassy of the date of sailing and other necessary details.

Yours sincerely,
Cecil Spring-Rice.

Mr. John Callan O'Laughlin.

RUSSIA THANKFUL.

From the Russian ambassador, too, has been received a letter expressing the sense of appreciation the government of his majesty, the czar, of the purpose of the children of America. Here it is:

Imperial Russian Embassy,
Washington, the 22d Oct., 1914.

Dear Sir: I am directed to inform you that the imperial government accepts with feelings of profound gratitude the Christmas gifts of the American children to the orphans of the war and will take all necessary measures for their distribution.

Please receive for the papers associated with the enterprise and all those who have assisted to promote this generous and sympathetic work the expressions of my sincere thanks and appreciation. Very truly yours, G. Bakhmeteff.

Now that all the governments have been heard from—Great Britain, Russia, France, Belgium, Servia and Montenegro, constituting the allies, and Germany and Austro-Hungary, which are fighting shoulder to shoulder—it is for Christian America to see that the Christmas ship shall carry a cargo of which they will be proud and which will bring back to them the blessings of those whose want is relieved.

Rambles on the Belgic-Dutch Border

With Sidelights Upon Conditions Now Prevailing in the Belgian War Zone.

BY WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS.

LOOKING upon the map of Netherlands, one will see a great many names ending in trecht or tricht, which is the local corruption of the old Latin "trajectum," or ford. At Maastricht we are at the ford on the Maas, or Meuse. The river valley is walled in on either side with limestone hills. The scenery here contrasts sharply with that north of the Maas. The French call this river the Meuse, after the village of its cradle. I pass by Rormond—that is, the mouth of the Roer river—to which city I shall return for a Sunday's stay.

"NO SMOKING."

The car in which I ride to see Belgium for the second time after many years, has the sign Niet Rooken (no smoking), but the prohibition is defied by four nations and neutralized in French, German, English and Dutch. Personally, I enjoy cigars best when they are smoked by others. It is fun to see men falling asleep with lighted cigars in their mouths or hands, the stumps occasionally tumbling over their clothes on the floor, leaving a comet-like track of ashes. Many of the Dutch museums and public offices have in their hallways tin boxes, like a "letter-delivery," with compartments duly numbered, in which visitors may deposit their "old soldiers" until their business is over and fire and moisture once more touch opposite ends.

Three hours in Maastricht, a place repeatedly visited, gave me plenty of opportunity to see the fine stone bridges, one 500 feet long with nine arches (much like that of the Bridge of Arches at Liege, now a mass of ruins), the well-kept streets of the city and the splendid great church of St. Servas, the oldest in Netherlands. It was St. Servas who first preached the Gospel in this valley, dying A. D. 384. The center of the crypt is the place where it is said his bones were laid.

DUTCH ARMY GUARD CITY.

The city, now guarded by the Dutch army, mobilized for defense, was then gay with all colors of bunting, with flags and emblems, national, provincial, municipal and ecclesiastical. This outburst of decoration advertised the festival in the saint's honor, which was to last a week. In the brilliant church, already overloaded with all kinds of costly ornaments and symbols, was a remarkable exhibition of holy relics, consisting chiefly of bones of various saints, some of them mounted in gold and set in boxes of crystal, banded with precious metal and richly begemmed. These were arranged back of the chancel and in the choir, and one must pay to see the uncanny curiosities.

We are in Limburg, the most southern of the provinces, and the one most Roman Catholic. Out in the streets the sights, sounds and smells compel contrast with the other Dutch provinces. One sees here what he rarely meets in either of the Hollands, north or south—plenty of beggars. In contrast to the hard, fragrant cheeses of the north, that called Limburger, mostly made in Germany, is too visible to the eye and oppressive to the nose. Sitting down at one of the little round tables outside a restaurant and calling for coffee, the taste is of chickory. Personally I prefer honest Java coffee, no mendicants and no bits of skeletons in churches. A local exhibition of art and industry in an old house of worship interests me for a half hour.

VALLEY OF THE MAAS.

Mounting the train for a ride into Belgium, the southern frontier of the Netherlands is crossed at 4:10 p. m. Rain is falling heavily. The valley of the Maas winds and curves like that of the Mohawk, which it recalls. There are, likewise, islands, dams and locks. At the Douane, or custom house, all are talking French. The formalities are slight. For the passenger they consist chiefly in walking through one room, which is Dutch, into another room, which is Belgian. The falls of the river here remind me of those of the Schuylkill at Philadelphia, or of the Genesee at Rochester. The Maas is crossed by iron bridges and the rocky cliffs of limestone are mostly dark blue, lime kilns being abundant. One station is named Argenteau (silver water). Passing another dam and falls at Sarolay, we change cars. These are smaller, but with more glass and light. Those for the smokers are called Fumeurs. Near the frontier is that red clay, which recalls the great red earth-bands I have lived upon in New Jersey and crossed in Japan. Soon the tall chimneys and smoky towers of Liege are in sight.

AT LIEGE.

In this trilingual country, as in Korea, the traveler is expected to know the name of each place in three languages. This manufacturing city, rich and dirty as it is, must be remembered in Dutch, German and French, as Luik, Luttich and Liege. I spent three hours in it, on this my first visit, and then took the night train back in the rain to Roermond, where I hoped to spend Sunday and have a good chat with a "Catholic" acquaintance in the "Episcopal" college.

My memories of Liege are of a great manufacturing city with superb architecture. This is the capital of the French-speaking Walloons, one of the most industrious of all peoples. From this fine stock of men, which for centuries has struggled for freedom, and again and again asserted their rights against invaders and oppressors, sprang the people, who, as refugees for conscience's sake, left their native land when the Spaniards, under Alva, entered to establish the Inquisition. Their country was not then, or is now, militarily defensible. In 1567 they were utterly unprepared. In 1914 they were ready for the host, and how gallantly they withstood the foe!

"INASMUCH."

How much they suffered then in their first flight into England and Holland! How moving is the tale of their woes in 1914, when bombs from the sky kill and maim their women and children! Piteous is the tale of the refugees, some fifty thousand of whom are now in England, homeless, penniless, heartsick.

Yet common gratitude, ancestral pride, ordinary humanity and Christian sympathy unite in prompting America to help the distressed Belgians. Let us "take sides" in this war—the side of pity and succor. "Inasmuch!"

New Zealand and Bible Reading.

New Zealand will have soon a referendum vote on the question of Bible-reading and religious instruction in the public schools. The bill to be voted on provides for the reading in public schools of selected Bible lessons from a reading book to be provided by the Department of Education, no sectarian teaching to be allowed. Provision is made also for religious instruction within school hours to children by a minister of their own denomination. Any parent will have the right, if he chooses to do so, to withdraw his children from the Bible-reading or religious instruction.

Judas—And You

A Present-day Application of an Ancient Story.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

THERE has been much discussion as to why Jesus chose Judas to be one of the twelve. The mechanical idea that Jesus deliberately chose Judas in order that he might have someone to betray him, and in order that scripture might be fulfilled, has always been very repulsive to me. We cannot escape the responsibility of Judas for his dastardly deed. He is not the only man who has gradually grown worse in most favorable environment. Do we not all know boys and girls reared in the very best of homes, possessing the very best of parents who have, nevertheless, gone into the paths of evil? The engineer may use all the power of his superb engine to pull the train backward!

AT THE PASSION PLAY.

The highest honor in the Passion Play, as given at Oberammergau, is to play the part of Christ, and the second, we may be surprised to learn, is to be assigned the part of Judas. Why? The priest of the parish church will tell you that it is because Judas has such a remarkable opportunity to set forth the remorse for sin. And as I sat eight hours at the play I watched for that feature and wonderfully it developed. You saw Judas, out of sympathy with Christ and the disciples; he seemed to feel that everything was going to pieces anyway and that he might as well get something out of the wreckage. Then came his association with the enemies of Christ who made him their somewhat unwilling tool. Under their influence, exerted with much flattery and false argument, Judas was driven and led on to the betrayal. But the climax came when Judas came past the judgment hall, just as Christ was being condemned to death. Suddenly the full meaning of his horrible crime flashed over him. He was responsible for the death of Christ, for the crucifixion of his friend, for the dreadful death of one who had never done anything but good to him.

Then you see him rushing into the hall, crying out that he has betrayed innocent blood, begging for them to take back their money and spare the life of his Master. But the rulers meet him with scornful looks and terrible words. "What is that to us, look you to it." Then Judas comes out alone and turns his mind wrong-side-out before that vast audience. Remorse, remorse, remorse—deep-dyed in the blackness of hell, conscience stung by ten thousand scorpions, a mind on fire, a soul in earthquake. Surely one must not repeat the sin of Judas if the remorse is like to that! You shudder and shiver. The way of the transgressor is hard. And then with the very girdle in which he has kept those repulsive shekels which a few moments before he has thrown, ringing down upon the marble floors—with that very girdle he hangs himself, crying that there is not mercy enough even in heaven to forgive a crime as black as his!

WHAT WAS WRONG WITH JUDAS?

Here we have a conspicuous example—conspicuous because he stood in the white light of Christ—of the spiritual disintegration of a capable man. I have no doubt that Jesus chose Judas, after his night of prayer, because he recognized great capabilities in him. He had faults but so had Peter and John. Judas was the aristocrat of the inner circle. He came from Judea, from the land of the patricians. He had good parents. He had abundant energy. He was a natural leader. He possessed marked ability in business. He could make, save and handle money.

It may be that Judas fooled himself in joining the Messianic movement. He doubtless thought that he was sincere and that he shared the ideals of the group of disciples, but all of the time, down underneath was the passion for place and power. Fundamentally he was always selfish. You see he never grasped the idea of unselfishness which Jesus had; and as he saw the Master constantly doing the things that seemed not to "get him anything" he became irritated and out of sorts. I have no doubt but that Judas started that acrimonious discussion as to who would be greatest. The other disciples shared the ideals of Jesus and developed in the three years of association, while Judas constantly and persistently disintegrated.

Here we face one of the most subtle and deadly spiritual facts in real life. Have we not all known ministers who while dealing with spiritual things grew constantly more base. Their sympathy became professional, their lives hard and empty. It was all dry as dust, and why? Because they had never learned the joy of unselfish serving. They were always place hunters. They were always working and scheming to get into the spot-light.

MODERN JUDASES.

And having said so much for the preacher, I turn now to the business man—the boasted layman. In "Life" recently I saw a picture representing what different people in church were thinking about during the sermon: a woman, of a hat; a boy, of a fishing hole; a youth, of a pretty girl; a housewife, of the roast in the oven and the "Layman" of a ticker with the tape streaming out telling the story of the stocks! Well, here is your modern Judas. Mark him well. The preacher may be preaching about "Love" but this sordid man is thinking only of himself. Place and power, power and place—there you have it. And the betrayal becomes modernized.

"Daily with souls that cringe and plot
We Sinais climb, and know it not."

You might as well settle it. You cannot serve God AND Mammon. Christ knew what he was talking about. It is self or God. And to think of what Judas might have been! Think also of what you may become, but you must ring true to the fundamental note of unselfishness which is Christ.

"O Master let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free."

The World's Unrest

A Poem suggested mainly by the turbulent state of Europe.

BY W. T. MOORE.

A DREAM came rushing by. I was alone.
A storm-cloud seemed to burst above a throne;
Then gath'ring fury from the mad'ning spray,
It started on its swift, destructive way.

The nations soon were in a fearful strife,
Each struggling for its own endangered life!
The roar of cannon filled the earth with awe,
As serried hosts defied Christ's Holy law.

The dreadful carnage raged, and thousands fell,
All Europe seemed turned into wrathful Hell,
And soon it was as if the hour of doom
Had come to fill the earth with awful gloom.

The people's sacred voice had not been heard,
And yet so bound were they, they simply feared
To even speak against what seemed their fates,
So ruled were they by heartless Potentates.

Another throne was touched, and soon it fell;
Then from the sea rolled up a mighty swell,
And moving onward with resistless force,
O'erthrew all thrones along its conquering course.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream;
I now saw things that did not simply seem,
But were as real as the noonday light,
When streaming on the unobscured sight.

That cloud had written on its sun-lit crest:
"For good of all, the people's rule is best."
While on its spreading wings was hung this sign:
"The people's right to govern is Divine."

And as this cloud soon o'er the nations spread,
And despots from their thrones had now all fled,
A brighter day began to dawn on those oppressed,
While peace supplied the place of long unrest.

This hope, at least, my vivid dream inspires;
And now around our sacred altar fires,
We'll raise our prayers to God that he may bless
This restless world with reign of righteousness.

And when to nations this bright day shall come,
When tyrants' tongues shall evermore be dumb,
Then suff'ring people shall aloud proclaim
Their long-lost rights restored in freedom's name!

THE CONVENTION INVISIBLE.

IN ONE of the early morning half-hours of worship during the Atlanta Convention, there was offered, among many others, a prayer for "the Convention invisible."

That unseen company of choice and elect souls, unable to be present in the flesh, but near in spirit, is one of the potent factors in every gathering of saints.

Their thoughts are upon the sessions for good. Their prayers are like incense offered on the golden altar. Their yearning solicitude that the great gatherings may mark new levels of progress and reach new frontiers of opportunity cannot fail to influence the assembly.

They are the nearer and more evident symbol of that greater "Convention Invisible," of all those whose hearts and hopes have been inwrought into the work of the brotherhood and who have entered into life.

Well may we remember the invisible presences that like a cloud of witnesses watch with deepest concern the ongoing of our Christian effort to bear vital testimony to all the world.

AN UNSPENT FORCE.

A VERY remarkable tribute to the efficiency and value of Christian Endeavor is the fact that in spite of its years of service, it goes on with undiminished enthusiasm to the accomplishment of its work.

To all assertions that it is a spent force it presents the convincing spectacle of actual achievement.

It adjusts itself to new conditions with perfect flexibility, and makes patent not only its own untiring youth, but the vitality of the Christian religion.

On land and sea its societies are alert and active. The "Floating Societies" are found on almost every battleship in all the navies. From the day when the first of such groups was organized on the revenue cutter Dexter in 1890 to the present time the links have been forged till they make a great chain reaching around the world.

In prisons and hospitals there are societies that inspire the members to a regenerated and a renewed life. Chaplains, officials, physicians and nurses bear witness to the value of the movement.

As a missionary force Christian Endeavor is at work in all lands. In mission lands, from Yokohama to Constantinople the Christian Endeavor Society has a recognized place in the program of the Church. No one need fear that it will cease to exist, or lose its value. It is one of the timeless, unspent forces of the kingdom, asking nothing for itself, but demanding all for the Church.

THE RETREAT OF THE SALOON.

NOT all of us are aware of the mighty battle that is going on around us. But it grows clearer with each day that the saloon is actually doomed and that its defenders realize it.

The forces that are organized to oppose it—the Anti-saloon League, the Prohibition Party, the Intercollegiate Prohibition League, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the many Church temperance boards and societies—are working as eagerly and efficiently as ever, and with an increasing assurance of early success.

To the list of the foes of the saloon industrial and business organizations are adding their forces in heartening numbers. Railroads, factories, business houses are hastening to form themselves in the advancing column.

Last and most potent of the foes of the traffic are the nations that are wheeling into line. Germany, the boasted defender of beer as a world beverage, puts its ban completely on its use.

Russia, long addicted to its vodka, now stares in amazement at an imperial decree forbidding its use in the army and announcing that all government complicity in the traffic shall forthwith cease.

And before the Congress of the United States there is now a bill enacting nation-wide prohibition, and its success is now a matter of grave political concern.

The Progressive Party in many places has declared in favor of out-lawing the saloon.

Woman Suffrage adds a potent force to the ranks of the foes of the business.

Leading newspapers refuse to accept liquor advertisements.

The traffic is slowly driven to advertise in theater programs and other obscure publications.

The Flying Squadron gathers and masses sentiment from ocean to ocean.

The signs of promise are abundant. The night is far spent, the day is at hand.

The saloon is doomed!

THE WEAKNESS OF DIVISION.

NOT yet has the Church of Christ perceived any considerable portion of the weakness which is caused by division.

Denominationalism is so much a part of our inheritance from the past that its anomaly, wastefulness and inexcusableness do not easily come home to us.

A timely writer says in a recent book, "The New Home Missions": "Told in the Book of Joshua, the conquest of Canaan seems the exalted onslaught of a united people; told in the Book of Judges it appears as a long-drawn-out series of independent tribal forays and fragmentary occupations with only occasional brief spurts of national coöperation. A third record of the same events—also a true one—might have been written from the standpoint of the Canaanites. 'Israel struck us down,' it would read, 'but how much sooner would they have done it if they had always struck together!' "

VIRGINIA GOES DRY.

VIRGINIA went dry by a majority of thirty thousand. The saloon in that state is now classed with gambling hells and brothels, and Christian people must no longer endure the scandal of being in partnership with the saloon. The saloon in Virginia is really quite a recent innovation. Before the war there were taverns at the cross-roads and wealthy people kept liquor in their cellars, but there was little social drinking outside the homes of wealthy people. It was against the law to sell liquor to slaves without the permission of their masters. As this permission was not readily secured, there was but little consumption of intoxicating liquors on the part of Negroes. The Civil War changed that. The Negro in his freedom turned to drink. The result in the horrible crimes in the South are directly chargeable to alcohol. One of the reasons why the intelligent Southern man votes against the saloon is to protect the primitive race with which he has to live.

SOCIAL HYGIENE ORGANIZATIONS UNITED.

ONE of the difficulties in the way of reform has been that numerous competing organizations have grown up around each great idea. This has been notoriously true of the temperance agitation of the past fifty years. A half dozen different organizations now look to Christian people for temperance offerings. The same condition obtains in other reforms, also.

It is a matter for rejoicing, therefore, to learn that the American Vigilance Association and the American Federation for Sex Hygiene have united to form the American Social Hygiene Association. They have elected Dr. Charles W. Eliot as president. One of the tasks of the coming year will be the safeguarding of women at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco.

Previous expositions have operated on the theory that the visitors demanded an "open town." It is becoming increasingly clear that the great body of visitors to such an exposition want no such thing.

ANTI-CATHOLIC TENDENCIES IN MEXICO.

THE decree of Governor Antonio Villareal, of Noevo Leon in Mexico abolishing the confessional has aroused attention all over the country. Foreign priests have also been expelled from the state. The history of Mexico shows that its politics have been bound up inseparably with religious questions.

It does not become Protestants to become too jubilant over these developments, however. The newspapers are reporting outrages against nuns. There seems to be much evidence that some of the revolutionary leaders are opposed to every form of religion and that the changes inspired by them might set civilization back in Mexico instead of helping it forward.

CURRENT LITERATURE AND LIQUOR.

MOVING pictures now illustrate Jack London's "John Barleycorn." There was an offer from certain liquor interests to give $25,000 to have it suppressed.

Certain of the great national periodicals have been saying plain words. The articles in Collier's Weekly have brought forth the indignant inquiry from the saloonists, "Is it subsidized by the temperance people?" Everybody's Magazine is printing a series of articles on this question. The Saturday Evening Post has been after the liquor business with a vengeance.

Which things indicate a growth of temperance sentiment that makes the slogan of the Christian Endeavorers seem not wholly impracticable, "A Saloonless Nation in 1920."

NO TIME TO MAKE A POOR MOUTH.

SECRETARY BERT WILSON, of the Foreign Society, commenting on the opening editorial in The Christian Century of Oct. 15, entitled "Missions and the War" furnishes us some figures concerning the Protestant missionary activities of the various European nations now involved in the conflict.

Great Britain has 10,000 missionaries on the field and contributes $10,000,000 a year for their support.

Of the continental nations, Germany has 1,200 missionaries and contributes about $2,600,000 a year; France has 120 missionaries and contributes about $150,000 a year; Holland has 130 missionaries and contributes $216,000 a year; Switzerland has 450 missionaries and contributes $600,000 a year; Scandinavia has 700 missionaries. The amount contributed is not known.

All the Continental Societies combined maintain about 2,500 missionaries and spend about $4,000,000 a year for their support. The Continental Societies do not include wives when they give the number of their missionaries.

Approached by Dr. John R. Mott as to their attitude toward a proffer of aid from the American Church the missionary societies of the Continent replied that they could not do so without implying the bankruptcy of their nations, a position in which, of course, they are unwilling to be placed.

Mr. Wilson agrees with The Christian Century of last week in the declaration that the present is the time for heroic and optimistic self-sacrifice. He points out that during our Civil War all American mission work went forward; the leaders called for an advance and the people responded. The Northern Baptists now report that they are not taking in an inch of sail. The Presbyterians are going forward. The American Board (Congregational) will under its new President, Dr. Moore, enlarge its work.

The paradox of the spiritual order—that disaster to man's material goods may increase his devotion and his resourcefulness in things spiritual—has so often proved true as to be no longer a paradox.

The Kingdom must not be allowed to suffer. The missionaries have gone out for life—they cannot be discharged like hired men. The Church that sent them will, by God's grace, support them and send to their aid those stout-hearts that in these great times volunteer to go.

SIR J. FORBES-ROBERTSON.

SO LONG as there remain on the stage such actors as Sir J. Forbes-Robertson the disgust with which all morally sensitive minds regard the theater of these, its degenerate days, must submit to some degree of qualification.

For three weeks Mr. Forbes-Robertson has been playing to packed houses in Chicago on his farewell visit to America. His interpretation of Hamlet is the most authoritative and satisfying in modern times. But it is in his presentation of that delightful modern play of Jerome K. Jerome, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," that the public finds its chief delight.

With a face and physique strikingly like Dr. Charles S. Medbury's, and in the role played characteristically by the beloved Des Moines pastor in real life, the actor comes upon the scene of a selfish, irritable, gossipy, sordid and unprincipled boarding-house group and by his own faith in each lodger and by his discernment and disclosure of the repressed goodness in each, transforms the spirit of the place and the manners and characters of the entire company.

The visit of Mr. Forbes-Robertson is a spiritual event in the life of any city. One cannot leave the theater in which he plays without a deepened sense of the inherent goodness of "folks" and without a strengthened purpose to be kind and fair and morally helpful to others.

That his visits to America will have ceased with this one is an occasion of sincere regret to all who deplore the crassness of the modern stage, but have not given up hope of purifying it.

TURNING EUPHEMISM INTO COMPLIMENT.

A FINE side-light on the moral quality of Mr. Roger C. Sullivan, the Chicago boss who is running for United States Senator from Illinois, is his use of a statement by Mr. Peter Clark Macfarlane in Collier's Weekly. Mr. Macfarlane some time ago interviewed Mr. Sullivan and characterized him in a brilliant and well-balanced article which gave both sides of the story of the politician's career—the public reputation side and the politician's own personal interpretation.

A typical statement, showing the measured phrases in which Mr. Macfarlane set forth whatever personal opinion of Mr. Sullivan he did express, was this: "He stands like Gibraltar by every man that stands by him."

This quotation now shouts at the public from bill-boards and street-car placards all over the state of Illinois as though it were a compliment passed by the interviewer upon the candidate. The quotation is a true statement of a fact for which Mr. Sullivan, like Mr. Lorimer and Mr. Penrose and Mr. Murphy and all the political bosses from Tweed down, have been noted. Their machine and their political power are built up by their loyalty to those who are loyal to them.

But the modern public has learned that that trait in its politicians is no virtue at all, but the most sinister vice. A man of delicate moral feelings would never have paraded such a descriptive of himself before the world; he would, on the contrary, have taken umbrage at the author of it.

No doubt Mr. Macfarlane felt, and intended the morally initiated to feel also, the full sinister force of such a characterization.

He spoke euphemistically about an egregious political sin, and Mr. Sullivan took it as a compliment!

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Methodists Plan to Care for Students.

Bishop Henderson spoke on Sept. 27 at Urbana, Ill., in the University Church of the Methodists on the program of his brotherhood in caring for students at the state university. He called attention to the fact that the student body in the University of Illinois had increased this year 12½ per cent, which was an unprecedented gain in numbers. The bishop proposed that the Methodists should spend in equipment from half a million to one million dollars to care for the students. While at the university Bishop Henderson secured decisions from the ten students to enter some form of Christian work. The organization which cares for the students is called the Wesley Foundation and is supported by the Methodists of Illinois, and operated in connection with Trinity Church.

Great Audiences at Tremont Temple.

Rev. Cortland Meyers, who is now the pastor of the Baptist Church in Boston which is known as Tremont Temple, has been greeted with unusual audiences this fall. On the evening of October 11, nearly a thousand people were turned away from the church. A successful camp for boys of the church was conducted this past summer. Each department of the church is under a skilled director and the program of the church proceeds along the most modern social methods.

Bishop Hartzell Returns to Africa.

Bishop Hartzell left the United States on the "Mauretania" and is on his way to Africa by way of England. He will tarry a few days in London for some business engagements and then proceed on his journey to the dark continent.

Leaders Discuss Religious Education.

The interdenominational committee composed of Bishop Greer, Dr. George Alexander of the Presbyterian Church, Professor George A. Coe, and others, which is working in New York upon the subject of the religious education of children, fails to concur in the widely recommended plan of having the public schools direct their pupils to their various churches for religious instruction during certain school hours, with corresponding credit for the work done. The committee seems to feel that here church and state might become involved with each other. The gentlemen of the committee do recommend, however, a real school of religion with trained teachers, scientifically arranged courses of study and high standards of instruction. The great difficulty in the way is that of securing competent teachers without pay or on the conditions of very limited remuneration such as the churches are able to offer.

Methodists Will Raise Five Million.

The Board of Conference Claimants of the Methodist Church announce a program of undertaking to raise a fund of five million dollars for retired ministers and their families. This plan has the endorsement of the general conference and the details of the campaign are to be worked out at a meeting in the Metropolitan Methodist Church in Washington, D. C., October 27-29. The need in this communion is great on account of the large number of men who pioneered the cause of Methodism in America upon meager salaries in the days gone by.

Dr. Francis Goes to Los Angeles.

Dr. James A. Francis has resigned the pastorate of the Clarendon St. Church, Boston, Mass., to accept a call to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Los Angeles, Cal. He will leave Boston December 1 to enter his new field. Dr. Francis is known among the Baptists as one of their strongest preachers. He is in great demand for an occasional evangelistic enterprise and for addresses at the summer conventions of his denomination.

Congregationalists' New Missionary Head.

Prof. Edward C. Moore has been elected president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, the oldest of our American Missionary Societies, and the one which is Professor E. C. Moore, Elected President of the American Board of Foreign Missions, of the Congregational Church.

now chiefly supported by the Congregationalist denomination. He succeeds the late Mr. Samuel B. Capen. Prof. Moore has been intimately related to the life of Harvard University in recent years as religious director in that institution in addition to his professorship in the Divinity School, and will be a valuable leader in bringing cultured young people of the land to give themselves to missionary service. For a number of years he has been chairman of the Prudential committee of his society. He made a trip to China with Secretary J. L. Barton in 1907 to study and report upon various activities of the missions there. His broad interpretation of Christian work and his gracious personality will go far in strengthening the mission work of his denomination. Dr. Moore appeared before the Congress of Disciples at Springfield, Ill., in 1911, when he appeared as the chief speaker of the occasion.

Baptists and Free Baptists Unite in Maine.

The union of the Baptists and the Free Baptists has proceeded with great wisdom. While the leaders of the denominations agreed on the policy of union, the actual merging of their various institutions has been gradual. The denominational press announces recently the merging of the state organizations of the two bodies in Maine.

New President for Princeton Seminary.

Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, D. D., has been elected president of the Princeton Theological Seminary. The inauguration ceremonies occurred on Oct. 13. There were addresses by Rev. Simon T. McPherson, head master of Lawrenceville school, and by Rev. J. Ritchie Smith, D. D., recently elected professor of homiletics at Princeton. The closing address was by Rev. Maitland Alexander, of Pittsburg, moderator of the General Assembly. The seminary also announces the selection of Prof. E. W. Loetscher, D. D., as professor of Church History.

Lutherans Open Home.

The Walther League of the Lutheran Church opened a new home at 4329-33 Calumet Ave., Chicago, on Oct. 25. The Rev. Frederick Pfotenhauer, president of the Evangelical Lutheran Missouri Synod, was in charge of the ceremonies. The object of the home is to provide persons coming to Chicago with the benefit of a Lutheran home and surroundings.

Episcopalians to Evangelize.

The Episcopalians in Chicago and vicinity are arranging to hold simultaneous missions in many of their parishes during the winter. Some of the greatest leaders of this communion are to be in the city and speak during the week of Nov. 1 to 8. The various rectors of the parishes are conferring together in making the arrangements. Episcopalians have not been thought of as an aggressive evangelistic communion. Their growth in recent years, however, shows that they are a virile force in the Christian life of America.

Six States Vote on Prohibition.

At the election next week there is more at stake for the temperance cause in America than at any election in a long time. Six great states are to vote upon the question of state prohibition of the liquor traffic. They are Ohio, Colorado, California, Oregon, Washington and Arizona. In California the question strikes at an agricultural industry, that of the vine-growers. In Ohio there are many large cities whose wet majorities must be overcome. In the other states, however, there is more than an even chance of victory. The rapid increase of prohibition states will help on the national prohibition movement greatly. The Disciples of Christ have furnished some of the great temperance leaders of modern times, and their members have been known all over the land as specially zealous in this cause. Disciple churches in all these states are doubtless throwing the full weight of their influence on the side of a saloonless nation.

Increasing Interest in South America.

South America has been the neglected continent for the past hundred years. This is true in secular matters as well as religious. There is more unexplored territory on that continent than anywhere else in the world. It is only recently that any accurate knowledge of social conditions has been available. We have neglected this neighboring continent and allowed European nations to secure the larger part of the trade. On every hand now there is a disposition to repair this neglect. In the missionary reading courses is a new book written by the Presbyterian leader, Robert E. Speer. It is a balanced treatment, but does not fear to indict the truly shocking religious conditions that are to be found upon that continent. Many of the South American countries are yet predominantly of the native Indian stock with varying mixtures of the Spanish blood. Into Argentine is coming a large Italian immigration. Nearly three-fourths of the total births in some countries are illegitimate. The most degraded condition of family life that can be found in any section of the civilized world obtains in certain of these countries. There has been hesitancy on the part of Protestant churches about doing missionary work in a continent which for 300 years has been called a Christian continent. Now that it is seen with increasing clearness that the Christianity of South America is yet very superficial and superstitious, this hesitancy must give way to a program which will supply the real needs of the people. At last every nation on the continent has been opened to missionary work, and the field calls for more laborers.

Zionites Fight Vaccination.

We have a great variety of little sects in America with various kinds of hobbies. Most of them can be grouped around two interests, faith cure and the Second Coming. The American public is broadly tolerant of these tendencies so long as the several groups do not imperil the rest of us. The refusal of the faith-curists to observe proper hygienic precautions, however, often becomes a source of great anxiety to the general public. At the present time there are a dozen or more cases of small-pox in Zion City, Illinois, near Chicago, the former home of John Alexander Dowie and the present theater of the dramatic performance of Voliva, his successor. The state authorities are undertaking to quarantine and vaccinate to stamp out the plague, but are compelled to fight the religious leaders of Zion to do it.

Brown University Celebrates.

Brown University, Providence, R. I., celebrated its 150th anniversary for five days beginning Sunday afternoon, October 11, with the university sermon preached by President W. P. Faunce at the First Baptist Church. At the time of the founding of the university there were four religious bodies prominent in the life of the colony—Baptists, Quakers, Congregationalists and Episcopalians. The charter of the university gave all four of these bodies representation upon the governing body of the university. Thus this great institution has stood all these years for the principle of co-operation and unity. The various co-operating bodies were represented in the celebration. A number of degrees were conferred, among which was the degree of D. D. upon Dean George Hodges, of the Episcopal Theological School; Dean Charles R. Brown, of Yale School of Religion, and Dr. George A. Gordon, of New Old South Congregational Church, Boston.

Methodists for War Relief.

The board of foreign missions of the M. E. Church has announced the opening of a war relief fund for the benefit of the people of Europe. Officers of the church report that in France 250 Protestant pastors have taken their rifles and marched to the front. Nearly all of the Methodist preachers in Germany are bearing arms.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Author's Note: So much loose and impossible comment on the book has found its way into print that it seems desirable to make an example of one of these reviews lest those who have not taken pains to read the book for themselves may conclude that certain representations of its position are correct. The following article by J. V. Coombs appeared some time ago in the Christian Standard. I have taken time to interpolate corrections of some of his inaccuracies, and have put these corrections in brackets. The charge of intending to deceive the great audience at Bethany Park will hardly need any interpolated explanation or defense.—C. C. Morrison.

C. C. Morrison at Bethany Park.

J. V. Coombs.

On Sunday, July 26, C. C. Morrison delivered the morning sermon to an audience of five or six hundred people. His discourse was well received. I did not hear one objection to it. It was delivered in a fine spirit. All were pleased. In three hours, in his talk on the hotel porch, he was without a follower. I did not see one person who agreed with his explained position.

In his morning sermon he declared that baptism was as essential as faith or repentance. He declared that to abolish baptism was to abolish the Church. To be baptized is to ally one's self with Christ, to enter into his body, and that men are saved by baptism as truly as by faith and repentance. He said no conversion is complete until it is solemnized in baptism; no one can join the Church without being baptized. In his book he says: "Joining the Church is baptism." Franklin, Campbell and Errett preached these same truths and preached them in the same manner that Morrison preached them at Bethany.

In his explanation he departs from our position, for one hundred years. He tells us baptism is a mere [?] induction into a [religious] society—a rite or ceremony. That baptism has nothing to do with water. [This statement is, of course, erroneous.] To be baptized is not [the same as] to be buried in water. That immersion has nothing to do with baptism. [Another erroneous statement. Immersion is the proper mode of administering baptism]. Baptism is an induction. Whenever a man unites himself with a religious society, he is baptized. To be initiated into the Odd Fellows Order is to be baptized into it. If a Republican leaves his party and joins the Progressives, he is baptized into that party. [An erroneous statement]. Allying one's self with the Church is baptism. Initiation is equivalent to baptism. He contends that baptism is merely [?] a spiritual act, and not a physical act. Baptism is an [the] act of initiation into a [religious] community.

In his book on baptism (p. 89), Mr. Morrison says: "Baptism is not immersion, but the moral act of uniting one's self with those who are of like mind [with oneself concerning Jesus Christ]. Baptism is a moral act." ["virtue" instead of "act." That a statement so misleading as this should have been put into quotation marks is surprising.] To be baptized is to accept membership. He teaches that to accept John's baptism was to ally one's self with his movement. To join John's community is to be baptized into his movement. Whenever a man accepts Christ, and [organically] attaches himself to the followers of Christ, he claims that the man is baptized. If a man publicly [and organically] associates himself with God's people, that act is New Testament baptism, according to Mr. Morrison. He may be immersed after that, if he desires, but it is no part of baptism. [But it may be part of re-baptism]. Mr. Morrison says immersion is a mere sign—a custom—and has no more binding force than in giving the hand of fellowship. [Erroneous statement]. It may be omitted without any violation of Christ's commands.

Again, he rejects the classic definition of baptizo, [nonsense] and declares that, in a New Testament sense, it does not mean to immerse. For this position he gives no proof. [The entire book is a collation of proofs.] When a passage is in his way, he sets it aside. [Only one passage is set aside and that not because it is "in his way," but because the facts demand it.] In his book, he casts out as spurious the commission as given by both Matthew and Mark [erroneous statement]. He declares Jesus never commanded any one to be immersed; that there is no divine authority for immersion, and that the commission in Matthew is no part of the original writing, but an interpolation of a later hand. [The book gives the critical data on the text of Matthew's commission but declines to take sides on the critical question. A whole chapter, however, is devoted to proving that, even if it can be shown by the critics that the exact words of the commission do not belong in the text, there is nothing incongruous in the presence of the baptism portion there].

He sets aside [a portion of] John 3:5, and says: "Jesus did not tell Nicodemus that he must be born of water." From what is here stated, I draw these conclusions:

1. When Mr. Morrison preached that sermon he purposely attempted to deceive. When he used the word "baptism" in an entirely new sense, without one word of explanation, [The sense in which the word "baptism" was used in the sermon was thoroughly explained, as Mr. Coombs' statements in his second paragraph above show. It received attention out of all proportion to the other portions of the discourse] although he means an immersion in water, he deceived his audience.

2. If baptizo is not to be translated according to the meaning of the word in classic use, is any other word? If we do not take the definition of this word, what assurance have we that any other word has a meaning? If baptism has a special New Testament use, why not repentance, confession, love or service? [These words do have new meanings in their N. T. use]. If we do not know the meaning of baptism, [we know the meaning of baptism] do we know the meaning of any Greek word? If we do not take the classic meaning, we have no assurance that there is one verse in the New Testament that is true. That wooden interpretation plays havoc with all language.

The Advocate (Methodist) San Francisco, Cal.

This book is significant, owing to the fact that it is written by a member of the Disciples' Church, which has held that baptism by immersion was the only scriptural mode.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

The Character Christ, Fact or Fiction, by William Jefferson Lhamon. The dean of the Bible School of Drury College has undertaken in these thoughtful pages to present the outstanding facts in the character of Christ, and call attention to their significance, quite irrespective of the question as to his actual human experience. For the purposes of this study it is a matter of indifference as to whether Christ was the supreme life in history or the supreme character in literature. The marvel of universality, masterliness, authority, love, severity, serenity and other qualities remains unaffected by the decision as to the fact or the fiction of the portrayal.

W. J. Lhamon.

This is a unique and significant approach to the person of Jesus, and it has special apologetic advantages. The work embodies a series of lectures delivered before the students of the College of Missions. There is an admirable chapter on "Christ and Other Founders." President Paul writes the introduction. (Revell, $1. net.)

Days in the Open, by Lathan A. Crandall. It is a surprise and delight to have an old friend like the author of this book revealed to one in a wholly new light. For years we have known Dr. Crandall as a distinguished Baptist minister, a leader in his denomination, formerly the pastor of Memorial Baptist church in this city, and now at the head of the leading Baptist church of Minneapolis. But in this charming book he is disclosed as the enthusiastic fisherman, a true comrade of Isaac Walton and Henry van Dyke. There is the lure of nature here, the inland lake, the broader reaches of the sea. Moreover there is a lot of human nature in the book, boy and man nature, that holds attention to the end. The book has a handsome form, and numerous illustrations and decorations. (Revell, $1.50 net.)

Christianity and Civilization, by R. W. Church, M. A. A reprint of Dean Church's much quoted lectures on "Civilization Before and After Christianity," and "Some Influences of Christianity Upon National Character." The author's wide knowledge of history, combined with a deep reverence for the Christian faith, makes the series of teachings instructive and timely, even though the work was written some years ago.

The New Home Missions, by Harlan Paul Douglas. The latest volume of the Missionary Educational Movement is a discriminating review of the course of American life from the times when missionary effort was merely a by-product to the present highly organized and complex machinery of evangelization. The problems of country and city are handled with awareness and sympathy. An earnest plea is made for social justice based on actual knowledge of existing conditions. The race questions presented by the Negro, the Mongolian, the Semite and other groups, find suggestive treatment if not solution. But perhaps the most pregnant and forcible chapter is that on the waste of denominationalism under the title, "The Social Reaction of Home Missions Upon the Church." The facts presented in that section of the book ought to jostle the most complacent and incorrigible apologist for divisions. A fine concluding chapter deals with the "Social Realization of Christianity in America." An admirable bibliography is added, and there are illustrations. (Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada.)

The Inner Circle, by Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones. I confess that on opening this book I am disappointed. So fully has Mr. Jones proved his large acquaintance with the master spirits of the literary world that when I learned that a volume had come from his hand I was almost certain it would contain a series of studies in the great writings of the world. Then when I saw that the book was a collection of reflections on the themes of religion, I was at first dissatisfied. But that was before I began to read. And I now realize that the merits which I soon discovered must have been even greater than I thought, to overcome the handicap of my expectation.

For the book is a genuine delight to its readers. In this score of chapters you are taken into that "inner circle" of Mr. Jones' own ministry, and you soon understand why he is such a loved and inspiring personality to his people. These chapters are studies in the spiritual life. In fact they have the form of sermons, with accompanying text and prayer. But they do not read like sermons. They are too intimate and revealing. You see through them, as through a window, the familiar and winsome intercourse of a pastor with his people. Here are figures that you recognize in the personnel of that great church. Here is a wealth of illustration drawn from literature and from life that gives urgency and point to every message. And underneath it all are the eternal values of which the Gospel and the Scriptures are the living disclosure.

This book is most attractive. Those who know and love Mr. Jones will find it a valued and enduring embodiment of his familiar teachings. And those who make his acquaintance from these studies will find charm, enrichment and food for the spiritual life. There is an appropriate introduction by Archibald McLean. (Revell, $1.00 net.)

Books on the War.

Many readers will no doubt be interested in suggestions as to books related to the great war. Here are the names of a few such which have special value: "Pan-Germanism," by Roland G. Usher. The book purports to be a statement of the aims and plans of Germany to become the dominating nation of the world. It indicates that the legend, "William II, Emperor of Europe," which German soldiers wrote on walls of Liege, were not impromptu. A work which deals with the workings of the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente is "Problems of Power," The author, William M. Fullerton, had exceptional opportunities for study of international relations, and earned a reputation for thorough and able discussion. Other books of equal interest and value are Sir Thomas Barclay's "Thirty Years," who was long Paris correspondent of the London Times; "The Whirlpool of Europe," by Alexander R. Colquhon; "The Reconstruction of Europe," by Harold Murdock; "Imperial Outposts," by Col. A. M. Murray; "The Balkans: a Laboratory of History," by Prof. Wm. M. Sloane; "William of Germany," by Stanley Shaw; "The France of Today," by Prof. Barrett Wendell.

From Dr. Zweimer.

"Just as the Moslem conception of God is base, unholy, and to the Christian utterly repugnant, yet Mohammedan theism is a foundation on which we can build a fuller knowledge of the Godhead, of His holiness, justice and love; so Moslems who know Jesus as a mere prophet will for this very reason welcome a larger knowledge of His character, and be led from the Koran caricature to the Gospel portrait. Our preaching should be constructive, and in this way it will most surely be instructive. We can break some false ideas of God and of Christ in Moslem chronology most surely and most speedily by full proclamation of those very truths which Islam lacks. Without denying the fact that Islam is in the spirit anti-Christian, that it contains much that is positively harmful in ethics, and that it is wholly deficient in those doctrines which are the very heart of Christianity, we nevertheless admit that the acceptance of the Old Testament prophets, the peculiar honors paid to our Lord, and the testimony to the sacred scriptures found in the Koran, are important preparatory elements in spite of many qualifications and denials. We must become Moslems to the Moslem if we would gain them for Christ. We must do this in the positive sense without compromise, but with self-sacrifice, sympathy and unselfish love. The Christian missionary should first of all thoroughly know the religion of the people among whom he labors; ignorance of the Koran, the traditions, the life of Mohammed, the Moslem conception of Christ; social beliefs and practices of Mohammedans, which are the result of their religion,—ignorance of these is the chief difficulty in the work for Moslems."—From "The Moslem Christ," by Samuel M. Zweimer (American Tract Society.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Four Decades of Service

With Annual Reports of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The National Convention, held this month at Atlanta, Georgia, completed the fortieth year in the history of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Though its beginning was small, as was fitting for a new movement in our church, yet its aim was as ample and spacious as the Great Commission; from the start it made no distinction between Home and Foreign Missions, and planned to undertake all lines of missionary work. This broad vision has been conspicuously blessed during its four decades of service.

FINANCIAL GROWTH

When the Board was organized in 1874, an offering of $430 was taken. The aim for its fortieth anniversary was appropriately put at $400,000; the receipts reported at the Atlanta Convention were $413,823.87, an excess of nearly fourteen thousand dollars over the aim.

This year's record not only included the steady stream of small gifts, which have always been the very backbone of the organization, but continued the era of large gifts, so happily begun in our centennial campaign. One of the best beloved of our missionaries made a gift of $25,000 in real estate; some of the other large offerings were three gifts of $5,000 each—one from the estate of T. W. Phillips, one from a brother in Iowa for a tuberculosis sanitarium in India, and the same amount from Preston Taylor for a hospital in Liberia, Africa. G. W. Waters, of California, has given $4,000 for the Japanese Christian Institute in Los Angeles, and a friend in New York has donated the same sum. A friend in Nebraska has given $3,000, there have been two gifts of $2,500, three of $1,500, and time and space fail to mention all the generous offerings, ranging from $1,000 to $100. All of this shows, not only greater giving, but expanding interest, and enlarged hearts.

During our forty years of service, over four and one-half millions of dollars have been raised and expended in the beneficent work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, our financial aim for the coming year is $425,000—a modest and conservative ideal, in view of the splendid achievements of the year just closed.

GROWTH IN MEMBERSHIP.

The growth in membership is also most encouraging, during the past year nearly 500 new centers have been entered, and over 9,000 new women enlisted in the work. The missionary army in the Woman's Board are now a great host, and numbers over 87,000 women in its ranks. A hopeful feature is the increasing number of young women who are engaging in the work; our Young Women's Circles are training schools for the laborers of tomorrow; they will step into the gaps made by the passing of the veterans to their rest and reward, and soon the mantle of leadership will fall upon them. And we have faith to believe that here will be found the great recruiting stations for volunteers to the foreign mission field; in these Circles we have the greatest requirements for the making of women missionaries—youth, Christian character, missionary information, and the resulting missionary zeal.

GROWTH IN WORK.

The work has shown the same forward movement that we find in the offerings and members.

Our educational work is maintaining the high standard set by past years. In our 65 schools, 6,000 pupils have been taught; over 1,400 of these have attended our four mountain schools in the Southern Appalachian region, and 525 were enrolled in our six negro schools in the

Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

South. The spirit and interest in our Bible Chairs at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and Austin, Texas, have been most unusual. The classes at Ann Arbor were attended by 280 students, and in them were men from India, China, Japan, Africa, Siam, Greece and Jamaica. "Truly," says Professor Iden, "the possibilities of our work are limitless." Professor Jewett reports almost as fine a record for the Texas Bible Chair.

THE COLLEGE OF MISSIONS.

Our College of Missions has had the best year in its history; last June, twelve students completed the required courses at the college, and were formally set apart for foreign service in three continents. But the bulk of our educational work is still on the foreign field—at each of our stations this great part of the great commission is going steadfastly forward.

We have 85 Bible schools in foreign lands, with 5,825 pupils in attendance.

Our benevolent work is still following in the very footsteps of Jesus; in our hospitals and dispensaries 50,000 patients have received the ministry of healing. We have 460 women and children in our orphanages and training homes; the women in our Kulpaher Home are taught to do exquisite handiwork, and to earn money, as they become proficient, from their sewing department amounting to $1,270 and from the farm and garden amounting to ninety dollars.

The note of evangelism is struck in every field, and every line of work—in our schools, our orphanages, our hospitals, as well as our churches, the claims of Jesus Christ as Saviour of men are pressed home. And our missionaries are not confining themselves to the stations, but are preaching the word in other cities also; in India, 707 villages have been entered by our evangelists.

Our work for the year has meant not only expansion in fields already possessed, but undertaking new enterprises. Our new Christian Institute for the Japanese in Los Angeles is almost finished, and a similar building for the Chinese in San Francisco is well under way. We are answering the insistent call from China, and have taken steps to open a girls' schools at Luchowfu, and to establish a Women's College at Nanking, in co-operation with other Boards.

THE MEXICAN WORK.

The hindrances to the work in Mexico, by revolution and civil war, will yet contribute to the furtherance of the task there. Nearly all the Mission Boards laboring in the republic have entered into an agreement for thorough co-operation, and when American missionaries are allowed to go back, a united campaign for help and uplift will be undertaken in a way never before attempted in that unhappy land.

Many more things might be told, but this must suffice for this time. May our Father make his servants worthy of the great charge committed to their hands, and give them wisdom and strength to meet its difficulties, and bear its burdens, so that the time may be hastened when the living Christ will be sent to every living creature. I. W. H.

WHAT ONE WOMAN HAS DONE

According to reports that come from New York, Miss Davis, the first woman Commissioner of Correction in America, has worked wonders in improving the penal institutions of the city. She found them filled with a never ending stream of drug and liquor and vice soaked humanity. After quietly investigating, she found that there was collusion between the guards and prisoners, who were kept supplied with liquor and dope by guards. She soon put a stop to the custom, not until the rebellion of the guards had been put down and the more persistent discharged. There was a strike also among the drug victims but her firmness and quiet display of authority won the day and a new order of things was instituted.

At Blackwell's Island a physician of her staff was convicted of providing drugs for the inmates and given two years in the state prison, a severe but all too light a punishment for the debasing crime. The removal of stripes, humane treatment, an effort to reform the human derelicts, which has been attended with great success and other reforms mark the administration of the remarkable woman who shows what one of her sex can do when given the opportunity. There is no higher work than the lifting of fallen humanity from the depths of sin and degradation and Miss Davis seems to have been especially created for that work. Her appointment, though bitterly opposed when it was suggested has proven a Godsend to fallen humanity and proven that women are especially adapted for such work.

Disciples Table Talk

Affection for Dr. Powell.

Dr. Powell's illness has given occasion for his great church in Louisville, Ky., and for the entire community to show the profound affection in which he is held. As a mark of loyalty to him, the church members and the children of the Sunday-school have consciously responded to the suggestion to put forth special efforts to maintain attendance at all services and to support the activities of the Church with more than accustomed faithfulness. A neighboring pastor, Rev. Aquila Webb, of the Memorial Presbyterian Church, offered the following prayer on the Sunday after Dr. Powell underwent his operation:

"O Thou who hearest prayer, we pray Thee to be very kind and merciful to Thy son, Dr. Powell, whose body suffers in pain and weakness. Grant unto him patience and tranquility of mind; peace, purity and courage of soul; the strong will to live if it be Thy will; and a heart ready to trust Thee waking or sleeping. Bless all the means used for his recovery, and all who minister to him in his suffering. Make Thou his bed in his sickness, and comfort him as a mother comforteth her child. Restore him speedily to health, if it please Thee, but above all things grant him that which Thou knowest to be best for him, and keep him Thine forevermore. Amen."

W. R. Warren, of Indianapolis, preached for Dr. Powell on October 18, and President R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania University on October 25. Dr. Powell's strength is slowly, but all think surely, returning since his operation on October 10.

Hugh T. Miller for U. S. Senator.

Hugh T. Miller, the Republican candidate for U. S. Senator in Indiana, is the president of the Board of Elders of the Church of Disciples in Columbus, Indiana, and one of the staunch Disciples of the state. He was for some years Professor of Romance Languages in Butler College but is now in the banking business. He is a son of John C. Miller who gave a long and talented life to the cause of Christ in Indiana and is also a son-in-law of Z. T. Sweeney, so well known in the state. If elected Mr. Miller will take his Christianity to Washington with him and upon all great issues will be found upon the side of Christianity and humanity.

Men and Millions Team in Kentucky.

The Men and Millions Movement team has opened its campaign in Kentucky and filled all the pulpits in Lexington on October 18. The following men and women compose the team which will initiate the movement in Lexington: H. J. Derthick, Mrs. Anna Atwater and W. H. Warren, of Indianapolis; President R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania University; E. C. Saum and H. D. Wolfe, missionaries to India; W. R. Holder, missionary to South Africa; S. G. Inman, missionary in Piedras Negras, Mexico; Mr. M. L. Pierce, of Canton, O.; R. H. Miller, Buffalo, N. Y.; A. E. Cory, Cincinnati; President Frederick Kershner, University of Texas; President R. H. Crambett, of Bethany College, and George W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

Memorial Tablet to F. D. Power.

The Vermont Avenue Church of the Disciples in Washington unveiled a tablet to the memory of the late F. D. Power who was for a whole generation pastor of that church. The tablet is of bronze in bas-relief about three and a half by five and a half feet in size, mounted at the right of the pulpit over the doorway leading from the main auditorium to the Sunday-school room. The half-length figure of Mr. Power is framed by a Gothic arch. He stands beside his pulpit preaching to the people. Below is the inscription, "Frederick D. Power, thirty-six years pastor of this church." In the upper corners unobstrusively appear the dates of his birth and death. The sculptor was Mr. H. K. Bush-Brown. He has interpreted the fine phases of Mr. Power's life and character. The uplifted hand denotes the spiritual teacher and expresses the burden of his message to the world. The idea is also conveyed by the open Bible on the pulpit and the inscription along the arch quoting one of his favorite expressions, "The greatest thing in the world is to be a Christian." The tablet is erected by the members of the congregation and other friends of Doctor Power as a loving tribute to the memory of the man who ministered to them so faithfully for more than a generation. The committee in charge consisted of William P. Lipscomb, Mrs. A. Johns, Dr. N. R. Jeuner, John D. Fall, Emerson W. Matthews and E. W. Davis. Earle Wilfley is Dr. Power's successor in the pastorate of this church.

Memorial Tablet to Doctor Power.

THE CONVENTION "CENTURY."
You will want a number of them to give to your friends. Order them now. Only a limited number printed. Five cents per copy.

Mrs. Lohr Detained.

Mrs. Bertha Lohr, a missionary supported by our church in Atchison, Kans., was in Germany when the war broke out and those in America did not know whether she would be permitted to continue her journey to India. A letter received by the church at Atchison states that Mrs. Lohr is in New York. Because she was a German subject, she was not allowed to go to India, which is ruled by the English. The board of missions will give her another assignment but it is not yet known where she will be sent.

Governor Addresses Des Moines Disciples.

About two hundred members of the Disciples' Social Union of Des Moines gathered on the evening of October 20, to hear an address by Governor George W. Clarke. The same evening there were addresses by Dr. Hill M. Bell, president of Drake University, Dr. Chas. S. Medbury, and Dr. Finis Idleman. Twelve of our churches were represented at this dinner. Governor Clarke spoke on the subject of "Moral Issues as Relating to the State," and pointed out that the greatest forces in the world today are the moral forces. "There is no force equal to the moral force," he said. "I do not believe there can be an efficient life unless it has beneath it a real moral foundation, that which makes life worth living and enjoying. The state cannot be great except through great citizenship, and that citizenship must be made up of moral men and women."

Charles Reign Scoville in Union Meeting.

The churches in Pueblo, Colo., have united for a union meeting under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville of Chicago. Dr. Scoville reports that at the end of twenty-four days of invitation, 3,756 people had come forward in response to the invitation. The meetings are held in a tabernacle, built for the occasion, which is being crowded to its capacity. The wet and dry campaign has added intensity and significance to the meetings. The city authorities have had to provide a policeman to accompany the evangelistic party home to the hotel each evening. Some of the strongest men of the city have come out on the side of the church during these meetings.

Preaches from "Epistle of Straw."

Evidently Ira L. Parvin of Niagara Falls, New York, does not agree with the saying of Martin Luther that James was an epistle of straw for we find him announcing a series of sermons from this epistle. There are fourteen subjects in all and some of the more striking titles are "The Tongue," "Judging our Neighbors," "The Miseries of the Miser," and "Saving a Soul from Death." The initial sermon of the series deals with critical questions surrounding the epistle.

First Gift to Board of Education.

Dr. Charles E. Underwood reports that the first gift to the newly formed Board of Education among the Disciples of Christ has come in from the church at Lawson, Mo. This board is numbered among the beneficiaries of the new budget prepared by the General Convention.

A Cornerstone Laid.

It was a simple but very beautiful ceremony which marked the laying of the cornerstone of the new building at Cadillac, Mich., September 23. The building is to cost about five thousand dollars. J. H. Versey is the pastor.

New Church Organized.

D. A. Leak has been holding a meeting in new territory at Merryville, La., and the result of the meeting is a new church with forty-two members. There are confessions at almost every service and the meeting continues. W. L. Morrow will settle with the new church as pastor and divide his time with Bessmay, Tex.

Calls Educational Program a College.

The Seventh church of Indianapolis has enlarged its educational work so that it has now a faculty of teachers who teach Church History, the Bible, Religious Pedagogy and Christian Ethics, Missions, Social Service and other topics. These various courses are all given on Thursday evening of each week and are followed by general lectures the same evening. The work is designed for lay workers who wish to take their religion more seriously and become more thoroughly prepared for the duties of the Christian life. A neat booklet has been printed cataloging the courses. The plan is one that should be suggestive to many city pastors who are in similar situations.

Sermons at Union Avenue, St. Louis.

B. A. Abbott of Union Avenue Church in St. Louis has issued a card announcing his sermon subjects for several Sundays in advance beginning with October 25th. The following is the series for the morning service: "The Greatness of Being a Church-member," "Doing Something Definite in the Church," "He that Giveth," "Zebedee: Men that Miss It." The evening services are evidently designed somewhat more for the man or woman outside the church. The following is the series for the evening: "Review of Macfarlane's 'Those Who Have Come Back,'" "What a Man Has Who Has No Religion," "Christians and Near Christians," "Flaming Hearts and Fiery Tongues." This church is to have the every member canvass on November 15th.

Trusted Leaders Leave Illinois.

Among the stanuch lay members of the Disciples in Illinois for the past twenty years few have been better known than Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Darst of Eureka and later of Peoria, Ill. On a recent evening Central Church of Peoria gave a reception to them. They are leaving in a few days to spend the remaining years of their lives in California.

Noted Suffragist Speaks.

Dr. Anna H. Shaw, one of the leaders in the cause of woman's suffrage, spoke on Oct. 18 at First church, St. Louis, of which John L. Brandt is pastor. Her address was received with the greatest interest and reported fully in the St. Louis newspapers.

Hoopeston Church Banishes White Elephant.

The church at Hoopeston, Ill., has been under a sense of great burden for a long time with a debt of over $6,000 on which $350 of interest was paid annually. The pastor, Andrew Scott, who had previously been successful in raising the money to pay off mortgages at Saginaw, Mich., Pontiac, Ill., and Danville, Ill., was the leader in doing the same thing for Hoopeston. The new state secretary, John R. Golden, spoke to this congregation on Oct. 18 and added to the rejoicing of the happy day of the church's deliverance. A. I. Zeller, of Chicago Heights, Ill., will assist in a meeting beginning Oct. 26.

Speaks on Trip to Holy Land.

It was the privilege of Grant W. Speer, pastor of Central church, Toledo, O., to make a trip to the Holy Land last summer. He is announcing a series of Sunday morning addresses on the country made sacred by our Bible stories and will speak on successive days on Sharon, Jerusalem, Jericho, Hebron, Shechem, Nazareth, and the Sea of Galilee. On Thursday evenings, he will speak on the various social customs of Palestine.

Indiana Sunday Schools Help Christmas Ship.

The Huntington County, Ind., Sunday Schools, which held a convention in the Disciples church in Huntington recently, decided to assist in the Christmas ship movement for the help of the poor children of Europe. An address was made by C. K. Lucas and the whole audience voted unanimously to co-operate. From various parts of the country, reports are coming indicating interest in this Christian enterprise.

Winters, Cal., Pastor Brings Home Bride.

Frank Stuart Ford, who was formerly pastor at Alameda and more lately at Winters, Cal., returned to the scenes of his former pastorate on Nov. 4, and was there married to Miss Charlotte Thompson. The officiating minister was George W. Brewster of San Jose. Mr. Ford has thus added a most significant scriptural qualification for his ministerial work.

New Church Started at Ennis.

The congregation at Ennis, Texas, on Sept. 26 laid the cornerstone for a new building. E. R. Cockrell, of Texas Christian University, was invited to deliver the address on the occasion. His leading thoughts were "Worship, Teaching and Service." He said in part, "Better houses of worship lead to a more reverent citizenship. Teaching leads to a more useful citizenship. Service leads to a practical citizenship."

Church Buys a Bale of Cotton.

In these days of financial stress in the south, various kinds of business are being called upon to buy bales of cotton in order to help out the cotton farmer and prevent a radical drop of prices. When the Central West Texas convention went to Haskell, they found in the open square of the town a bale of cotton marked as follows: "Bought by the First Christian Church of Haskell at ten cents a pound for State Missions." The church had bought the bale of cotton by popular subscription and given it to the missionary organization of that part of the state. This created a fine interest for the convention and the sessions were well attended by local people.

Missionary Organizes New Church in New Mexico.

W. J. Burner has been compelled to give up his missionary work in South America, but his interest in the Spanish speaking peoples has not abated. He has gone to New Mexico, where we have few churches and where there is much home missionary work to be done and organized a church at Mesilla Park. The members of this church are mostly Iowa people but in the vicinity are many Mexicans and it is the purpose of Mr. Burner to attempt to reach these with sermons in the Spanish language.

S. T. Willis on "Eyes of the World."

S. T. Willis, of First Church, St. Paul, Minn., exploited the work of Harold Bell Wright in a recent sermon, telling of his early career as a minister and of his splendid literary successes of later years. Speaking of Mr. Wright's last book, "The Eyes of the World," Mr. Willis said: "The purpose of the bok, beyond a doubt, is an attempt to correct some of the terrible mistakes made by the school of realism in art, in letters and in music. The terrible battles fought out by Aaron King, the artist hero, are sympathetic of our times. Thousands of brilliant men and women are today prostituting their gifts, which are God given, and have sold their birthrights for a mess of pottage."

Prosperity at Winfield, Kans.

Richard Gentry and his people at Winfield, Kans., are prospering in their church work. There was a considerable debt when he began his ministry there, of which three thousand dollars was paid off the first year, and now the people appreciatively say they want him to stay with them at least seven years more, and raise one thousand dollars a year on the debt. Already six hundred dollars has been raised on the amount for the current year. A union evangelistic campaign is now under way in which seven churches are co-operating.

Dr. Willett at Evanston.

Dr. Willett supplied the pulpit of the Congregational church at Evanston, Chicago, many years ago and he has never been forgotten there. There are various organizations in the city which delight to arrange for a visit from him every year. He spoke on the afternoon of Oct. 18 before the Y. M. C. A. meeting and his thoughtful and reverent address on the Bible left a deep and favorable impression in the minds of his hearers.

M. E. Chatley Leads Ministers.

The Rock Island, Ill., Ministerial Association at a recent meeting elected M. E. Chatley, pastor of the Memorial Church of Disciples of that city, president for the ensuing year.

Judge Scofield Preaches Again.

Among the lay preachers of Illinois, probably none is better known than Judge C. J. Scofield of Carthage. On Oct. 11, the pastor, A. L. Cole, was absent at the national convention and the judge took his place. He is not quite as young as he used to be but his many friends are always interested in hearing his messages.

New Woman Worker at Newark, O.

The functions of a pastoral assistant have never been very accurately defined among our churches but a rather unusual and suggestive combination is that at Newark, Ohio, where W. D. Ward ministers. Miss Mary Hughes, the daughter of our pastor at Catlin, Ill., is going to be the musical director and assistant pastor at Newark. This will solve two important problems in the life of that church.

A New Church Building for Idaho.

Building churches in the great northwest is not the simple matter that it seems in some older and well-established communities. Our people at Payette, Idaho, are to be congratulated, therefore, upon their announcement that they are starting work on a new brick and stone church to cost $15,000. The old frame church has been moved off the old foundation and occupies a position in the middle of the side street. Benjamin Smith is the pastor.

Benefit Performance for Church Society.

The Whatsoever Circle, of Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo., arranged with the Auditorium theater on Oct. 15 for a special evening in which the play, "The Servant in the House," would be given. The profits of the evening accruing to the church society are to be devoted to the philanthropic work of the church.

Memorial Window by Railroad Men.

In the new Disciple church which has been built at Phillipsburg, Kans., a memorial window was placed by railroad men with the inscription, "Presented by the Rock Island railroad employees." The church is built of cement blocks at a cost of ten thousand dollars and the interior is finished mission style. The building is modern in every way, having a hot water furnace and a hot and cold water service in the building.

Annual Meeting at Keokuk.

Our church at Keokuk, Iowa, held its annual meeting on a recent evening. The various departments of the church showed a healthy condition of growth during the past year. The church has reduced its indebtedness during the past year by $920. The Sunday-school has gone in debt the past year for four hundred dollars' worth of equipment but the attendance has been very gratifying, being part of the time greater than the total church enrolment. At the close of the meeting a reception was held for the pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Baker.

The Armies of England, France, Germany and Russia are not permitted to use a pound of alum baking powder. The efficiency of the soldiers depends too much upon their health and endurance to risk the use of food which the authorities believe would be detrimental. Therefore the manufacture and sale of the alum powder is prohibited.

Royal Baking Powder is extensively used privately and by the military forces throughout the world. Its absolute wholesomeness, imparting as it does, healthful as well as appetizing qualities to the food, and its perfect keeping qualities in every climate and under different conditions, make it particularly desirable for all conditions of use.

Meeting Starts with Church Census.

In the evangelistic meeting which the Vawter Evangelistic Company is starting at Atchison, Kans., the beginning is being made by taking a religious census of the entire city. The work is to be done with great care and by means of this census the personal workers of the church will be enabled to work intelligently for the meeting. This method appeals to us as the best approach to an evangelistic meeting that could be well devised.

Convention Number of the "Century."

There are words of appreciation on every hand for the special convention number of the Christian Century. If you wish to present copies of this number to members of your church, to be kept by them as souvenirs, they may be obtained from this office at five cents per copy. A limited number only have been printed.

Minister Forsakes Single Blessedness.

A. R. Anderson has been announced as leaving the Lansdowne Christian church of East St. Louis to go to Granite City. Soon after his arrival on the new field he went back to St. Louis and was married to Miss Carolina Eugenia Kock. The ceremony was solemnized by B. A. Abbott, of the Union Avenue Church. Announcement of the wedding was made at the close of Mr. Anderson's service October 11. As this was the first intimation given the congregation of the marriage there was surprise on every hand coupled with congratulations.

Gymnasium in Big Kansas City Church.

The Independence Boulevard church of Kansas City has opened up its gymnasium for the fall term under the supervision of H. C. Wood. Classes are held every Tuesday and Thursday nights at 7 o'clock for boys and 8 o'clock for men. Considerable attention will be given to basket ball this winter. Efforts are being made to revive the Sunday School League and if this is done, the Independence boulevard team will be entered.

Rally Day Connected with District Census.

At the Broadway church in Los Angeles, Cal., they arranged a Bible School Rally Day for Oct. 18. Previous to the Rally day the school had made a census of its districts, keeping a classified record of all the names turned in. The Rally Day helped in part to organize the follow-up system in looking after the results of this census. Much credit is due the faithful superintendent. Chas. F. Hutslar is pastor.

W. H. Allen Lectures on Australia.

W. H. Allen was for six years pastor of our church at Muncie, Ind., but for the past three years he has been in Australia, pastor of our church in Melbourne. He returned to his church at Muncie on a recent evening and lectured to his former congregation on his experiences in Australia. He mentioned the plague of rabbits. "The introduction of rabbits into the country several years ago resulted in their multiplying so rapidly that the rabbit has become a pest and a pest fund of $125,000 annually is necessary in the state of Victoria alone to keep the rabbits from destroying the crops. Farmers find it necessary to fence in their fields with a wire netting to guard against the animals."

Manila Mission Adds Printing Press.

A new press has been installed by the missionaries in Manila. During one month there were 825 new subscribers to our monthly, which is published by our mission on this press.

Oklahoma City School Bears Fruit.

Miss Margaret Darst, of Oklahoma, sailed for China, August 29, on the S. S. "Korea" from San Francisco. She will be supported by the First Sunday-school at Oklahoma City, Okla.

CHICAGO DISCIPLES.

There have been changes in nearly half the Disciples' pulpits in Chicago during the past twelve months. In most cases the new pastors coming to the city are without previous city experience but are rapidly making themselves acquainted with the ways of the metropolis.

The Christian Business Men's Association is an organization of laymen from the various Chicago churches which dines in the loop district at regular intervals and which undertakes special work to help on the cause of church extension in Chicago. They are announcing a dinner at the City Club on the evening of Nov. 5 at which O. F. Jordan and Basil S. Keusseff will speak on the mission work among the Russians of Chicago. The officers of the association this year are Edward Witwer, president, and W. D. Freyburger, Secretary.

The West Pullman church has just completed a two weeks' evangelistic meeting with C. G. Kindred of Englewood doing the preaching.

The new mission in Edgewater has been having good attendance at its services. The preachers for October were Austin Hunter, W. G. Winn, W. F. Shaw and O. F. Jordan. It is the plan to have Chicago pastors fill the pulpit while the work is in the initial stages.

A study of six years of statistics of the Chicago situation shows that our Sunday schools have made no growth in that period and the Christian Endeavor societies have suffered a loss, but the church membership has increased 15 per cent. The Protestant Sunday Schools of all denominations in Chicago report a loss of enrollment of eight thousand in this period.

The Chicago ministers meet at 12:30 every Monday in the cafeteria on the third floor of the Y. M. C. A. where they have engaged a private room. The new officers are: President, Asa McDaniel; vice-president, W. G. Winn; secretary, W. C. Hull. A program for coming meetings will be issued soon. The meeting on Oct. 19 was devoted to convention reports from Atlanta. Six of the preachers had been at the convention. The ministers extend a cordial invitation to visiting ministers to attend the meetings when convenient.

The Sunday school statistics that are published every week indicate that our Chicago Sunday schools are having the best attendance this fall that they have had since we began collecting the statistics. The introduction of graded lessons and the adoption of more consciously pedagogial methods accounts for the success in many schools.

The attendance at the Disciples' Divinity House this fall is the best in a number of years. Dr. Errett Gates is teaching a class in Disciples' history, which has a large enrollment. The students who have come are of unusual promise.

The Disciples of Chicago co-operate in the support of a union Chinese mission which is attracting attention all over America. A number of struggling denominational missions have been brought together under a completely trained Chinese minister of the Baptist faith. These Chinese Christians are contributing sixty dollars a month to their own support and have three hundred men enrolled in their Sunday-school, besides sixty children in the Primary department.

The Russian mission at 1709 S. Halsted street has resumed its night school for the new season. This school meets with large appreciation on the part of the Slavic immigrants. They are anxious to emancipate themselves from the labor boss and from many other undesirable conditions through the knowledge of our language.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

If the war in Europe should continue very long the missionaries on the Congo might be embarrassed in securing proper food and other supplies from England. They have been asked by those in government authority to assist in keeping the natives quiet.

A. F. Hensey reports 192 baptisms at Bolenge, Congo, Africa, since the close of the annual report in May. The work prospers.

The missionaries in Africa are very anxious for R. A. Doan to visit them on his proposed circuit of the globe. Owing to the war conditions, however, he may return to America from Japan about January first.

A cablegram from our missionaries to Batang, Tibet, under date of October 14, announces their safe arrival. The number in this company is eight.

W. R. Hunt has been having fine audiences among the churches at Southport, Southampton and Hornsey, England. It will be remembered he is a missionary of the Foreign Society on furlough from Chuchow, China. He is a native of London. The missionary enthusiasm has been intensified. Mr. Hunt finds the country deeply stirred by the great war. He will do the work of a chaplain and also work in the Red Cross Military Hospitals, and the experience gained in the Chinese Revolution will be to his advantage. This service will keep him busy during his furlough.

Writing from Bolenge, Africa, under date of August 13, A. F. Hensey says: "Our chief concern now is to get the necessary money to carry on the work. English checks and American bills of exchange are never easy to get into cash, and now it is impossible."

Dr. L. F. Jaggard writing from Monieka, Congo, Africa, June 28th, says: "This morning I baptized 42. Eighteen were women. This afternoon I married twelve couples."

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

THE CHRISTMAS SHIP SAILS NOVEMBER 10

That means that your gifts must not only be in Brooklyn by that date but must have been sorted, packed, addressed and loaded on board the battleship.

There is no time for delay! Every reader of The Christian Century should have a part in this enterprise.

Ship your goods direct to the BUSH TERMINAL, Brooklyn, N. Y. Clothes are most needed. Do not send second hand garments.

Be sure to mark them plainly, "FOR THE CHRISTMAS SHIP."

CASH DONATIONS may be sent any time before Christmas to "Christmas Ship Department, The Conquest, 700 E. 40th St., Chicago." These contributions will be acknowledged and sent to the distributing centers in Europe.

JESUS AND PETER.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 15.

Mark 14:27-31, 53, 54, 66-72.

Memory Verses, 71, 72.

Golden Text.—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. 1 Cor. 10:12.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(53) And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and there come together with him all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes. (54) And Peter had followed him afar off, even within, into the court of the high priest: and he was sitting with the officers, and warming himself in the light of the fire.

(66) And as Peter was beneath in the court, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest; (67) and seeing Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and saith, Thou also wast with the Nazarene, even Jesus. (68) But he denied, saying, I neither know, nor understand what thou sayest: and he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. (69) And the maid saw him, and began again to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. (70) But he again denied it. And after a little while again they that stood by said to Peter, Of a truth thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean. (71) But he began to curse, and to swear, I know not this man of whom ye speak. (72) And straightway the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word, how that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 53. And they led Jesus away to the high priest: Upon his arrest in the Garden of Gethsemane, Jesus was taken before the Sanhedrin for trial. His arraignment before Rome's representative, Pontius Pilate, follows the trial before the Sanhedrin. This body consisted of Caiaphas, the chief priests, and the ex-high-priests.

v. 54. And Peter had followed Him afar off: Peter was a wonderful man, but he was only a man. He was the man of "rock" as compared with other men, yet he was subject to the frailties of the flesh. He had trusted in Jesus in a marvelous fashion and had demonstrated his great passion for the teacher on the occasion of Jesus' arrest when he drew his sword and cut off the ear of the soldier. But now, the Master is in the hands of the enemy and there seems to be no doubt but that his end is at hand. I think we should place emphasis on the words "Peter followed," rather than "afar off." Warming himself: It was a cold spring night and the glowing charcoal brazier was most welcome.

v. 66. And as Peter was beneath in the court: The farcical trial was probably held in an upper room. Peter shows, by his lingering near, that he is devoted to his Master. There cometh one of the maids of the high priest: It is quite likely that she was sent by the enemies of Jesus.

v. 67. Thou also wast with the Nazarene, even Jesus: She might have seen him with Jesus at some time, but it is more probable that she discerned the fact that he was one of the followers of Jesus from his downcast appearance. The Nazarene, even Jesus: She must have spoken these words with sarcasm for Nazareth was regarded as a very inconsequential place. And the addition of the words even Jesus was simply an intensification of the sting. Of all Nazarenes, Jesus was, in the minds of the enemies at least, the one most despicable.

v. 68. And he denied: It is easy for us to condemn Peter; but how many of us would have done otherwise? We would not think of justifying such an act but we would plead for a more merciful attitude toward him than is held by many Bible students. I neither know, nor understand what thou sayest: Peter was an extremist. He never occupied neutral ground. He could not possibly have made an apologetic admittance that he had been with Jesus. Having given up his hope for Jesus and His work, he throws all the fine sentiments of his life overboard and disavows any connection, whatsoever, with the Nazarene. And he went out into the porch: He went out into the forecourt. No doubt he wished to hide his guilty face.

v. 69. And the maid saw him: She saw the discomfort into which she had forced him. But she is not satisfied, for she began to say to them that stood by, "This is one of them": Peter's punishment is very severe. He is learning that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

v. 70. Of a truth thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean: In Matt. 26:73, we find "for thy speech betrayeth thee." It is said that the speech of Galileans was more guttural and substituted t for s.

v. 71. He began to curse and to swear: Henry Drummond points out that it is probable that Peter had cursed many times before this. A man does not suddenly acquire the habit of uttering oaths. Peter was no doubt a profane man when he was a fisherman. He is, now, simply reverting back to the old sinful man.

v. 72. And straightway the second time the cock crew: The upper room prophecy of Jesus has been fulfilled. And Peter called to mind the word: Luke says "And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter, and Peter remembered." "If I could paint a portrait of Peter I would write on every hair of his head forgiveness of sins" (Luther). It is the repentant heart that makes possible the incoming of the spiritual Jesus.

When Human Nature Gives Way

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Men of various qualities were chosen by the Master to compose the inner circle. He could come into any modern church and select twelve similar men. They were quite ordinary men but they had an extraordinary training and therefore did remarkable things. Peter was a "great boy of a man." He was just the kind of a man to whom you and I are attracted—big-hearted, impetuous, active. He is the man who will lend you his last dollar. He will sit up all night with you when you are sick. He will turn aside from his work to do you a good turn. He prizes your friendship and talks much about it. But he has his weak points and you fear for him under certain temptations. Perhaps he drinks when in certain groups. Perhaps he dishonors his church when he gets out with a certain crowd. He is right at heart and his repentance will save him.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

THE STRAIN.

You must put yourself in his place. He was unstrung that night. He had tried to defend his Master and had been rebuked for it. He had had such confidence in Christ only to see him dragged off like an ordinary offender by soldiers. The plot was deepening and death seemed sure. He was dazed by the sweep of events. There was no flaw in his love but he was in the house of his enemies. Who has not compromised his faith in such an hour?

THE ENEMY'S HOUSE.

Two young ministerial students from one of our rural colleges went, one evening, to visit, in a great city, some former companions. They found them residing in elegant bachelor quarters in a downtown apartment. The furnishings were expensive and in excellent taste. There was a Bohemian atmosphere about the place, one seemed to breathe license. The former companions were brilliant, they knew the latest slang and the best stories. To listen to these stories was to compromise one's position. Cigarettes of most bewitching odor were lighted and offered the budding theologs who awkwardly refused. Their discomfort was ill-concealed. Two other men drifted in, if possible, more clever and worldly-wise than the others. Merry jest, circling smoke, clinking glasses filled the hour. The students hardly knew whether to feel insulted or complimented. They felt decidedly out-of-place. Their awkwardness was desperate. They did not yield to the subtle temptations but when, late at night, they climbed up the hill to the old college the pure air and the shining stars never were more welcome.

THE COMPROMISE.

No man lives long in the modern city without entering the enemy's house. He spends his evening with the ultra-liberal thinker and commits himself to extreme views which later he knows are untenable. In a group of prominent men he sanctions situations which, when he is alone, he abhors himself for accepting. For the sake of being a good-fellow he oversteps the mark. For the sake of being considered broadminded he scoffs at good old Puritanic virtues. For the sake of his own amusement he permits others to sacrifice their virtues. For the sake of keeping up appearance he permits himself to become hard and even vicious in his business. Ah, Peter, we have great sympathy with you. We know the strain. All of us have warmed our hands in the high priest's house. All of us have heard some satirical voice saying, "And you are one of the crowd!"

WHY BOYS SWEAR.

A noted teacher of psychology says that boys swear because it seems to give them importance. A boy swears for the same reason that a peacock spreads its tail! He knows he is small and he takes a short-cut to greatness. His bluster, swagger, vociferous oaths seem to him to enhance his majesty!

How human this all is! He swore and he lied. He did it to save himself. It was weakly contemptible. It is the lie for personal gain. The child's lie to his parent; the scholar's lie to his teacher; the politician's lie to his supporter; the husband's lie to his wife; the landowner's lie to his assessor; the church-member's lie to his minister; the shopkeeper's lie to his customer. The weak, pitiable, contemptible lie. Abhor it.

HE WEPT.

His heart was right, you see. Had he had a hard heart that would have been the end of him. He was weak. Old habits cropped out. He swore. He lied. But he also wept. His tears washed out the stain of his evil deed. Here was genuine repentance. Can you picture him going out into the night, wandering in the gardens. One moment he is condemning himself; the next he is weeping bitterly; the next he is calling upon God to forgive him; the next he is pledging himself never to fall again. Fire, hissing tears, shock and strain—and the spirit of Peter is tempered.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 4.

Pioneer Studies: Walter Scott. 2 Tim. 2:15; Acts. 2:37-41.

"Among the helpers and fellow laborers of Alexander Campbell, the first place in zeal and ability must be awarded to Walter Scott. Making the apostles his model, he went before the world with the same message, in the same order, with the same conditions and promises, and inviting instant compliance with its claims."

Alexander Campbell expressed his estimate of Walter Scott in these words: "Next to my father, he was my most cordial and indefatigable fellow-laborer in the origin and progress of the present reformation. We often took counsel together in our efforts to plead and advocate the paramount claims of original and apostolic Christianity. His whole heart was in the work. He was, indeed, truly eloquent in the whole import of that word in pleading the claims of the Author and Founder of the Christian faith and hope; in disabusing the inquiring mind of all its prejudices, misapprehensions and errors."

A TEACHING EVANGELIST.

Walter Scott taught the people out of the scriptures. His method of evangelizing was strange to the churches. Much value was attached to dreams and visions by the people to whom Walter Scott first preached. To have a "religious experience" was to become excited, to be hypnotized, to be beside oneself. It was not enough that a man loved God and his neighbor and manifested his love by leading a clean, useful life. A man of this sort was not "spiritual." Susceptibility to hypnotic suggestion is identified with spirituality by some who are at the present making a good deal of noise in backward communities. Walter Scott bade men search the scriptures to find out what to do to be saved.

HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY.

The part of man in his own salvation was underrated in the preaching of a hundred years ago. F. D. Power quotes a minister as praying thus: "O Lord! here are sinners desiring to be converted; Lord, they cannot convert themselves; O Lord, we cannot convert them. No one, Lord, can convert them but thyself. And now, Lord, why don't you do it?" Walter Scott did not deny the power of God. Salvation for him was of God. But he believed that God would do his part. His ambition was to persuade men to do their part. If they did, he was sure they would receive the blessing of God.

ADVERTISING.

Power relates this incident to illustrate Scott's method of evangelizing. "Riding into a village near the close of the day he spoke to a number of school children and gathered them about him. 'Children,' said he, 'hold up your left hands. Now, beginning with your thumbs, repeat what I say to you Faith, repentance, baptism, remission of sins, gifts of the Holy Spirit—that takes all your fingers. Now again: Faith, repentance, baptism, remission of sins, gifts of the Holy Spirit. Now again; faster; all together: faith, repentance, baptism, remission of sins, gifts of the Holy Spirit! Thus he continued until all could repeat it in concert. The children were greatly amused, thinking him a harmless crazy man. 'Children,' he then said, 'now run home. Don't forget what is on your fingers, and tell your parents that a man will preach the gospel tonight at the school house as you have it on the five fingers of your hand.' Away went the children, repeating the story until it was all over the village, and long before the time of meeting the house was thronged to hear the crazy preacher." Needless to say, after the sermon was delivered, the people were not so sure the preacher had lost his sanity.

Put Your Young People to School Under These Teachers !

If you wish to set your Sunday-school at a real Bible course, let them study under Dr. Ainslie, Prof. Willett, Finis Idleman, Rev. W. F. Rothenburger, Rev. John R. Ewers, Rev. Edgar D. Jones, Rev. H. H. Peters, Prof. A. W. Fortune, Prof. W. S. Athearn, Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, Rev. P. J. Rice, Rev. H. T. Cree and Rev. John E. Pounds. These religious leaders will formulate the One Hundred Questions to be submitted to the participants in which will begin in a short time. This contest will run for several weeks. Your school should be organized, with a Contest Manager, and should endeavor to capture one of those fine banners donated to the contest by the Practical Sunday-school Supplies Company, Chicago. Then there are the three Grand Prizes for Individuals: A Leather Bound Edition of Harold Bell Wright's Works donated by the Book Supply Co., Chicago; A Fine American Revised Bible, donated by Thomas Nelson & Sons; an Endeavor Watch Charm and Chatelaine, donated by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. And, in addition, twenty-two other fine book prizes. Titles of these will be published soon.

"The Conquest's" Bible Knowledge Contest

How the Contest will be Conducted

Each week from five to ten questions will be printed, until the One Hundred Questions have been submitted. Fuller details will be published later. In the meantime, talk up the contest and appoint your Contest Manager. For full information, address

THE CO-OPERATING COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

Howard T. Cree, Augusta, Ga.
Verle W. Blair, Eureka, Ill.

WE ARE GLAD TO DO IT!

The task of securing funds to support The Christian Century and to greatly enlarge its influence is gratefully accepted by the Co-operation Committee, because we believe there is no single enterprise at this present moment so much needed by the Disciples of Christ and so deserving of unselfish gifts as is this Christian newspaper.

The acceptance of the task does not involve the members of this Committee in the support of any particular doctrines or policies advocated by The Christian Century. Probably the Committee itself represents as many points of view as there are members. We have never discussed specific doctrines together, and do not know where our colleagues stand.

But we have discussed and find that we are of one mind on this fundamental proposition, that a journal that stands for the great ideals of an educated ministry, a scholarly interpretation of religion, a richer and freer fellowship with all Christians, a constructive social program, a thorough-going method of religious education, the ideals of peace, and withal—and most of all—a deep and sane renewal of the spiritual life of the Church—we are agreed that a journal that stands for such ideals, with the splendid leadership The Christian Century is conceded by us all to possess, ought not to be crippled in its great work through lack of funds.

FIFTY DOLLARS IN FIVE YEARS.

On this page we will push one branch only of the campaign undertaken by the Committee. We hope to enlist hundreds of friends—ministers, teachers, business men—in subscribing ten dollars a year for five years. Larger gifts from men of larger resources will have to be secured by other means. The Committee is now at work on that also. But through this page we hope to reach the many who wish to have a humble though vital part in the fellowship of this undertaking.

WHY FIVE YEARS?

Because we believe that this kind of assistance will not be needed longer than five years. We heard the financial report of the Disciples Publication Society at Atlanta, and some members of the Committee have had occasion to make careful examination into its affairs, and we are convinced that if the friends of this cause will provide a modest working capital for five years, by the end of that time the business will be self-supporting. There is an encouraging growth in subscriptions to The Christian Century and in patronage of the Sunday-school supplies.

A WORK OF LOVE.

For years the creating of The Christian Century has been a work of love. Its editors have regarded their services with unselfish idealism. The paper has been a pulpit for the proclamation of the highest principles of righteousness, progress, and Christian culture. Its influence on the life of our brotherhood has been profound. The Disciples would today be a different sort of people had not two or three men of vision and consecration spent themselves, and their means, to keep this great journal alive.

The time has come when the many of us must share with them the fellowship of this great task. It must for us also be a work of love. No one is to make a profit out of it. No investments are asked for, but consecrated gifts and unselfish service from all who believe in the greatness of this cause.

FROM A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

"The man who can write such editorials as 'The War and the Future of Religion,' ought to have our support. Am hoping the committee appointed to plan for financing The Christian Century will work diligently and succeed in providing the means for The "Century's" life and freedom. Indeed, this whole issue of the "Century" is very fine. To my mind, Errett Gates settles the matter of "The Limits of Christian Fellowship" forever. What a blessing it would be if all our leading church men and women could, and would, read that article! As I have said before, don't bother to reply to this."

J. H. FILLMORE.

EVERYBODY CAN HELP.

Send in suggestions to the Committee. We wish to have all the help possible from all the friends. Send in the names of generous people who might be willing to make larger gifts. Solicit such gifts yourselves, and the fifty-dollar five year gifts, too.

One friend has already sent in three pledges besides his own, all accompanied by checks for the first installment. He says he purposes to find at least six more who will do likewise.

And do not forget to send in your own pledges at once!

To the Co-operation Committee
of The Christian Century,
700 E. 40th Street, Chicago.

Dear Fellow-Workers:

I hereby agree to give ten dollars a year for five years to the support of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. I will send the first installment before January 1, 1915.

Character Talks

By Frank Waller Allen, pastor of First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen.

THE DIVINITY OF SERVICE

Love manifesting itself in service is alone divine in Jesus of Nazareth and man. Love without service is base; and service without love is dead. The absence of either results in atrophy of character. God hates servility as much as He loves that gentle mastery of life to which He always lends a hand. If there is anything which makes one man God's son more than another it is because of a deeper love and a greater service. It is thus only that we may become one with our Father and share immortality. A man's value to God is determined by his devotion to his fellowmen. Greater love hath no man than this, that he give his life for his friends.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Increasing Passion for the Spiritual

SIGNS INNUMERABLE AND EVERYWHERE INDICATE THAT OUR GENERATION STANDS IN THE PRESENCE OF A VAST RISING TIDE OF PASSION FOR THE SPIRITUAL.

What we are in the presence of is not simply another return of the same tide that has come in and gone out periodically for all the centuries, marking thus the spiritual epochs of history; it is a fuller tide than has arisen since Jesus was born, fed by all the creeks and inlets from the far-lying hills where man's desires home themselves, and flowing so full and so resistless as to overpass barriers at which all previous high tides of spiritual life have stopped.

Wide-stretching areas of human life, hitherto untouched by the cleansing and fertilizing waters, will be, already are being, inundated by the advancing flood of idealism and spiritual purpose.

* * *

Let us leave off talking in this cosmic figure of speech and in these sweeping generalizations which, perhaps, sound flamboyant and even sophomoric to the hard-headed reader, and let us look at some things that have happened and are happening which give substance and warrant to the faith we have just now so unqualifiedly confessed.

Let us note first that the spiritual always has had to struggle for recognition, and always will have to struggle.

Inevitably the unseen can come to reality in our lives only by constant battle with the seen.

If, to many, the battle has been for long a losing battle, if sense and the secular have seemed to prevail against the gates of the City of God, the hour has at last struck when the world invisible is coming into its own.

* * *

There are three factors which co-operate to resist and inhibit the supremacy of the spiritual in human life.

One is common, sordid, human selfishness, whose familiar name is sin.

Another is mistaken human reason, whose proud name is philosophy, even when it is mistaken.

And the third is an established system of substitutes for the spiritual.

Speaking negatively, we are justified in the highest spiritual optimism because every one of these resisting factors is today appreciably and obviously giving way before the rising tide of spiritual life.

This is clearly true of inhibition number one. There never was so much unselfishness, so large a fund of human sympathy, so sensitive and universal a responsiveness to the need and good of others, so clear a discernment of the fact that no man lives to himself, as in this age of constantly advancing democracy.

Human selfishness in industry, in politics, in the home, in social castes, in internationalism (in spite of the present brutish war), in business, in private personal relations, is making way before the coming of the spiritual Kingdom of God.

Somewhat less obviously, but altogether indisputably to those who know, inhibition number two has given way. Human reason no longer resists the spiritual interpretation of the world and of life. Have you considered, trembling Christian reader, the passing of the infidel? You hear his voice no more. And his blatant cynicism is hardly less conspicuously absent from the speech of the street corners than from the teaching of the class room.

Not only has infidelity departed from philosophy but the old-time arrogance also has departed from it. Philosophy today is humble. Its humility takes two forms, depending upon whose philosophy you are considering; either it conceives itself as the servant and support of faith, or it declares that the faith-world lies outside its jurisdiction altogether.

Among the philosophers it is these two schools, called respectively idealist and pragmatist, that are contending for supremacy. But it matters not to faith which one of them wins. Faith wins with either of them.

The materialistic philosophy of yesterday is virtually dead. The mechanical view of the world is possible no longer, not even among physical scientists.

Evolution is creative!

There is Life in the process!

Some vast, constructive purpose is being worked out.

This is what Royce and Bergson and Eucken proclaim with evangelistic unction.

Inhibition number three needs some explanation before we may be sure that reader and writer have the same thing in mind. By substitutes for the spiritual is meant the institutions and customs and traditions and creeds that, in the name of the spiritual, claim our human loyalties without truly satisfying our spiritual needs. These substitutes inhibit the rising tide of the spiritual by draining off into themselves the passion and devotion that ought to be expended upon truly spiritual ends and ideals.

When a religion has gotten old, it is usually much encumbered with these substitutes for spiritual reality. A young religion, a new religion, is a thing of faith, of experience, of pulsing inner life. Christianity is no exception. Its institutionalism had become top-heavy. Its creed-making had gone to seed. Its traditions hid God from the soul that would pray. Its evangelism lost its sense of having an imperial truth to impart to the individual soul, and swept men into the Church by using the stimuli of mass psychology.

The spiritual was lost in the devices invented to preserve it.

But there is wide-spread disillusionment. The Church itself is feeling the rising tide of spiritual passion. Leaving off its age-long tinkering with its mechanism it is beginning to consider its message. It is thinking more about its evangel than its evangelism. It is wondering if, after all, its religious education is religious!

And the Church is on its knees, because, consciously or unconsciously, it feels the rising tide of human demand for God, and it must itself find him truly in order to impart him to others.

The Living Gospel and This Age

A Sermon Which is Both the Deliverance of a Constructive Idea and the Revelation of the Preacher's Own Soul.

BY FINIS S. IDLEMAN.

In this address Doctor Idleman has lifted the veil before the unseen God. We believe our hungry-minded and discerning readers will say that this message of this mystical preacher possesses the rarest spiritual flavor of any utterance that has appeared in the literature of the Disciples in many a day. It has the delicacy of insight that belongs to Doctor Jowett, and discloses an awareness to current movements and forces which does not appear in the New York preacher's sermons. Doctor Idleman gives the impression of having wide intellectual leeway. He seems to stand in the midst of modern currents of action and of thought like an age-old rock stands in the midst of the counter-eddyings of a great river. He knows its foundation is sure. He does not fear science, nor criticism, nor democracy. He speaks as one unconcerned with the trivialities of religion, but under tremendous compulsion to testify the eternal things that he has seen, and does in truth know. The task of abridging this article to fit the limited space we could devote to it, has been a painful task. Much blood has run out of the wounds made by the editorial surgery it has been subjected to. But the portion herewith offered to our readers is vibrant with spiritual and ethical vitality and it illuminates the problem of the present age as well as inspires us to toil bravely and hopefully for its solution.

"My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God."—David.

"For He is not the God of the dead but of the living."—Jesus.

IN one of the familiar and immortal words of David he confessed this soul longing: "my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." In answer to an inquiring crowd Jesus said, "God is not the God of the dead but of the living." One is the cry of man; the other is the response of the Infinite. David's experience is the epitome of the race. Jesus answers in the terms of Fatherhood. David had many desires, some good, some bad; but of all his desires none approached in intensity the longing for God. But the God he wanted was not the God of creation nor yet of history, but the living God, his personal Father. Jesus came to answer this need. He came not to reveal the God of the dead past but of the living present.

Here beneath the arching of these texts do all our hearts bow. We may be separated by seas of gospel privileges or by wide ranges of intellectual attainment, or even by yawning chasms of moral distinctions, yet we are gathered in the all-embracing arms of focused and definite yearning: My heart and my flesh, all flesh, cry out for the living God. Like deep calling unto deep the voice of the Eternal breaks over prostrate humanity in words of ineffable peace: "I am thy God, arise, stand upon thy feet."

NO TIME FOR REVERENCE.

We are called upon to answer this dumb confused search for the caring, loving God, "Our Father." It is the most distinct and pronounced characteristic of our generation. All this unresting haste, this daring commercialism, this reckless adventure, is essentially heart-hunger. Like Noah's dove, the spirit of the present age finds no resting place. It has tried science, philosophy, war. It drives like Jehu. It does not always know where it is going, but it knows it is going fast. The age has momentum but not direction. It has capacity for action but little for rest or reverence.

Modern science is giving us a new world. It has been at work in geology and the facts reveal the great age of the world and the history of men in it. Biology has revealed the unity of progress in the mystery of life. Everything is viewed in the light of development. It is a process not a structure. In the realm of government the unrest of the spirit of the new democracy has awakened out of their sleep nations that have long been dormant. It has produced a new social ethic and men are conscious of new sins that have never before been recognized.

"NOTHING TO HOLD TO."

All these forces have disturbed the realm of religion. Many are uttering the cry of moral distress. You hear one say, "I have nowhere to stand," while another pleads "I have nothing to hold to." These conditions are the inevitable result of the forces that are now at work in every realm. The critical spirit is abroad and nothing escapes its crucible. It is useless to cry "Hands off the temples of our holy faith!" for criticism does not respect law for its authority nor religion for its sacredness.

Rev. Finis Idleman, D. D.

THE LAW OF TOOTH AND CLAW.

The world has too largely accepted the doctrine of the absentee God who sits apart in the heavens and laughs while the wheels of the universe roll on remorselessly under pitiless stars. To multitudes, God has absented Himself from the strife and tragedy of the numbered ages of human society. Men are standing today with covered heads amidst an alarming irreverence of Deity. Man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn and no Jehovah intervenes. Thrones are erected and fall—dynasties rise and waste in pillage and plunder—the earth runs red with blood of fratricidal strife—all calling severally on the same Jehovah for victory on their swords plunged into the breasts of their brothers, while the victory goes not to the just cause but to the most scientific butchery. The sight of such a continuous tragedy in the life of man and the observance of the law of tooth and claw in nature make the world to seem like a vast slaughter house with God an unreplying sphinx. Indeed the attitude of such a God seems to many to be one of stony unconcern. The universe is a machine with no better name for its inventor than Force.

GOD A LIVING GOD, NOT AN EPITAPH.

It is the present duty and privilege of the Church to go forth and answer the inarticulate moan of man for the living God. That privilege and duty may not be met by ancient doctrines nor piled up proof texts, nor by declaiming against the spirit of the age. It can only be met by the double test of living truth and vital service. How much can the Church interpret the world's unconscious need to itself? Can it make God a living power rather than an epitaph? Is this God an experience or only a tradition? These are the unvoiced questions of the present age. Here is the undisputed realm of the Church. We are reminded that the school has taken over education, the press our literary tasks, the state our civic affairs and the community our social needs. But when the Church seems most stripped of all her former undertakings and men mock her impotency then is her distinct mission most clearly revealed. It is unencumbered by duties which other divine institutions such as the state and the home should long ago have accepted. The Church may now go forth bearing to all lands the gospel of the Living God as seen in the face of Jesus Christ. When men sob in their penitence or challenge in their impiety to see God, then the Church may hasten to declare, "He is your God, of the living not of the dead." In the language of the lamented Silvester Horne, "The glorious mission of the preacher is to keep the soul of the world alive."

A VISION NEEDED.

Our quickest and surest answer to all this need is in the transcendent person of Jesus. This Man deliberately stripped Himself of everything the world has been greedy about that He might stand forth and be the veritable Word of God to men. Jesus stands as the living indictment of succeeding generations of men who burden themselves by externals, mistaking them for life. He saw it all and said, "I have come to put a new soul in the world and let men see that the life of God in the souls of men is not dependent on multiplying palaces and lands nor upon pleasures nor new knowledge." For here is that divine life pulsing full and mighty in the life of a "landless, penniless peasant."

"The manger was his infant bed,
His home a mountain cave:
He had not where to lay His head—
He borrowed e'en His grave."

This announcement of Jesus concerning the living God puts the solid earth beneath the feet of toil. The message of the living gospel reveals the working God. It declares the God who toils with the sower is never weary. While man rests from his labors his co-worker toils sleeplessly on in the dark and at high noon, unresting. So beside man the moral toiler works the Infinite, building and fashioning "a habitable world to be." When man flies into a passion or turns brute and rends the slowly and painfully constructed civilization into ruins, then does the Eternal worker, out of the living passion of his Father heart, patiently set again to rebuild the structure of a nobler society. Our Father is the eternal Creator, from the mollusk to man, from the time when the morning stars sang together until this best day of time.

THE WORLD IS ONLY BECOMING.

"To what end do we work and whither are we going?" ask men hemmed between canyon walls of the unseen. Here and there some great soul like a Matthew Arnold perceives that "there is a force making for righteousness that is not of us." But the mass of men seem to accept duty, defeat, success as if blind fate presided over the universe. But Jesus announces a divine worker alongside human effort: the God of the living. Of him he said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." Our world is not a finished product. It is in a state of becoming. We are in the midst of a creative process. Like the habitable earth out of formless void rises the creative purpose of God out of the chaotic present. God is not a mere onlooker in the drama of life. We are not aimlessly plucking at a tangled skein. We do not toil blindly nor hopelessly nor alone, but confidently, triumphantly. The Unseen Worker puts in the woof while we beat the loom of life. Hence our enterprises are not local nor unimportant. The tasks to which we give our hands in shop and office, at the forge and plow are all titanic and universal. Every deserving undertaking of man takes on regal splendor. Our humblest offices have holy dignity. Our lowly duties in his sight have a vastness that dwarfs all worldly splendor into insignificance. We walk in conscious gladness with the Invisible and cry ever, "We are not alone, the Father is with us." The immanent God, who still works is the living God for whom our flesh crieth out.

THE SIN OF CREED-MAKING.

It ill becomes us, who find such conscious joy and dignity in that truth to deny or oppose the principle of an evolving physical world. We accomplish nothing in denying the essential principle of evolution. We should be wiser workers if we gladly received the truth of the spiritual laws that work also in the natural world, and rejoice in the privilege of giving a spiritual platform for scientific workers to stand upon. To declare with passionate faith the creating God, the God who bringeth all things from lowest levels at last unto himself, and crowns them with his own imperishable attributes, is our holy duty.

Is not this great fact of the living God at work with us in our world the quickening fact also in keeping the halo about our work? It is so easy to lose hope. Things seem so hopeless and people so helpless. The prodigal is so filthy and the wanton are so forbidding. We have been disappointed so many times and promises are so easily and recklessly broken. Human nature seems so long in coming to perfection and the work of years sometimes goes to crash before our eyes in a moment. What are you going to do? "Quit" one answers, "What is the use to wear out diamonds scraping the pavement clean?" But there are thousands that keep at the task of social uplift and reclamation, who do it because they see the truth of the living God at work with them. They have seen how God respects personality and what significance he places on the value of the lowliest. Their eyes have been opened to see the living God with infinite patience putting his arms about the outcast that all men had passed by. The difference between the cultured selfish and the cultured unselfish is that one sees only dirt where the other sees God in the face of a waif of the street.

Here also is revealed the perennial power of renewal in the gospel. God is the God of life. We are privileged to be born again, and are addressed as "new creatures." The central figure of our gospel calls himself Life. Of his words he says they too are life. His way is the way of life. The issue of its following is more abundant life. It ends in life eternal. The very genius of Christianity pleads against any attempt to put its message into final expression. Life is forever revealing new varieties. The glory of the living gospel is its newly discovered beauty and power in each day and generation. We do violence to this vital gospel by making a mould of it, a death mask or impression, as if it would never smile again. We rob the Church and the world of the living God by our creed making.

THE FLESH AND THE SPIRIT.

What lesson of church history is more plainly written than that great spiritual movements begin in an inspiration and end in a mechanism? What more glorious chapter in the Christian centuries than the self-effacing vision and life of Francis of Assisi? He saw for himself and his followers the holy duty of self-denial, forgiveness, brotherhood and poverty. Who can doubt the divine initiation of such a movement born in an inspiration? But scarcely had the beloved leader died than it crystallized and the vision perished. Poverty was practiced for selfish satisfaction and men renounced all to join the order for the sake of its unique and mystic power over men. One need not repeat illustrations. Such has been the peril of the life and labors of Luther, Wesley and Calvin. Is it to be repeated of the work of the Campbells? This movement was born in the breath of the Almighty. None but God could have given origin to such a holy passion for the Church through the Lordship of the Son of God. But the law of the flesh tugs no less at that inspiration than at every other before it. Unto this as unto the Galatian church, we can hear the searching warning of the Apostle Paul, "having begun in the spirit do ye seek now to be perfected in the flesh?"

THE INCREASING CHRIST BEFORE US.

We must find our way back to the spirit of our first inspiration. We can be of value to the kingdom of God only as we keep in the attitude of constant renewal. We cannot keep our inspiration if our traditions become our masters. Our yesterdays must not dim us to the light of our todays. We have set the living God, the increasing Christ before us. It is a way of life we have chosen. As long as we are not disobedient to the heavenly vision, all truth is ours and we have no fear of change or decay in the systems that have their day and cease to be.

PROPHETS BEFORE KINGS.

No nation nor people can hope for great achievement who are not deeply sensible of the living God in the spiritual world. That sense alone can create profound religious convictions without which there can be no strenuous moral endeavor. In this atmosphere patriots were born and martyrs died. So went the prophets of the highest into the presence of the mighty and in the name and with the sense of commission from the "I am that I am" who had sent them, made tyrants to tremble. Whether Moses before Pharaoh or Elijah before Ahab or John before Herod or Paul before Agrippa or Savonarola before Lorenzo or John Knox before Bloody Mary, all went with the prophetic challenge of the great God, with whom all men had to do and by whose breath alone do kings rule.

We Protestants do not want to see the return of the days when kings were made to stand barefooted in the snow at Canossa while religious potentates waited their convenience to curse or bless them. But all God-fearing men pray for the day when the voice of the Church of the living God shall speak on moral issues with such conviction and such flavor of the divine earnestness and with such a sense of the immanent God that wickedness in high places shall tremble. Such a prophetic role cannot be assumed. It must be real. God-intoxicated men and women alone can constitute such a Church.

THE DISCIPLES AND THE LIVING GOSPEL.

How can this doctrine of the living gospel affect the Disciples of Christ and what is their mission in view of it?

The Disciples of Christ enjoy an untrammeled freedom to follow the gleam rather than the groove. None of the pronouncements of the fathers retard us nor confuse when new light breaks upon our path. Whether that light be from the Bible or from the Holy Spirit's revelation through experience, we are like ready soldiers at command, ready to rise and go. We have not set fixed bounds for the Eternal, so our sense of expectancy should be keen. We look for his coming and manifestation in all the real concerns of mankind and have no explanations to offer when he shows his countenance in unexpected ways and places. We have never put our trust in an organization, not even in the Church. We cannot be strict churchmen, either high or low. We believe the Church is man's instrument and God's agent rather than our Master. Neither have we put our trust in a book, not even in the Bible. The earliest declaration of the fathers was to indicate relatively lesser and greater values in the Old and New Testaments respectively. We have been a Bible-reading people. We need to cultivate this habit immeasurably more. But we do not worship the Bible. We have no thing, creed, organization or book that to us is infallible. But we have set our faces toward the infallible Christ and where he leads we will follow.

OUR CAPITAL BLUNDER.

Such is the unique place of the Disciples in relation to the principle of the living God who now works. There are some conditions to be met if we are to occupy this high privilege. We need to reaffirm our liberty and wait before our early vision. Being bound neither by tradition nor dogma, doctrine nor custom, practice nor method, journals nor potentate, we need yet to see we are slaves of

Reflections of a Convention-Goer

How It Seems After the Annual Convocations are Over.

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

A NATIONAL convention of Disciples of Christ sends us all home to meditate upon the wisdom of the wise and the follies of the foolish. Here the book of human nature is unrolled to the gaze of all who can read. I have made a few discoveries which are set down for the benefit of posterity.

Platform Martyrs.

Within recent years our conventions have produced a few platform martyrs which we fear cannot be enrolled in the noble army just yet. Their method of procedure is well known. They rise to utter warnings, to weld the signs of the times into thunders, to plead for a return to the methods of the fathers which produced no dissensions—though if we had the facts it is likely that our fathers were as fond of having their own way as are their sons—to restrain our reckless feet, lest they fall into the snare of the Nicolatians. They exhibit a degree of fervor in their speech that makes us dread the possibility of spontaneous combustion. If we could measure the strength of their convictions by the intensity of their utterance, we would not hesitate to affirm that the prospect of stake and fagot would not suffice to moderate their zeal. Between speeches, in corridors, they are extolled as men of the hour, men who would die for their convictions—all of which mellifluous speech is received with becoming thanks. The recipients move among us with the air of one who seems to say, "None of these things move me." Their eyes are fixed on the shining star of duty. There seems to be no hope of their being moved either by the plaudits of friends or the persecution of foes. They are the makers of history. Theirs but to do and die.

When the trend of opinions is discovered by these martyrs their zeal seems to wax cold. Upon discovering that they are in a hopeless minority the martyr's crown looks crumpled and antiquated. Early in the convention they seem ready for a boost toward immortality; later they bolt for the tall timber. Or, possibly, the cause for which the martyr risked his all collapsed at the height of the debate, and, with the skill of a patriot defending a lost cause, he lays down his arms in the interest of peace. The sight of numbers converts him from a war-horse to a dove. Whereupon his friends and admirers assure him that peace hath her victories no less than war, and all agree to let him down as easily as possible. For him, the pith has gone out of the convention, the martyr's pose has become comic, and he hies himself back to his native heath to reflect upon the magnanimous sacrifice he made for the cause.

Moral: The platform martyr loves to hear himself talk.

The Pest of Size.

Year after year attention is called to the impossibility of hearing some of our speakers because of the over-size of our convention halls. They are not like a city compacted together. The speakers are obliged to strain their voices, and the hearers to strain their ears. There is a nervous effect in this which may account for the restlessness of many in the auditorium. Why not arrange for a building that would even crowd us a little, rather than seek for one in which the audience is an island in seas of space. The crowded condition, even if that were a possibility, would be inspiring to the speakers, while, on the other hand, the magnificent distances between rows of seats, is likely to be dispiriting. Let us think it over.

The Virtue of Hiding One's Light.

It is generally believed that every church desires men of convictions, and men whose convictions are well known. But this belief must not be taken too seriously. If there is merit in letting one's light shine, there is also merit in hiding it under a bushel. The advantage in the latter course is that one may go over to the popular side on a moment's notice without antagonizing anyone or rendering oneself liable to the charge of inconsistency. Such an one is always eligible for office. His attitude toward perplexing questions is hidden even from his wife, although in strict confidence he may whisper in the ear of the Dead Sea that he has convictions which he will express at the proper time. On that "proper time" hangs all his present and future destiny. He believes that it is lawful to hold any opinions one pleases if he will only "hold his tongue."

It is very probable that in his pulpit such a man is likely to demand of the district politician that he declare his position on certain questions, and if he refuse the preacher is likely to hale him before the bar of public opinion as a traitor and a coward. But admirable, and even necessary as this doctrine is in politics, it has its limitations in the Church. It would never do for us all to declare ourselves on questions over which good men divide, lest we identify ourselves with a faction, a party, or a school of thought. A rule of conduct that would be desirable in politics might work great mischief in Zion. No, let us keep clear of all entangling alliances, and allow the disturbers of the peace to bear the brunt of the controversy. While these continue their unholy warfare we will study the things that make for peace. We shall hold no convictions that are not subject to change, and all of them shall be in a state of solution so that we can adjust them to any situation that promises the largest returns.

These conclusions have been reached after studying the poise of some influential brethren among us, the men who can tell just what would happen after it has happened, and who profess to have known the end from the beginning—after the end has been reached. These are they who sacrifice themselves in critical moments, though the sacrifice is mostly on paper. I love the silence of these sages, their worldly-minded attitude called statesman-like for the sake of euphony—their lofty wisdom, and their rewards.

Moral: Keep mum; look wise; and jump with the cat.

Hearing the Prophets of the Age.

It is a rare pleasure at our national gatherings to hear the great voices of our time. They do us all good. Their presence is an inspiration. It is part of one's education to see such men. Of course, some are not reconciled to their presence on our programs yet, but we Disciples would hardly recognize ourselves if we ever did anything on which there was a general agreement. We are determined to discredit the difficulties and disadvantages of discussion.

Still, despite any difference of opinion, these great men are always welcome to the great majority of us. They give us a new vocabulary. Their observations come to them through a different lens from that used by ourselves. They help to break down denominational barriers. They test some of the high-sounding platitudes in which we indulge now and then on the subject of liberty and fraternity. Not to welcome them to our platform would compel us to put the books of the great prophets of the age on the Index Expurgatorius, a consummation devoutly to be wished by every sectarian who pretends to believe that his own utterances are final on all subjects. If the exclusive policy were carried out we could not consistently hear William J. Bryan or President Wilson, Presbyterians, or Gipsy Smith or Billy Sunday, or Fred B. Smith, in New York, Washington, or Chicago. When once the narrow-gauge policy is adopted it will tax its advocates to keep from building a fence around their little preserve. Fortunately, we are too wise a people to listen to the counsels of a few provincials.

Our Invincible Optimism.

The Disciples may suffer from an excess of individualism, but they are unconquerable optimists. No matter what happens we always light on our feet. Our interminable discussions would rend a less stalwart and hopeful people. But they seem to drive us to undertake almost impossible tasks, even if they do not drive us into each other's arms. Our evangelistic and missionary zeal is unabated; we can show by facts and figures that we have been busy, that we have not the remotest intention of sitting under a juniper tree and lamenting that we are no better than our fathers. We are a great deal better. We have builded some imposing edifices in recent years, and have established congregations that are making themselves felt at home and abroad. We are not going to allow a few flies to destroy our ointment, nor a few sons of thunder to make us believe that the heavens are falling because we will not see with their eyes. The men who are crying peril and disaster are fast taking their place among the humorists. If we are in danger we can avert it as we have always done. There never was a day when some one was not warning us against some man who was "trying to subvert the fundamental principles of the Restoration movement." I heard that as a boy, I expect to hear it as long as I live. But the movement is with us, unsubverted, and will be here after we who smile and weep are gone. A national convention is always heartening to those who know the temperament of some of our men. When you have learned that, you will know how to appraise their alarms. Fortunately, they are few, even if noisy. The great mass are like the sea, ruffled now and then on the surface, but calm and powerful in its depths. We shall even do better service in the world when we agree to tak our differences less seriously, and cherish our unquenchable optimism as a goodly pearl.

A Social Service Catechism

Prepared by a committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, consisting of Sampel Z. Batten, Walter D. Sumner, the late Jacob Riis, Graham Taylor, Harry F. Ward, and Charles S. Macfarland.

1. What is Social Service?

Social Service is that form of effort for man's redemption to uplift and transform his associated and community life. As such it is the social application of Christian principles, and is a new name for that spirit of philanthropy and service which is as old as Christianity.

2. Why do you call it Social Service?

Because it deals with man as a social being in his social relations, and with social causes and conditions; because it demands social and collective action, and seeks not only to save men but to embody their Christian life in social institutions.

3. What warrant is there for social service in the Scriptures?

Jesus said, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor: He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

Above all is the example of Jesus himself, who went about doing good, helping the needy, adjusting the relations of men, and seeking to establish justice among men.

4. What is the fundamental idea of social service?

The idea of the kingdom of God, which in the Christian conception of things may mean much more for a human society on earth, but can never mean anything less.

5. How is social service related to other forms of Christian activity?

In the complete program of the kingdom there are four chief items: Evangelism—winning men unto Jesus Christ; missions—making the good news known to the nations; education—training lives for the kingdom and building them up in Christ-likeness; and social service—serving the whole life of man and building a Christian social order.

6. What is meant by social salvation?

The deliverance of human society from disease, poverty, crime, and misery; the development and perfection of the institutions of man's associated life, and the construction of a social order that is the city of God on earth.

7. What are the chief items in the social service program?

The relief of need and distress, the prevention of poverty and crime, the provision for all of the conditions of a clean, healthy, moral and spiritual life, the creation of a social atmosphere which shall induce a right course of conduct, the adjustment of men's relations in justice and brotherhood.

8. Why should Christians be most active in social service?

For the reason that social service works in line with the Lord's Prayer, in that it seeks to create such conditions that every life can earn its daily bread, that needless temptation may be removed from men, and boys and girls may be delivered from evil.

9. What are the methods of social service?

It seeks to relieve distress and need in such ways as to help men most effectually; it also seeks to discover the causes and conditions of poverty, sickness, crime, and misery, and then to remove bad causes and conditions and create good causes and conditions; it believes that the church, the family, the school, the state are all means and agencies through which these ends may be sought.

10. Does social service seek to create another organization?

It seeks rather to aid the agencies of human uplift that now exist, to infuse into them the religious spirit, to co-operate with them in every way, and to use them as channels through which the efforts of Christian people may become effective.

11. What can one person do who is interested in social service?

He can study social conditions, help other people see things as he sees them, seek to unite men in behalf of practical measures, join with those who are engaged in some form of helpful service, and be an active and intelligent citizen in his own community.

12. What can a pastor do to promote social service among his people?

He can be a careful student of social questions in the light of the Scriptures; he can teach and illustrate the doctrine and example of the Master, and he can arouse and organize his people in behalf of social service, and he can take a sympathetic interest in the various uplifting agencies of the community.

13. What can a church do in behalf of social betterment?

It can have one or more classes engaged in social-service study; it can have committees studying the various agencies of social uplift in the community; it can have a positive and constructive program and can organize their efforts for effective work.

14. What can be done in a united way in behalf of community betterment?

Have a Federation of the Churches, which shall secure unity of purpose and mass the conscience of the people at any one point. The Federation should have a Committee on Conciliation and Arbitration for industrial disputes; it should support all righteous and faithful officials; it should voice the conviction of the men of good will in the community. Every community should thus have in some visible form not only churches, but a united church of Christ in common service.

15. Name several immediate and practical things that can be done.

Secure for every worker one day's rest in seven; have a censorship committee of all moving-picture and other shows; equip a play-ground within half a mile of every home in the city; make efficient the agencies seeking to suppress gambling, the social evil, alcohol, and all habit-forming drugs; see that there is a good child-labor law and that it is enforced; have regular inspection of tenements and rooming houses; support the Juvenile Court; have a systematic canvass of the community.

16. What is the ultimate purpose of social service?

It seeks to create a social order in the world as shall realize the Christian ideal of human society, to give each soul a true inheritance in life, to develop a perfect life in a perfect society, and to make Jesus Christ a fact in the universal life of the world.

The Panama Canal Does Not Solve All Difficulties.

Although the Panama Canal will shorten the distance from New Zealand to Liverpool by about nine hundred miles, the New Zealand exporters of frozen meat have already decided, according to the London Times, not to use the canal. Ships on the Cape Horn route traverse a long stretch of cold water between New Zealand and the cape, and thence strike almost perpendicularly across the equator. Since the storage chambers have to be kept cool during the passage, the higher the external temperature, and especially the higher the water temperature, the more power must be spent on the refrigerating process. Ships that use the Panama route will cross the equator obliquely, and so will steam through areas of warm water for a much longer period than those that use the Cape Horn route. It is calculated that the refrigerating machines would have to be driven so much longer, and that the expense for coal would therefore be so much greater that, when added to the canal dues and the time spent in traversing the canal, the extra cost would more than counterbalance the saving due to the lesser mileage. The shortest route, it seems, is not necessarily the most advantageous.

The Bible as Literature

And the World's Indebtedness to It.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

ONE of America's foremost men of an earlier generation uses these words regarding the Bible—words that I venture to make my text:

"This wonderful collection of writings has taken such a hold on the life of man as no other. The literature of Greece, which goes up like incense from the land of temples and heroic deeds, has not half the influence of this book upon a nation alike despised in ancient and modern times. It is read of a Sabbath in all the ten thousand pulpits of our land. In all the temples of Christendom is its voice lifted up week by week. The sun never sets on its gleaming page. It goes equally to the cottage of the plain man and the palace of the king. It is woven into the literature of the scholar and colors the talk of the street . . . Some thousand famous writers come up in this century to be forgotten in the next, but the silver cord of the Bible is not loosed, nor its golden bowl broken as time chronicles his tens of centuries passed by . . . Time sits as a refiner of metals. The dross is piled in heaps, but the pure gold is reserved, passes into the ages, and is current a thousand years hence as well as today"

In such words have spoken the most discerning literary authorities regarding this unique book. Those who bear witness alike to its classic beauties and its moral grandeur are a great company. For recent years have added to the vast numbers of those who have been uplifted by the spiritual message of the Bible, a new and growing throng of those who have felt the power of its literary charm.

To be sure there are those who protest against the literary study of the Bible on the ground that it is a religious book, and ought always to be approached with the religious spirit. But the sufficient answer to such is the notable fact that many people in our day have been attracted to the study of the Bible as literature who would have remained unconcerned with it as a book of ethics.

MANY VOICES SPEAK IN THE BIBLE.

The story of the Bible is the most romantic of literary narratives. The growth of its books, the human experiences out of which they came, and the slow movement of events by which they were brought into a single collection, make one of the most engaging of recitals. All sorts of people wrought at the task, quite unaware of each other. Among them were farmers, shepherds, artisans, scribes, preachers, musicians, rulers, priests and sages, men and women of many sorts. In it are sounded all notes of joy, exultation, anxiety, fear, misery, confidence and hope. In this volume there is presented the unique drama of a great religious movement—two movements in fact—more profoundly impressive than all others in shaping the spiritual life of the world. And from the influences released in those great centuries the world has derived the most inspiring impulses toward a higher life.

The story of the Bible itself—as a human document, a collection of books—is almost as romantic as that of its origins. It has endured more perils and survived more dangers than any other book. Persecution, suppression, ridicule and rationalistic attacks have rolled over it like tides; and like tides they have receded, leaving it unmoved, impregnable. It is a human book, and reveals the marks of human workmanship, but its message is eternal. Its perils are not from attack, but only from neglect.

LITERATURE'S DEBT TO THE BIBLE.

The Bible is the greatest of books. Its influence upon personal character is attested by the souls of all the centuries, from Augustine and Dante to Lincoln and Gladstone. Its effect upon national life, on laws and institutions, is the commonplace of history, from the Roman empire to the new nations of the Orient. Its saturation of the greatest literature need only be mentioned in the presence of students of Milton, Shakespeare, Tennyson, Wordsworth, Browning, Shelley, Carlyle, Whittier, Ruskin, Dickens and Emerson, to mention only writers of our mother tongue. Many of the pages of these and other literary masters are like gorgeous fabrics, embroidered with the rich and enduring threads of Biblical phrase and word.

The poetry of the Bible is the greatest in the world. The Book of Job is the unapproachable masterpiece of literature. The Psalms are the most beautiful of lyrics. The Proverbs are packed gems of wisdom—"jewels five words long, that on the stretched forefinger of all time sparkle forever." The orations of the Bible, utterances of Moses, Isaiah, Paul and Jesus, if judged by every standard of effective public speech, are unequaled by the classic and praised declamations of Demosthenes, Cicero, Burke and Webster. And the biographies of the Bible present in brief and compelling form the lives of men who tower above the conquerors and statesmen of all time like Lebanon above the Sea.

Such a book as this demands an essential place in the esteem and equipment of every intelligent person. It might have sufficed once that it should be the study of the pious. Today one cannot be well informed without knowing it. It is no longer tolerable that young people, educated in the best institutions of learning, should be expected to know the currents of history, literature, science and the arts, and yet remain ignorant of the Bible, which in a very true sense is the foundation of all. It is the rail along which history runs. It has inspired and adorned the noblest literature. It has furnished the stimulus to much of the most patient search after scientific truth. It is the background and noblest theme of the arts.

BEAUTY AND POWER HERE UNITE.

Matthew Arnold has divided writings into two sorts—the literature of beauty and the literature of power. In the Bible the two unite. Even in translation the charm of the Bible is unescapable. Says Macaulay: "The English Bible—a book which if everything else in our language should perish, would alone suffice to show the whole extent of its beauty and power." And Coleridge's familiar words make clear that august authority which the Bible exercises over the human soul. "In the Bible," says he, "there is more that finds me than I have experienced in all other books put together; the words of the Bible find me at greater depths of my being; and whatever finds me brings with it an irresistible evidence of its having proceeded from the Holy Spirit."

Judged by either canon of beauty or power, the Bible vindicates the word uttered long ago, and now carved in the old red sandstone of the most impressive building in London: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My Word shall not pass away."

German and Belgian War Songs

The Song of the Germans.

("Deutschland über Alles.")

German Empire over all things,
Over all things in the world,
When for safety and defiance
Its proud banner is unfurled,
From the Maas unto the Memel,
From the Etsch to sea waves curled—
German Empire over all things,
Over all things in the world!

German women, German trueness,
German wine and German song
Shall preserve their old-time beauty
Wheresoever Germans throng,
Up to noble deeds inspiring,
Ruling us our whole life long—
German women, German trueness,
German wine and German song.

Unity and right and freedom
For the German Fatherland!
Therefore, let us all press forward
Brotherly with heart and hand!
Unity and right and freedom
Are the pledge of fortune bland—
In the splendor of that fortune
Flourish, German Fatherland!

"La Brabanconne"

(A Belgian war song.)

Who would have thought the arbitrary
And scheming despot would bring force?
Against us comes a sanguinary
Princeling, with shrapnel in his course.
'Tis done, o'er Belgians comes a change.
No more with Nassau shameful pact shall be.
The grape-shot's shattered the orange
Upon the tree of liberty.

Too generous in her vengeful ire,
Belgium begged nothing but just laws
From him whom she had called her sire,
Her king denying without cause.
She roused herself in fury strange,
And Belgium's sons with cannon set her free.
In Belgian blood was drowned the orange
Beneath the tree of liberty.

Proud sons of Brabant, people brave,
Forward you march and fearless fight;
Your bullets know the way to save
You from disgraced Batavians' might.
In Brussels, where we're free to range,
Forever floats our flag of victory;
Proud to grow green without the orange,
Trust in the tree of liberty!

And you who faced war's dread alarms,
Brave heroes by the cannon slain
Ere the dear Fatherland in arms
Could learn your names, beneath the plain
With tears your corpses we arrange;
In humble earth sleep, dauntless company,
Sleep martyrs, far from the orange,
Beneath the tree of liberty!

Shall We Give One-Tenth to God?

The Financial Side of the Tithing Doctrine.

BY THOMAS KANE.

For years Mr. Kane has been the most persistent and effective exponent of the tithing doctrine among Christian business men of Chicago. He is an elder in the Third Presbyterian Church of this city. He not only argues for the doctrine but bears personal testimony to its workableness and its satisfying fruits in his own experience. On the doctrine of mathematically dividing one's resources according to the principle of the tithers The Christian Century is neither dogmatically for nor against. Mr. Kane's knowledge and experience earn for him the right to be heard. We should be glad to hear from others on either side of the case, either by way of personal experience or theoretical criticism.

ARE there not practical, financial and business reasons for the fact that tithing pays the tither in temporal prosperity? We all understand and are influenced by illustrations more than by arguments. Also we remember them longer. Is not the following an almost exact illustration of the relation we occupy toward our Heavenly Father in the matter of what we call our worldly possessions?

A BUSINESS PARALLEL.

Suppose my banker lends me $5,000 on condition that I pay him every year ten per cent of all the profits I make by the use of it. Not ten per cent of the capital, which would be $500, but ten per cent of the profits whether they be little or much. If I make $500, I would owe my banker $50. If I make $1,000 I would owe him $100. If he should lend me $10,000 and I make $2,000 by the use of it, I would owe him $200. The same proportion of course would hold for larger or smaller profits on the borrowed capital.

Suppose my banker had a large number of people at work for him, people I know of, and I also know how faithfully they serve him. Suppose these people are dependent for their support, their daily bread, upon the wages they receive from the banker or through his agents. Suppose that besides these workers for the banker there are many sick people, poor people, and people in distress in all of whose welfare and happiness he is deeply interested.

Suppose my banker tells me that while he continues to lend me the principal, I need not pay the ten per cent of the profits I make on the loan directly to him at the bank, but give it to the people I know or know of who are at work for him, not forgetting to give a liberal portion to poor, sick or distressed people who need help.

Suppose he tells me to use my own best judgment in giving the money I owe to him where I think it will do the most good. Suppose further that he requires that I keep an account of what I give to these different people and causes in which he is interested so as to be sure that I am paying the ten per cent I owe to him from year to year.

HOW GOD DEALS WITH US.

Suppose my banker learns that I am wisely using the ten per cent, his share of the profits I make on the capital he furnishes me, that I am using good judgment in distributing it among his workers who have no other means of support, and that I am helping to make comfortable and happy those poor and less fortunate people in whom he is interested; is it not reasonable to suppose that he would be willing to lend me more capital on the same terms?

Now is there anything unreasonable or hard to understand in this illustration? Does it not almost exactly illustrate God's method of dealing with us in His law of the tithe? If it does, is there anything surprising, anything unnatural in the amply demonstrated fact that tithing pays the tither in temporal prosperity? Would it not be unnatural if the results were otherwise?

Again I ask, is not the above illustration fair? Does not God furnish us with all the capital we have; be it brains, money, physical strength, in short, with everything by the use of which we can make money? All He asks is that we recognize in a practical way His ownership of our working capital whatever it may be by contributing ten per cent of whatever we make by the use of it to the world's betterment; in other words, to the building up of Christ's kingdom in the earth, using our own best judgment as faithful stewards in the selection of objects where our gifts will do the most good.

The illustration is equally pertinent if, instead of using my individual judgment in selecting the objects and persons to whom I give my banker's share of the profits, I join with others to whom he has loaned working capital on the same terms, and, after taking counsel together, we agree to combine what we owe and give it to such persons and objects as in our united judgment would most please our banker. This is precisely what we do in the churches of which we are members.

The Living Gospel and This Age

BY FINIS IDLEMAN.

Christ and his brethren. Our capital blunder is the sin of obstreperous individualism. We are too willing to be saved as units rather than as a closely co-operating brotherhood to be instruments of world redemption. For our personal independence we pay an unspeakable price. A million souls should lift immeasurably greater burdens and we could lift them if we lifted together rather than one at a time.

We need also a new baptism of the sense of our mission. God raised us up to be a voice not a machine. It is not our duty to point out a complete platform so much as to breathe the spirit of unity into the already sincere yet divided Church. Our compassionate cry will be heard when the sorrow of God for disunion has gone through us. Like a Jenny Lind whose heart must be broken before she can sing to the multitudes, so we must suffer more for this cause before the mellowness of our voice will awaken response.

FREEDOM TO DISCOVER TRUTH.

We need to keep an humble, open-minded willingness toward truth. To array ourselves against the scientific spirit of the age is to repeat the blunders of Church history. It is to commit in our generation folly equally foolish with that of the blind, religious leaders who faced Galileo with willful and prejudiced obstinacy, denouncing the movement of the earth about the sun. The world about us is committed to the principle of scientific, historic investigation and a determination to abide by results. The medieval Church refused the challenge and became a blighted institution. Their God was not a God of the living but of the dead. His truth was archaic; his ways primeval; his appearing past. We must revive the primal principle of Protestantism: freedom of conscience to discover the truth and faith in its power and value.

We need a new passion for the inner holy of holies. We have been so busy preaching and baptizing, building and organizing, discussing and defining that the secret silent places have not been frequented by us as they should. Sir Oliver Lodge declares that prayer is the "forgotten secret" of the Church. There is a greatness in the kingdom waiting for some communion that will enter it. It is not the greatness of prestige nor of numbers. It waits for those who know how to watch with Jesus in prevailing prayer. To discern God we shall need to hear the voice of the Eternal say "Be still and know that I am God." It means to go with Jesus into the hush of prayer "in the purple night and the stainless dawn." The marked sense of powerlessness in the Christian ranks is traceable to a single statement: God soon fades out of the life of the man who does not pray.

THE CROWNING GLORY OF THE CHURCH.

But when all our preparation has been made in response to the call of the living God to bear witness to the present age we shall need to add the "greatest of these," the coronation of pervading love.

The gentler virtues must have their preeminent place. There is room for us all under the wide arching banner of Prince Emanuel. But the graces of faith and courage, generosity and zeal, devotion and loyalty, must all bring their sheaves and bow down before the greatest of these, the grace of an including and passionate love for all men. For "The night has a thousand eyes,

The day but one
But the light of a whole world dies
With the setting sun.
The mind has a thousand eyes,
The heart but one
But the light of the whole life dies
When love is done."

And when by all these processes we grow big and strong and stoop to lift the burdens of life, we shall feel the trembling arms of the world slip about our necks and faltering lips will stammer, "My heart crieth out for the living God." In that hour let the Disciples of Christ respond out of an abounding experience "Our God is thy God, thy living God."

THE BASIS OF UNITY.

THE catholic point of view of the Disciples' movement for Christian unity finds its classic and immortal statement in the words of Thomas Campbell who, in 1809, in the "Declaration and Address," said:

> To advocate the cause of unity while espousing the interests of a party would appear as absurd as for this country to take part with either of the belligerents in the present awful struggle which has convulsed and is convulsing the nations, in order to maintain her neutrality and secure her peace. Nay, it would be adopting the very means by which the bewildered church has, for hundreds of years past, been rending and dividing herself into factions, for Christ's sake and the truth's sake; though the first and foundation truth of our Christianity is union with Him, and the very next to it in order, union with each other in him—"that we receive each other, as Christ has also received us, to the glory of God." For this is His commandment, that we believe in His Son Jesus Christ and love one another as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth His commandments dwelleth in Him, and He in him—and hereby we know that He dwelleth in us, by the spirit which he has given us—even the spirit of faith, and of love, and of a sound mind. And surely this should suffice us. But how to love, and receive our brother as we believe and hope Christ has received him and us, and yet refuse to hold communion with him, is, we confess, a mystery too deep for us. If this be the way that Christ hath received us, then woe is unto us.

These gracious words should be framed or frescoed in the wall of every church of Disciples in the world. They were uttered before the Disciples became identified with a sectarian doctrine and committed to the practice of a party fellowship.

The present increasing movement among Disciples for a fellowship as wide as the Church of Christ has its historic human source in the catholic purpose disclosed in Thomas Campbell's deep-visioned words.

The basis of Christian unity is not a doctrine nor an ordinance, but Christ's own fellowship. Whoever has been received into His fellowship must, in loyalty to Him, be received into ours.

CONVENTION MUSIC.

UNQUESTIONABLY the most acceptable leader of convention singing among Disciples of Christ is Mr. W. E. M. Hackleman. The repeated commitment from year to year of the directorship of the music of the national gatherings to his hands has brought to him an extraordinary degree of publicity. It also creates for him a peculiar responsibility. The hymns sung at conventions and the spirit in which they are sung create tastes and standards which reappear in the local churches.

Mr. Hackleman has in many respects shown an awareness of this responsibility. He has, himself, grown with the ten years of his rather unique leadership. He is altogether not guilty of self-obtrusiveness. He conducts with quietness and good taste, and there is a grateful absence of the abominable contortions characteristic of evangelistic singers, which outrage an audience and spoil the entire service for those who have come thoughtfully to worship.

And there is a certain deftness and appropriateness of response to whatever sentiment prevails in the meeting at a given moment, a response which makes the leaders and the audience sure that the hymn next announced will "fit," both in respect to its sentiment and the manner in which it is sung.

We have long felt that such appreciative words as these ought to be spoken. Yet we cannot say them without pointing out the lack of constructive leadership for which Mr. Hackleman's unique position made him responsible. He has not educated our people in Church music. He has taken them where they were, or where the meretricious evangelistic singers had brought them, and he has not appreciably raised the level of their taste and spiritual vision by giving them a more adequate hymnody through which to express Christian experience. This lack of constructive leadership is not due to Mr. Hackleman's lack of knowledge, for his own taste inclines him to the truly great hymns, with which he has an intimate acquaintance. It is possibly due to the unconscious influence of his personal interest as an agent of a publishing house whose books depend for their sale upon the people being acquainted with certain featured songs.

There is no single aspect of the order of our Church life that is so in need of skilled attention as is our Church music. Inundated with the flood of so-called evangelistic song-books, the present generation in the churches does not know the great hymns of the centuries, the singing of which expands and enriches and ennobles the soul.

It is profoundly pathetic to enter some of the best congregations and find them singing songs altogether unworthy of their good taste, their good sense and the dignity and depth of their Christian life.

And the pathos is deepened when one observes that these songs were mainly learned at conventions.

The time is long since past due for the makers of convention programs and for the leader of convention "singing" to recognize the far-reaching effects upon the churches of the character of hymns through which the worship of these representative gatherings of church people finds voice.

THIS WORLD AND THE OTHER.

PERHAPS there is not so much talk these days about immortality as there used to be, but the assurance of the life beyond is in no degree slackened in the souls of modern men. The late Jacob Riis was a man of intense social service. He loved his fellows. He believed it was the business of religion to make here and now a new world in which men could spend their years in joy and increasing fullness of life. But his last words were these:

> In my dreams I listen to the whisper of the reeds in the dry moats about the green castle hill, and hear my mother call me once more her boy, and I know that I shall find them with my lost childhood, when we all reach home at last.

Such sentiment from a practical worker in the slums of this world stands in abrupt contradiction to the notion that the practice of "this-worldliness" is incongruous with the deepest faith in the "otherworld."

Man is the creature of two worlds. This short life does not satisfy. And if the appetite for more and fuller life is developed by meditation, it is developed much more by human service.

The great servants of mankind find at the last that they need immortality—and needing it they have faith to claim it.

THEN AND NOW.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago the people burned us out; now they lean on us for guidance in the new life." Thus writes Wm. Remfry Hunt, of Chuchow, China, a walled city of thirty thousand people, in which there are just the two non-Chinese families of Mr. Hunt and Dr. Osgood.

But that is the story of missions everywhere. At first there is suspicion and hostility.

Why, say the people, should these strangers come among us with their superior knowledge and western cleverness, except to take advantage of us?

Then begins the long, slow process of making friends.

First the children are won by kindness, games, school opportunities and a hundred other offerings of good will.

Then the older people, following the children, learn the unselfish devotion of the missionaries to their physical and moral well-being.

Better homes, more industrial competence, some attention to sanitation and decency, a sense of civic responsibility come more slowly still.

At last, as Mr. Hunt says, the people lean upon the friends who have come out of the West to give them a new life, and so the Gospel spreads.

THE DISDAIN OF LIFE.

A SUBLIME and terrible impressiveness inheres in the uncalculating readiness with which men of every class are going to the front and offering up their lives in the European tragedy of these days.

Young and old, scholars, men of renown, professional leaders, obscure artisans and tradesmen go calmly and unhesitatingly to the trenches where such uncounted waste of the best blood of Europe has already occurred.

There is something in this spectacle that touches one past all the power of speech to describe. The solemn and somber forward movement of these brave men to their last momentary stand beyond the dead line of any return moves the heart as has no event in this generation.

And they are in the thinning ranks for what? Patriotism? Probably that is the worthiest name to give it. But the true pathos of the event is the slaughter by these thousands of those against whom they have no animosity, and whom but yesterday they held in close friendship.

If in such a cause where issues are obscure and motives confused, it is possible for men to give up their lives with such silent courage and in protesting steadfastness, what ought that devotion to be which is dedicated to the cause of our holy faith, and whose object is the divine Leader?

Those onward moving legions, advancing to certain death, ought to shame the lukewarm, passionless manner in which many of us prosecute the imperial work of Christ.

If, in a human cause, so wavering and so questionable, men dare to die like heroes, how much more does it become the Sons of God to vindicate their high and holy mission, and to give themselves as living sacrifices to the kingdom of heaven.

THE CHURCH'S RESPONSIBILITY.

ONE OF the outstanding addresses delivered at the Atlanta convention was that of Secretary Henry F. Cope of the Religious Education Association. He made it very clear that the church is facing a much more definite obligation to promote the study of the Bible than ever before. The line between the secular and the religious is being drawn very sharply in all institutions of education which are dependent upon state support.

Whether or not Christian people, especially Protestants, desire such a condition, the Bible is now excluded from the public schools in a large number of the states, and its study in state universities is placed under limitations which amount, practically, to exclusion. The question as to whether this is right or wrong is not under consideration. Very good arguments can be offered on both sides. Certainly, most of us, as Protestants, would like to see the Bible restored to its former place in public instruction.

But we have to remember that many of our fellow citizens, Roman Catholics and secularists, are strongly opposed to this, and they are as fully entitled to their rights in the state as are we. Meantime, as Secretary Cope pertinently shows, a new and heavy responsibility is falling upon the church to make good to its young people the opportunity of Bible study denied in the public schools and the state universities.

This means that the Christian home must awake to its duty. It means that the church and Sunday-school must co-operate to provide a much larger amount of Bible training than can be given on Sundays. It means that some such plan of Bible instruction for school children, outside of school building but during school time, shall be devised, as is now the case in Gary, Ind., and in some other places. No more important question confronts the church at this moment than that of providing its young people with competent biblical instruction.

THE SECTARIAN SPIRIT.

A DISTRICT missionary was reporting to his board recently in a section not far from Chicago.

In the course of his statement he said: "Our progress has been slow this year, and in some places we have lost ground; but I am thankful to say that the Methodists have fared even worse."

It is not strange that rivalries continue among Christian people when there are men of such ungenerous spirit in the places of leadership.

In the cities the impact of organized evil is great enough to drive the forces of righteousness together in a common cause.

It is tragic, when in smaller places, where every act of every group is quite patent and known, there should be manifested the spirit of faction and self-interest in the name of religion.

It is just in such places that co-operative work, like that promoted by the Federal Council of Churches, the Religious Education Association, and all organizations for social and civic uplift, has its best field and bears its most effective fruit.

COUNTRY AND CITY.

AS CITIES grow larger and their population more congested, the longing thoughts of their people—especially those who have lived in rural districts—will turn to the country, and seek rest and relaxation there through certain weeks of every year.

More than this, there are many of the city folk, who, disillusioned by the noise and grime of the big place, leave it and go out to find permanent and more satisfactory homes on the farm.

Yet the totality of these two groups makes but little impression upon the huge and increasing caravan that pours its pilgrims into the city in an increasing procession.

And the reason for this is that the city is a better place in which to live, from every point of view, physical, intellectual, moral, religious.

It ought not to be so. Many profess to believe that it is not so. But facts are marshalled in hosts to prove it.

The health of the city is better than that of the country. Food inspection, drainage, sanitation, plentiful and habitual bathing, the virtual extermination of pests and plagues are the rule in the city, and not in the country—though they ought to be alike in both.

The moral tone of cities is better than that of towns. There are enough vicious elements in all large places, as everyone knows. But in the city they obtrude far less on the attention of the average boy and girl than in the country or the small town.

Who that has lived in the smaller place does not know the miasm of foul, obscene and profane talk that pollutes the soul of every listener in those choice rendezvous of the idle—the small store and the livery stable.

And the small sectarianisms of the town, with its denominational rivalries and acerbities, often defeat the efforts and depress the spirits of those who seek the progress of the kingdom of God.

All this is not to underrate the town and the country. It is to plead for their equal share in the best things the city affords.

They are coming to their own in many things—the daily mail, the parcel post, the telephone and the electric train.

Why should they not also enjoy as high a sanitary, moral and religious tone as the better portions of the cities?

It is theirs for the asking and the effort. To see that they get it, is a part of the rural problem.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Dr. Edward Judson Dies.

Dr. Edward Judson, youngest son of Adoniram Judson of missionary fame, died at New York on Oct. 23, just one month after the burial of his wife. Dr. Judson was born in Burma in 1844. He was brought back from Burma by his stepmother in 1850 and subsequently went to Colgate University. He later took a degree at Brown University in 1865. His work has been for much of his life that of teaching, mostly in the department of homiletics and pastoral theology. He was pastor at North Orange, N. J., and later of the Berean Baptist church in New York City. His teaching engagements have been with Colgate University and the University of Chicago. He was esteemed by the whole Christian world as an exceedingly urbane, courteous and genial personality. He was seeking an endowment of a hundred thousand dollars for the Memorial Baptist Church of New York, which was to be a memorial to his father. His remains were laid away at Hamilton, N. Y., by the side of those of his wife.

New York Goes to Church.

The Federation of Churches of New York City appointed Oct. 18 as "Go-to-Church" Sunday. The day was considered so successful that it will be observed again next year. Those having the matter in charge reported that the audiences in the various churches were at least one-fourth larger both morning and evening. Dr. S. Edward Young was chairman of the committee.

Church Starts Newspaper.

The Olivet Institute, a Presbyterian institution in the midst of one of the most needy sections on the North Side of Chicago, is starting a community paper for use in its section of the city. We are familiar with the idea of a parish paper devoted to religious interests but this paper will be devoted to the community in which there are 60,000 people without any community organ. The paper will be edited by the pastor, Rev. Norman B. Barr, assisted by some business men, and will be sold on the newstands. Business men have promised advertising support.

Church Women Vote in England.

In England, the Anglican church has given the vote to women on equal terms with the men, and they will be admitted as lay representatives on parochial church councils. The decision was reached recently by the Representative Church Council to make this change. The bishops and clergy strongly supported the measure while the lay delegates gave it a majority of only two. The militant suffragettes replied to this gracious act by demanding that the council proceed immediately to secure the release of all women imprisoned for the burning of churches and the destruction of art treasures.

Home Mission Development.

The Christian denomination which recently held its quadrennial convention is reorganizing its missionary service. A Board of Home Missions is in process of formation. Rev. Omer S. Thomas has been elected as the new Home Missionary Secretary. He has served for many years as missionary secretary in his own conference and he has taken an active interest in the Rural Life Movement. Associated with him will be another worker who specializes in social service and still another whose interest is evangelism. The new secretary will begin his work January 1. He succeeds Rev. O. W. Powers who has been secretary for the past eight years.

Methodists Help Purdue Students.

The Northwest Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church has taken account of the special needs of the Bishop W. F. McDowell, of Chicago, Who Heads a Board that Will Look After Methodist Students in Purdue University.

students at Purdue University, a large state institution at Lafayette, Indiana. There are seven hundred Methodist students in this school. Forty-three of the faculty are members of this denomination. Up to the present time, no special attention has been given to the needs of these students. An advisory board has been created, consisting of the Lafayette district, and other local representatives. A student pastor is to have spiritual oversight of these young people and other large plans will doubtless originate in this board.

Seminary Church Selects Pastor.

The New First Congregational church of Chicago is a union of two older churches and is closely related to the Chicago Theological Seminary, having a building adjacent to the seminary. The offices of head minister and parish minister are being combined and Rev. B. F. Aldrich has been called to the pastorate. He will have three assistants under his direction, one of them devoting his time to the Sunday-school. The church is united and is receiving many new members. It has a great work in establishing standards for the young ministers who are educated in its atmosphere.

Suspends Plans for Unity Conference.

Before the outbreak of the European war, notice had been received by the promotors of the World Conference on Faith and Order of the appointment of forty-eight commissions in the United States, and other parts of the Christian world. The Protestant, Anglican, and Old Catholic churches of the world are participating and there are some signs of interest in the Orthodox and Roman Catholic churches. Now announcement is made that the conference must be suspended awaiting the outcome of the war. The idea is not to be abandoned, however, and Christians are everywhere exhorted by the great leaders of the conference to continue to make ready for the day by prayer and efforts for unity.

Interdenominational Interest.

The Presbyterian Advance of Nashville, Tenn., devoted two pages to a report of the national convention of the Disciples of Christ. Some denominational journals are beginning to conceive themselves as being more than the representatives of some particular denomination. This report shows a desire to understand sympathetically the problems of the Disciples and to report the facts without prejudice. The cause of Christian union can be furthered by an increase of interdenominational acquaintance in all our communions.

Week of Prayer for Young Men.

The Young Men's Christian Association has issued a special leaflet for use during the week of prayer for young men, Nov. 8-14. The topics of prayer for the different days of the week are, My Own Attitude, International Justice and Good-will, Those Who are Fighting, All Affected by the War, Christians Everywhere, Christian Work Throughout the World, The Young Men of All Nations. A significant sentence from the leaflet is "Prayer is for the religious life what original research is for science—by it we get direct contact with reality."

Scholastic Training of Clergymen.

The Churchman publishes a very significant statement of the standing of the clergy of the Episcopal church with reference to their scholastic attainments. In 1913, about forty per cent of the deacons, priests and bishops held college degrees, either honorary or earned. Of ninety-five bishops fifteen had attended no college and fourteen more had attended college without attaining a degree. That means that one in four of the bishops have no college degree. The problem of ministerial education is not one of any particular communion.

Laymen's Efficiency Convention.

In New York City there has just been held a Laymen's Efficiency Convention of the Episcopal church. The program is to consist of four main objectives. It is suggested that the present school for training laymen for church work be enlarged to equip volunteer workers for all forms of activity in the churches. A labor bureau is to be organized to provide work for the unemployed, of whom there will be a very great number this winter. The young men who come to New York are to be reached quickly and brought into more vital fellowship with the church. It is further advised that some churches establish afternoon schools of religion.

Methodists Favor Union Printing.

The matter of the use of printing with the union label is one that appears periodically in the Methodist brotherhood. At a conference in Illinois the matter was brought up this fall by Rev. Harry F. Ward, the national secretary of the Methodist Social Service Commission. The conference voted to use the union printing. The secretary said "I stand for the right of the union employee to receive preference over the non-union man even in an open shop. Who made it possible to have the present scale of wages and the reduced hours? Organized labor won this victory and ought to be recognized by our publishing house."

Death of Bishop Weeks.

After an illness of several weeks, the Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont, the Rt. Rev. William Farrar Weeks, D. D., died at his home at Rutland. He was obliged to undergo a surgical operation last year which was not successful. The funeral service was held at the Trinity Episcopal Church of Rutland on October 26.

A Church 250 Years Old.

One of the oldest churches in America is the First Presbyterian Church at Elizabeth, New Jersey. It recently celebrated 250 years of history. Puritan settlers purchased the ground from Indians in 1664 and erected a "meeting house" on the site of the present building. It was the first organized church in the state using the English language. President Hibben, of Princeton, spoke at the anniversary celebration. Dr. William Force Whitaker, the present minister, was installed in 1907.

Salvation Army Helps War Victims.

Commander Eva Booth, of the Salvation Army, is a very practical woman. Doubtless many kinds of Salvation Army work will suffer by reason of the war but other forms of work are to be taken up. A recent effort is that to secure quantites of old linen for the use of the Red Cross in Europe, both for the Germans and the Allies. Mrs. Commissioner Estill of Chicago has been given charge of this work and is securing the co-operation of women in churches, clubs, lodges and other organizations to become busy about this humane service.

The Bible in Public Schools.

Not everywhere in the country does the public school ostracize the Bible from the schools. The city school board of Austin, Texas, has decided to give credit in their high school for Bible study. Although New York City has the largest Jewish population of any city in America if not indeed in the world, and the Catholic population is a very large percentage of the total, daily Bible readings are maintained in the public schools of the city from kindergarten to university. Pennsylvania, which has a large Catholic population passed a law last year making the daily reading of the Bible compulsory in all public schools of the state.

Protestants at the Panama Exposition.

The Panama Exposition has been considered an opportunity for religion by our great leaders who have not forgotten the historic Parliament of Religion in connection with the exposition at Chicago in 1893. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ is now asking the co-operation of the Protestant bodies of America in arranging for a building on the exposition grounds that will be a center for Protestants at the great fair.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ADVANCE.

THE SIGNIFICANCE AND INSIGNIFICANCE OF BAPTISM.

"That immersion, and immersion only, is baptism is intolerable. Baptism is validly solemnized by other forms than immersion. Not all who have been initiated into the church have been immersed. The body of Christ is not composed exclusively of immersed believers."

The paragraph here quoted and placed in italics receives such unusual emphasis because it is the conclusion of a leading minister of the Disciples or "Christian" Church and expresses the conviction at which the author has arrived after a careful and independent study of the place and significance of Christian baptism, the whole result of his study being set forth in a book recently from the press. Readers of this paper will generally accept our author's conclusions, but what will arouse unusual interest in these statements and in the whole book is the fact that the author occupies the position that he does as minister and leader in a church the greater part of whose ministers and members have placed such emphasis upon the importance of the rite of immersion as to make it almost an essential to salvation, as they have made it an essential to church membership.

The editor of this paper welcomes the appearance of this volume, for it enables him for the first time in his life to answer a question which often has been asked of him by readers and correspondents—"What is the best book on baptism?" Heretofore he has always felt that there was no best book on baptism, for the reason that all of the books he ever saw on the subject placed such unwarranted emphasis upon a mere physical act, and upon the precise form of that act, that they seemed to him to encourage people to rely upon a form rather than upon the indwelling spirit. Only once in his life did he ever muster courage to preach a sermon on baptism, and that was years ago. His subject was, "The Significance and Insignificance of Baptism," and, after pointing out that the significance of baptism was in the fact that it was initiation into the church—the body of Christ—he spent most of his time discussing its insignificance and the danger of trusting to an outward form. This explains why the present volume is so welcome. Our author gives convincing proof of the correctness of his interpretation of the meaning of baptism, of which he says, "By baptism is not meant immersion, nor affusion, nor any physical act whatsoever, but the moral act of uniting oneself with those who are of like mind with oneself concerning Jesus Christ. . . . The duty of baptism is the duty to accept church membership, to ally oneself with Christ's people, openly and actively, to merge one's personality into the organism of Christ's body." In short, "coming out publicly and joining was baptism."

For those who are at all troubled with questions about baptism we can commend this book most heartily. To be sure, our author firmly believes that immersion is the proper and regular mode and holds, as many eminent scholars do, that immersion was the custom in the early church, though he frankly admits that there is no good ground for the claim that "all scholarship" is agreed on these points, as is so commonly claimed by Baptist writers; but we are quite willing for him to hold and advocate his views about the proper and regular mode so long as he stands with us on the broad platform that Christian fellowship cannot depend upon some more or less arbitrary physical act, but upon spiritual union. The whole question of mode will quickly become a matter of indifference when all come to see as our author does the real meaning of baptism. He shows us that while the original meaning of the Greek word, "baptizo," was to immerse, its meaning became changed, as the meanings of words are often changed, and it stood for the induction of a person into the Christian community. There is not room to review the argument, but we trust that the book will be widely read, and we are sure that it will render a valuable service. In order that our readers may secure it promptly, copies can be secured from The Advance Publishing Company at $1.25 each, or in connection with new subscriptions as set forth in our advertising columns.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

The book here presented to the public is an unusual one. Written by a Disciple, and by the editor of the leading Disciple newspaper, he wholly abandons the Disciple and Baptist argument on which they found their dogma of baptism by immersion. While claiming that it is a recognized form of administering the ordinance, he argues that it may be rightfully performed by other modes. He says the use of the word "baptizo," in its New Testament usage, refers primarily to the function of initiation and only incidentally to the particular act. In regard to the baptism of the 3,000 on the day of Pentecost, the baptism of the Philippian jailor and Cornelius, he is candid enough to say that "it is not seemly for immersionists to be dogmatic." "Baptism," he affirms, "so far as being identified with immersion in the mind of the early Church, is here shown (by the Didache) to have been regarded as an organic function, in the administration of which the particular mode was not essential." "Baptism and immersion could not have meant the same thing in the minds of the apostles or in the mind of the Lord." "To urge immersion as the equivalent of baptism is to patronize the Church." He claims, however, that the breakdown of the immersion dogma does not carry with it the breakdown of the immersion practice. On the contrary, he contends that union with other churches could only be on the basis of baptism by immersion. The choice of individual liberty would be "inherently impossible."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

The New Hope

BY MRS. DESHA BRECKENRIDGE.

Editor's Note: The brilliant paper which follows was read at the last meeting of the National Conference of Charities and Correction, and has not been published before. It was written and presented by Mrs. Desha Breckenridge, a great-granddaughter of Henry Clay. She is vice-president of the American Woman's Suffrage Association, president of the Kentucky Equal Rights Association, and a speaker and social worker of national reputation. It is on a subject that is challenging the attention of the whole country, and gives convincing reasons why this ancient evil, so long tolerated, should now be placed in the same rank with murder, and theft, and all other sins forbidden by the moral law. I. W. H.

In facing the social evil today, we are possessed of a new hope; we have knowledge that no previous generation has had. First, the appalling knowledge of the extent of the evil resulting from prostitution. This has awakened the public conscience and has forced in on the commonsense of our people a determination to grapple with and finally, it may be, to eradicate it, if only in the interest of the health and efficiency of the race. Second, we have the wonderful knowledge that physicians have never given to any other generation, that prostitution is not necessary for one-half the race, as was formerly believed to be the case.

BOTH SEXES FORM PUBLIC OPINION.

I think that one of the other notable signs of the day is that public opinion is no longer the opinion of one sex, but of both. In former days all avenues for the expression and the formulation of public opinion were in the possession of men. Women first broke into public opinion through the writing women—the geniuses of the race, the George Eliots and George Sands.

Today, speaking generally, the law-making bodies and the press, the two most effective agencies for the expression of public opinion, are in the hands of men: and many parts of our country are denying themselves the distinct advantage of adding the woman's point of view to the man's point of view. This accounts to some extent for the shocking conditions of our sex laws in some sections—for the fact that sex laws have not kept pace with the ethical advance of the community. It accounts to a lesser extent for the prevalence of the "unwritten law," so frequently invoked in southern states in recent years, for the protection of those who have committed crimes of violence in order to avenge themselves or members of their family on the betraying lover, the faithless husband or wife, the violator of the home.

IN SOUTHERN STATES.

I remember a little while back three such crimes were committed down in Texas, and it occurred to me to find what was the age of protection for girls in Texas; it was pertinent. I found it was fifteen years. In most of our southern states—there are a few notable exceptions—the age of protection goes down to sixteen in my own state and in Virginia, fifteen in Texas and the Carolinas, and twelve in Georgia. I do not believe the men, the fathers of these southern states, believe that fifteen is a sufficient age of protection for their daughters. I believe they simply mean to protect their daughters by the conventions of society and in more primitive ways—with their own right arms.

But it has not taken the women of the enfranchised states long to see the principle that all law-making bodies and law-administering men have been able to see with regard to a girl's property rights: that she should not be allowed to sell, give away, or in any way to despoil herself of her material possessions until she has reached years of discretion. The mothers of these enfranchised states have realized that there is one thing of more importance to a girl than material possessions can ever be, and have quickly enacted this realization into law. In Colorado, at the first session of the legislature after the enfranchisement of women, the first law ever introduced by a woman legislator, was a law raising the age of protection for girls to eighteen years, which was at once enacted. The other suffrage states followed suit. In the nine enfranchised states the age of protection is as high as eighteen in seven, and it is twenty-one in one of these.

Though our law-making bodies in most of the states of the union, and our daily press in all, are still in the hands of men, with the coming of the cheap magazine our writing women have increased by the score and our women's opinion is forcing itself into print, and to the front, through such organizations as this conference. Women have learned the trick of co-operation from men and are organizing themselves into such bodies as the Federation of Women's Clubs, National and International Woman Suffrage Association, Councils of Women, etc., and are giving expression to their views from the platform and through special publications.

SOLIDARITY OF WOMEN.

I consider another hopeful sign of the times to be the growing consciousness of solidarity on the part of women, the growing sense of responsibility of women fortunately placed, for the conditions under which other women are living and working and suffering. I believe there are many comfortable women today who cannot remain long so comfortable, because they are beginning to realize that the leisure they have, the freedom from the household drudgery of their grandmothers is bought at the price of the work of little children and of other women working long and exhausting hours in unsanitary conditions, and for a mere pittance of wage. The comfort of these comfortable women has been disturbed by the facts brought to us by committees that have investigated industrial conditions, such as those in the canning factories of New York, for instance, which resulted in the passage of better laws by the last legislature of New York. That committee showed that in the canning industry women worked not only as in the department stores of the great cities, through the long days and weeks of the Christmas season, but through the months of the canning season, when one rush week succeeded another, when women and little children worked not one long day, but many long days succeeding each other, days of twelve and fourteen, and sixteen, and actually in one instance of twenty-three and a half hours of the twenty-four.

THE MINIMUM WAGE.

The comfort of these comfortable women has been shocked by the facts brought out by the vice investigating commissions—one of which made an inquiry in Illinois, and took testimony as to the ability of girls to live on a certain fixed sum, I believe $12.

The manager of a certain firm that employs some two thousand girls and women was arguing that $8 was a sufficient wage. He adduced the budget of two of his girls who earned this sum to prove his contention. The first girl paid $3 for her board, 60 cents for carfare, a fraction over 5 cents for breakfast, 12 cents for luncheon and 20 cents for dinner, and had $1.70 left for incidentals. Incidentals meant clothing in a long, severe winter like that of Chicago, and neat clothing, for a girl in order to hold her position must be neat; it meant laundry unless she did her own laundering at night. It meant any little indulgence for herself or any assistance which she might desire to give some other member of her family, or some fellow-worker less well situated than herself. It meant those bad incidentals of the poor, the druggist's and the dentist's and the doctor's bills. The second budget showed that the other girl had managed better. She had gotten both food and lodging for $3.50—fortunately the budget of the boarding-house keeper was not adduced—she did not have to pay street carfare; she had a certain amount for laundry, and she effected a saving of twenty-five cents. One member of the investigating committee was much impressed and asked to be allowed to go over the schedule again. He found that there had been a miscalculation, that even then five cents was not accounted for "which," as he said, "she probably spends for frivolous purposes."

KEEPING BODY AND SOUL TOGETHER.

When we remember that many—in fact, the majority of these women workers are not old, or even middle-aged women, content to hold on to a bare thread of existence, simply to keep body and soul together if they may; but that they are young women, like our own young people, with the eager hopes and desires of youth, with the springtime of life pulsing in their veins, and when we remember that commercialized and organized vice is waiting for them, with its pitfalls laid on every street corner, in the background of every picture-show and dance-hall, we must feel that there is some connection between the wages paid to working women and the social evil. We are told by some social investigators that it is not a prime factor, that there are other much more important factors, as for instance, low mentality in the girls, lack of skill and training, poor home surroundings. But we know that the condition of the wage-earner generally is an important factor: and we welcome gladly those new social experiments such as minimum wage-laws, welfare and industrial commissions, and look forward hopefully to the time when laws for the benefit of the worker, limiting the hours of work, insisting upon humane conditions, fixing a minimum wage even, will no longer embody sex discrimination: when through them the condition of the head of the family may be improved and home conditions made better: when because of them girls will be kept longer in the home, the period of education and training be prolonged and they be better fitted for life.

MEN'S RESPONSIBILITY.

But perhaps the most hopeful of all the signs of the day is the symptom, if I may so term it, of the fact that there is a growing body of men who are going at this task in a determined fashion, who are helping to get and to enforce wise legislation; who are continually trying to bring the new truths to the young men of our day, who are building up a social conscience, a public opinion, that will demand responsibility of men as of women for unsocial acts.

I can never forgot a few hours spent in the night court of New York, where a woman was on trial for a felony: keeping a disorderly house in connection with a tenement house, a bridge connecting the two. If proven guilty, she would be sentenced to a number of years in the penitentiary. A part of the evidence of the plain clothes man was that when he went into a room of the house where she was arrested, a man was sitting there with his coat off, and that he got up and went out. He went out "unspotted before the world," so far as the world knew, innocent in its eyes, unaccused of the law, while the woman, whose crime was that she had provided the place to which he might go in, from which he might come out when he chose, stood there before us, facing a punishment of which she realized the full gravity, as we could see by her manner, and the nervous twitchings of her face.

I think we must rely upon the men of our communities more than the women to bring about this new sense of social responsibility in our men for men's acts, the acknowledgment that this is even more a man's problem than a woman's problem.

LOYALTY TILL VICTORY.

I truly hope that every man and woman in this audience may have taken from what we have heard a new heart of hope and a new resolve. That we may go out from this meeting with a determination to secure laws that better protect our young men and young women, and to take all those difficult steps to secure the institutions needed to care for the women and to train them to economic independence, the many necessary laws so hard to get, and so much harder to enforce. I hope especially that there may be no man or woman present who does not go forth, after what we have heard tonight, with a new determination to make war upon the red light district, as upon the whole great evil of prostitution, and to continue that war, no matter how many times defeated, how many times driven back, how many times we may stumble and fall, until finally it has reached its ultimate necessary consummation of victory.

Whatever promotes intercourse and knowledge sympathy among mankind serves the cause of peace.—W. T. Ellis.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.
("Arthur Gordon.")

Adventures While Preaching the Gospel of Beauty. By Nicholas Vachel Lindsay. Last summer one day I picked up a copy of the "Forum," and read with keen interest an article by Mr. Lindsay telling of a walk he had made into the state of Kansas in a half whimsical, half serious effort to know at first hand and in the most intimate way the people and interests of the regions through which he passed. He said he took no funds with him, walked most of the way, except when assisted by passing vehicles, secured his lodgings and food from those willing to entertain him for such compensation as he could offer them in the form of his poems, which he read or distributed as occasion presented. It was evident that the article I was reading was one of a series, but the other numbers I did not see until the appearance of this book. I can assure any reader that he will not lay it aside until he has finished the last page. However much or little one may agree with Mr. Lindsay's social and artistic creed, he is bound to admire the forthright persistent manner in which he has attempted to interpret his ideals regarding the new social order for which he pleads. He did not tramp out through the west expecting to work in the harvest-fields of Kansas, but the insistence of needy farmers at last brought him to bay, and not the least interesting of his chapters are those devoted to his labors with Quaker and other farmers under the sweltering sun of central Kansas. But all the time he was keeping at his larger enterprise of social reform and poetry, which has been his enthusiasm for many years. The chapters of this travel narrative are usually followed by poems more or less pertinent to the theme, and at the end of the book there are certain "Proclamations," in which Mr. Lindsay makes known his social creed and hopes.

MR. LINDSAY'S "CONGO."

A second volume, "The Congo, and other Poems" by Vachel Lindsay, is a proof that the author is a poet of power and distinction. I recall the fact that some years ago while he was a student in the New York School of Art he sent me a little collection of his poetry bound in a bizarre fragment of wall paper. I wrote to him a friendly, but not enthusiastic letter of thanks, and he responded in a vein that gave me to understand conclusively my inability to appreciate his message. I frankly confessed the fact to myself at the time, and here make the confession publicly. But Mr. Lindsay did not need my lay encomiums, for he was already entering the company of the immortals in whose ranks he finds now a secure and welcome place. No one who has read that splendid trumpet blast, "General William Booth Enters into Heaven," need question Mr. Lindsay's poetic genius. I confess I do not quite appreciate the title poem, which is a study of the negro race, or the other selections in the first section of the book which are intended to be read aloud or chanted. I should need to hear them so rendered to get Mr. Lindsay's idea of what Miss Harriet Monroe believes to be a new and impressive form of national art. But I am willing to wait for that interpretation. Meanwhile, anyone with even a modicum of literary appreciation can value at high worth such poems as "The Jingo and the Minstrel," "Galahad, Knight who Perished," "Love and Law," "Darling Daughter of Babylon," "The Amaranth," "Two Easter Stanzas," and "Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight." In the first and the last of these poems Mr. Lindsay deals masterfully with the anti-Japanese jingoism of certain of our American near-statesmen, and with the present tragedy carried on by the war-lords of Europe. The twenty poems in which the moon is the principal figure of speech are charming, and one does not wonder that Mr. Lindsay found it easy to entertain his audiences of little folks on his long walk in the west. Rise of the Working-class. By Algernon Sidney Crapsey. The author of this book came prominently to attention some years ago as the rector of St. Andrew's Church, Rochester, whose controversy with his ecclesiastical superiors over questions involving church polity and social reform resulted in his removal from his position. Since that time he has been the pastor of what is called "The Brotherhood" in Rochester, and has lectured and written widely on historical, religious and sociological topics. In this volume the effort is made to point out the radical change that has come over American society in the growth of a distinct labor class. Interesting chapters tell of the forces that tend to disintegrate the working-class family, to make more difficult the position of woman in relation to the family on one side and labor on the other, and the production of a veritable industrial slavery with the attendant evils of parasitism, revolt and revolution. This is followed in the discussion by informing chapters on working-class religion, morality, politics and philosophy. That the author is hopeful regarding the future is proved in his concluding chapter on the "Coming Age," though not without words of warning on public duties toward the worker. An appendix on "The War against Poverty" presents a review of a speech by Mr. Lloyd-George. (The Century Co., $1.30 net.)

The Youth's Companion In Every Family.

"If I could take only one paper," said the late Mr. Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court, "it would be The Youth's Companion — a little of everything in a nutshell, and unbiased." The Companion is a family paper in the completest sense. It provides reading that, without failing to interest the young, still interests the mature. It unites young and old through their common enjoyment of delightful fiction, agreeable miscellany, and the clear exposition of public questions.

So carefully is it edited, so varied are its contents, that it would easily supply a family with entertaining fiction, up-to-date information and wholesome fun.

If you are not familiar with The Companion as it is today, let us send you sample copies and the Forecast for 1915.

New subscribers who send $2 for the fifty-two issues of 1915 will receive free all the remaining issues of 1914, besides a copy of The Companion Home Calender for 1915.—The Youth's Companion, Boston, Mass.

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Breeden Preaches Again.

Dr. H. O. Breeden has been ill for several weeks with pleurisy and has not been able to preach. He returned to his pulpit on Oct. 25. He is not entirely well yet, but hopes to go on with his work henceforth. A special musical program was given in church the morning of his return in celebration of his recovery.

Terre Haute Church Writes Missionary.

The church at Terre Haute, Ind., has a living link missionary, Mrs. O. J. Grainger. They have an arrangement that a letter shall go from some member of the church every day to their missionary. The assignments to this service are printed in the parish paper. This is very different from the relation of some churches with their missionary and is a very helpful and beautiful thing to do.

DeLoss Smith in Montana.

DeLoss Smith, who is widely known among our people for his past services as a leader of song in evangelistic meetings, is now head of the School of Music of the University of Montana at Missoula. He has a little brick bungalow at the foot of Mt. Sentinel for a home, and is quite near the university. He makes a trip to New York every summer.

Arkansas District Convention.

The Northwest district of Arkansas will hold a convention in Fayetteville from Nov. 16 to 20. The convention will be in a large measure a school of methods. Among the speakers is N. M. Ragland. A sermon will be preached by Rollo G. Sears.

Home-coming at Fayetteville.

The church at Fayetteville, Ark., is announcing a home-coming day on Nov. 15. They are planning to have all former members and friends present that day as far as possible. The church was founded in 1848. Among the lamented pastors of the past are Robert Graham and John B. Johnson. In the sixty years of history, thousands of people have been members of this congregation.

Progress at Manzanola.

The First Church at Manzanola, Col., dedicated their new building Oct. 26, with Chas. Reign Scoville preaching. Mrs. Scoville assisted in the music. Twelve hundred dollars was needed to clear the building of debt and sixteen hundred was raised. J. F. Findley was called to the pastorate of this church last January. Mr. Findley is following the dedication with a revival with home forces. Geo. Elder, of Las Animas will assist in the music.

New Church at Norfolk.

Geo. L. Snively dedicated a new church building at Norfolk, Va., on Oct. 18. The present building is intended specially for the use of the Sunday-school and cost $55,000. Sixteen thousand dollars was raised to clear the building of indebtedness and nine thousand more was added to provide for a parsonage for the faithful pastor, Chas. M. Watson.

National Benevolent Association Prospers.

During the past year, the National Benevolent Association has had its work in various cities investigated by various agencies and approved. In St. Louis, Omaha, Cleveland, Dallas and Denver, its institutions have received the open, unsought and unqualified commendation of the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Men's League. In Denver, the citizens united in voting the Colorado Christian Home a premium cow from the Denver Post. Three counties in Missouri, Pettus, Henry and Nodaway, sent a carload donation each last Thanksgiving. The churches at Detroit, Griggsville, El Dara, Milton, Chambersburg, Barry and Pittsfield, in Illinois took one hundred and twenty-five children out of the Orphans' home at St. Louis for a full two weeks' outing. The Wabash railroad furnished the transportation. The churches paid all the other expenses. The new hospital at Kansas City is now in the process of erection. It is absolutely fire-proof and will be complete to the last detail. It will cost fully $200,000. It is expected that this new institution will be ready in about six months to receive the public.

Introducing a New Minister.

On October 4, William L. Barth united with First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mr. Barth came to us from the Congregational fellowship, having been in the active ministry of that communion for twenty years, serving some of the best churches in Michigan and Illinois. He has studied the history and teaching of the Disciples of Christ and has been won to our ideals by this investigation. He is married, with a grown son who is also a member of the church. Mr. Barth is vouched for by Walter M. White, pastor of the Cedar Rapids church, and commended to the service of our churches. He is a cultivated Christian gentleman, an earnest spiritual leader, and a preacher who will take high rank in our fellowship. Mr. White will gladly put him in touch with any church desiring a pastor.

Rev. W. L. Barth.

Dr. Willett Lectures.

Dr. H. L. Willett is giving a series of Sunday evening missionary lectures at the Memorial Church, Chicago, during November. The church has had the Sunday evening problem in common with other churches, but during these lectures, the auditorium is being filled every night. The special addresses are studies made by Dr. Willett while on his trip around the world, giving first-hand information of the great mission fields of various denominations in different parts of the world.

Pastors Surprise Congregations.

Five pastors at McPherson, Kans., Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist and Disciple, arranged for an exchange of pulpits on a recent Sunday, both morning and evening. The announcement was not made to the general congregations and the appearance of the new speaker was a surprise in each church.

Organize Fifth Church.

S. L. Klapp has just returned from Danville, Va., to his home at Greensboro, N. C. While he was away, he organized a new church in Danville. This is the fifth church that has been organized in the ministry of Mr. Klapp. He will hold an evangelistic meeting at Keyser, N. C., soon.

Owosso, Mich., Raises Debt.

Before leaving his pulpit to go into the real estate business and politics, Chas. R. Wolford, of Owosso, Mich., asked for the raising of a $2,500 debt which has hung over the church for a long time. Mr. Wolford will be succeeded at Owosso by J. Frank Green, state secretary of Michigan.

J. H. Coil Leaves Missouri.

W. A. Shullenberger writes of the regret of the people in northeast Missouri at the going of J. H. Coil from the church at Perry,

In and Around Chicago

The Chicago Christian Missionary Society has elected its new board and this board of trustees met recently and tendered the secretaryship to W. G. Winn, pastor of the Irving Park church, the work to be done in connection with Mr. Winn's pastorate.

W. G. Winn is a graduate of Bethany college and has had several pastorates. He was at Pittsburgh several years and came to Chicago from Rensselaer, Ind., where he had a successful pastorate of two years. He is interested in social questions and is planning to have the church building at Irving Park remodeled to become more adapted to the social needs of the community.

Mr. Winn comes into the Chicago secretaryship at a time when great enterprises are on foot. The Russian mission is to be housed. The new mission at Edgewater is to be guided into a permanent program. New work may be opened in the suburbs. The C. W. B. M. is planning to open a Polish mission in Chicago. These opportunities for service will call out the very best in Chicago's leader and challenge him to activity and growth.

The acceptance of this position will be made by Mr. Winn to the board of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society in a few days, at the next meeting. The details of the arrangement are yet to be worked out.

The Federation Council of Chicago is asking Bishop Anderson to meet with them to confer with reference to his views on federation and Christian union. It was felt by many of the members of the Federation Council that they did not understand the position of the bishop who has written so much on Christian union.

The ministers' meeting for Nov. 9th will meet in the Y. M. C. A. building at 12:30, and will be addressed by W. D. McDougall of India, who is in the city studying at the University of Chicago.

Several of the ministers reported additions for Nov. 1. Jackson Boulevard had 5 and Hyde Park 8. Austin Hunter reported having had 9 weddings in October.

Chas. M. Sharpe is supplying the pulpit at Monroe street since the pastor resigned. All the services are showing growth lately.

At Evanston, O. F. Jordan reviewed Macfarlane's "Those Who Have Come Back," on the evening of Nov. 1. Ellsworth Faris will speak in this church on the evening of Nov. 8th on his experiences in Africa.

Basil S. Keusseff reported his audiences for Nov. 1 reduced on account of a play given in a nearby theater under socialistic auspices.

The Co-operative Council of City Missions passed a special vote of appreciation of the six years' service of O. F. Jordan, who has been a member of the organization which federates the work of six denominations in city missions. Mr. Jordan's place is now taken by W. G. Winn. Among Mr. Jordan's last duties was the successful negotiation of a church difficulty in Gross Park between two religious bodies.

THE CONVENTION "CENTURY."
You will want several copies of the special Atlanta Convention issue of The Christian Century to give to your friends. Order them now. Five cents per copy.

Mo. Mr. Coil has been called to the church at New Philadelphia, O., which will give him a fine opportunity for service. He was at Perry six years and has done a constructive, efficient and spiritual work. He will go to the Eastern field with the best wishes of many Missouri friends.

Texas Christian Lectureship.

The city and church of Waxahachie, Tex., are to be host this year to the Texas Christian Lectureship, Nov. 16-19. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, is to be the chief lecturer and in addition a number of Texas Disciples will bring worthy contributions. The Waxahachie church will extend its hospitality of lodging and breakfast and will appreciate the courtesy of advance notice.

James R. Garfield for Governor.

James R. Garfield, who is a candidate for governor of Ohio on the Progressive ticket, is a son of President Garfield, who was so intimately related to Disciple history. His campaign is being watched with interest by all Ohio Disciples.

Telephone Day at Atchison.

During the meeting of the Vawter Evangelistic Company at Atchison, Kans., it was arranged that a thousand calls should be sent out over the telephone in the interest of the meeting on a certain day. The result of the co-operative effort was a greatly increased audience.

Kansas City Ministers Meet.

The Christian Alliance of Kansas City and vicinity met on Oct. 25, at the Y. M. C. A. building. Robert Graham Frank of Liberty, Mo., spoke on "The Present Status and Future Outlook of the General Convention of the Disciples of Christ." L. J. Marshall of Kansas City, spoke on "The Spiritual Significance of the Atlanta Convention." There were about forty ministers present and a very helpful meeting was held.

Ft. Collins, Colo., Loses Pastor.

The First Christian Church at Ft. Collins has prospered the past two years. There have been 99 new members received. The pastor, J. D. Garrison, has resigned recently to take effect Jan. 1. The church tried in vain to influence him to change this decision. That he has been popular in the community is evidenced by the fact that he gave twenty-five special addresses the past two years. He came to this field from the large church at Somerset, Pa. He expects to return to the East for his next pastorate.

Galesburg Church Active.

The church at Galesburg, Ill., H. A. Denton, pastor, is now building a new plant which was inspected recently by John R. Golden, Clarence L. Depew and others. A conference was held in Galesburg recently to discuss methods of work and various Knox County churches were represented. The pastor reviewed "John Barleycorn" Nov. 1

Church Bulletins Useful.

A number of pastors throughout the country have put the Christian Century on their mailing list to receive the weekly bulletin of the local church. This courtesy is much appreciated and some of our most important news items are gleaned from this source. The pastor who is too modest to send in news of his own work may find that this is the way to preserve his modesty and yet discharge his clear duty to let the brotherhood know of the significant doings in his church. The Christian Century would like to have five hundred bulletins coming to the office every week.

Activities at Bethany College.

The Ministerial Association of Bethany College is active this year and was recently addressed by O. G. White, state secretary of West Virginia. The Volunteer Mission Band is also prospering and this year has 25 live members. President Cramblett is away working with the "Men and Millions Movement" in Kentucky.

Bethany Ladies Give Play.

The ladies of the church at Bethany, W. Va., gave the play "She Stoops to Conquer" on October 24. The funds that were realized are to be devoted to the new building enterprise. This dramatic entertainment will be given at Steubenville, Ohio, on Nov. 9. The play is written by Sheridan, who is also known as author of "The Rivals."

Liberty Church Liberal.

The recent "General Convention of the Churches of Christ" made request of the church at Liberty, Mo., that their pastor, Robert Graham Frank, might be allowed to go on with his work as corresponding secretary of the convention. The matter was presented to the church Oct. 18 and resulted in favorable action. He will establish an office in the Citizens Bank Building and by securing more office assistance will get the work done without interfering so much with the work of the local church as last year. C. M. Chilton is in a meeting with this church just now.

The District Convention at Newark.

The District Convention met at Newark, O., the last week in October. There were about 200 delegates from outside of Newark. J. A. Long of Mt. Vernon was president this year and delivered the president's address on "The Spiritual Conception of the Church." There were three minute reports from the churches on the subject, "One Advance Step We Took Last Year."

Ladies Help Christmas Ship.

The ladies of Memorial Church, Rock Island, Ill., held a special meeting on Oct. 22 for the purpose of dressing dolls for the Christmas ship. Twenty dollars were made ready for the unfortunate children of Europe.

Ministerial Relief Grows.

The Board of Ministerial Relief reports that it is now caring for sixty ministers, forty-three widows and eight missionaries. This represents a gain of twenty-six persons cared for as compared with last year. The board has a maximum pension of $360 per year but in an exceptional case $435 was spent to save a man from tuberculosis. The board is suggesting to the Sunday-schools that in connection with the exercise "White Gifts for the King" given by the children at the Christmas time, an offering be received for Ministerial Relief.

Prof. Haggard Dedicates.

Prof. Alfred M. Haggard of Drake University dedicated the church at Earlham, Ia., on September 27. This is the 147th church dedication conducted by this veteran. The building at Earlham cost over $8,000; $4,400 was raised on dedication day which provided for the indebtedness in full. The pastor of the church is Clarence Bigelow who is a student in Drake University. On October 4, Prof. Haggard dedicated the church building at Benton, Ia., where Dennis Dille is pastor.

Gain in Benevolent Funds.

Not the least important fact of the year's work for the National Benevolent Association has been its gain in funds. The total for the year was $134,624.24 which is $35,000 better than last year and five thousand better than centennial year when Mr. Stockton made his large gift. The operating expenses of the society were reduced 4 per cent during the year. The total assets claimed by the National Benevolent Association invested in institutions and endowment for them is $873,674.56.

J. C. Ogden Invades Thibet.

A letter from J. C. Ogden to his living link church tells of his journey into the interior of Thibet. His party was obliged to make a detour on account of robbers. The journey by land is the longest taken by any of our missionaries to reach the scene of their labors. Five hundred miles was to be traveled in sedan chairs. Mr. Ogden expected to reach Batang about the first of October.

C. R. Scoville goes to Benton Harbor.

Chas. Reign Scoville is to hold a union meeting at Benton Harbor, Mich., as soon as he is through with the meeting at Pueblo, Colo. All the churches will co-operate.

Sermons on Protestantism.

A. G. Smith, the pastor at Enid, Oklahoma, is announcing a series of sermons on the fundamental things of protestantism. The first sermon will be "Human Authority in Religion, or Was Peter a Pope." Later sermons will be "The Bible of Protestants" "Divisions in the Church, its Cause and Cure."

Johnson City Church has Great Increase.

J. N. Jessup has been pastor at Johnson City, Tenn., for only a year but the annual meeting recently revealed great progress in the work there. There have been 152 new members added to the church during this year, 87 of them by confession of faith. The pastor conducted 17 funerals and 10 weddings. He made 18 addresses outside his regular pulpit work. There is the greatest enthusiasm in the church for their pastor and the happy relationship is to go right on. In his annual address the pastor said, "In the adjusting process you have had to do most of the adjusting. It could hardly have been expected that I, after having been established so long in one place, could readily adjust myself to a new situation and a new people. I was not accustomed to the adjusting business. You were more accustomed to the adjusting business than I was. In the fifteen years that I was in Little Rock you probably had eight or nine different preachers. You had grown accustomed to it, therefore the larger part of the adjusting, the larger part of the accommodating, rested upon you. This, from my standpoint. I think you have done your part of the adjusting more than fairly well."

Prosperity at Somerset, Pa.

S. G. Buckner is beginning a third year of ministry at Somerset, Pa. The church took in 60 new members last year and now has a membership of 575. Seven thousand dollars has been raised during the year to apply on the church debt. The property cost $71,000 and is still encumbered with a debt of seven thousand. This church has assisted in the organization of a new church at Central City. The church is 98 years old, and is strong and united. Cloyd Goodnight recently addressed the Brotherhood Class.

Rev. S. G. Buckner.

H. J. Loken Returns Home.

H. J. Loken, after attending the Atlanta Convention, went to Claremont, N. H., to visit his family which he had not seen since he left Norway 24 years ago. All his brothers and sisters were there including some he had never seen. On Oct. 30, he lunched with a number of Chicago ministers and teachers at the Quadrangle Club of the University of Chicago. On the morning of Nov. 1, he preached in the Linwood Boulevard Church at Kansas City and in the evening at the Independence, Mo., church, where H. K. Pendleton is pastor. Following these appointments, he will set out on his long trip across the continent for his home at Berkeley, Calif.

Woman Pastor Resigns.

Helen Dangerfield has been known in Colorado for the many Christian acts of her ministry. She has evangelized through many pioneer sections of the state but in recent years has been pastor at Greeley. She took up a homestead some years ago. Eighteen months ago, she was married to Mr. A. Boast. Under Colorado law, she lost her homestead on account of Mr. Boast being a British subject. Special legislation in the Colorado legislature has remedied this injustice and made any similar happening impossible in the future. Mrs. Boast will devote herself to domestic life henceforth. Her departure from the public ministry of the word is regretted by a large number of people in her section of the state.

Men's Bible Classes at Winchester, Ky.

The Men's Bible classes from several counties that are related to our churches are planning to go to Winchester, Ky., in a body on a Sunday soon, and hold a great rally there. Instead of having one big speech, conferences will be held and general participation on the part of the men will be encouraged.

Grant K. Lewis Talks State Missions.

Many of the state missionary societies are now related to the American Christian Missionary Society. Grant K. Lewis, the able secretary of the latter organization, has a new and forceful argument for state missions. He says: "More than most men realize the 'frontiers of our faith' in the Homeland are being removed from 'out on the rim' to 'the hub of the wheel.' The tasks that today call for the highest wisdom, the freest flow of life, and the largest contribution of money are wherever multitudes crowd big cities and not out on the wide, open prairies, nor even in the new towns and fast forming settlements of the great West, important as these are. The transformation of our own numerous small, pastorless, leaderless and listless churches of the so-called 'strong states,' into live, active, efficient congregations, serving well their own communities and co-operating with others in the task of the world's redemption, is the most serious problem of the Disciples of Christ today and until this is accomplished our whole forward movement halts. Every State Board is right up against the problems of the rural church, community service, Bible-school efficiency and enlargement, village and small town co-operation, evangelism, mixed multitudes, immigrants, the estranged laboring class, etc., etc. These are all topics of study, prayer, preachment and practice. Let State Missions receive attention."

Pastorless Church Will Build.

Although the church at Albuquerque, New Mexico, is without a pastor, H. P. Williams, having left the field there, they are planning to build in the near future. They have a lot with an adobe builing which will be raised in order to make room for a fine brick structure. The new building will probably be of mission style. The church is only ten years old but already has enrolled two hundred members.

Pastor Would be Mayor.

Harley Jackson, who was formerly of Columbus, Ind., but more recently of Pullman, Wash., has announced his candidacy for the Mayor's chair at Pullman. The number of our ministers who are now political figures is quite significant.

Fairmount Church Plans New Building.

The church at Fairmount, W. Va., called Clarence D. Mitchell, of Lima, Ohio, recently and there are already plans afloat for a new building. The old building was condemned on account of the giving away of the foundation. The new building will be erected on a new lot.

Clinton, Ill., Builds Parsonage.

The church at Clinton, Ill., has erected a very comfortable and commodious parsonage which was dedicated on October 26. The pastor of the Universalist Church, Rev. Arthur W. McDavitt, spoke at the dedication. The three hundred dollars necessary to complete paying for the new building was raised Moving Pictures of the Church Boys.

The Linwood Boulevard Church of Kansas City, Burris A. Jenkins, pastor, sent their boys away to a summer camp last summer, at Elk Springs, Mo. While the boys were in their summer camp, moving pictures were taken of their activities. On a recent evening the boys and their friends were invited to the church where they saw the reproduction of the pictures. This church has a number of very interesting activities for boys.

Kenney, Ill., Church Lays Cornerstone.

There is to be a new church at Kenney, Ill., and the cornerstone for this structure was laid on Oct. 18th. The contract for the building has been let to the firm of Snyder and Snyder at Mt. Pulaski, Ill.

Tells of Worst Boy in Town.

A. W. Connor has been holding a series of meetings in the various churches in Corydon, Ind., in the interest of the boy. On one evening he spoke on "Rex Wonec, the Worst Boy in Town." Mr. Connor enters sympathetically into the boy life of the different periods and often organizes them in helpful union societies under adult direction.

Preaches Decision Sermons.

The East End Church of Pittsburg is announcing a series of meetings extending over two weeks, and beginning Nov. 1, in which the pastor will preach upon the great decisions of the Bible. Some of the characters which are interpreted from this point of view are Joshua, Isaiah, Mary, Matthew, Woman of Samaria, The Rich Young Ruler, and Ruth. Although all the meetings are open every evening to everyone, there will be special services for men, women, boys and girls. The announcement specially emphasizes the program of holding quiet, dignified and spiritual services.

Minister Uses Motorcycle.

H. G. Knowles, pastor at North Platte, Neb., finds the motorcycle a very useful means of transportation in his pastoral work. He has an afternoon appointment at Sunderland, twenty miles distant, and he reports that he has missed only three appointments since the first of the year, having traveled over three thousand miles to meet these appointments. It is a new way of co-ordinating distant points in the work of the rural church.

David Shields a Busy Man.

David Shields at Kokomo, Ind., has many irons in the fire this fall. It is proposed to make changes in the church building and to redecorate the edifice at an expense of seven thousand dollars. Mr. Shields will hold his own evangelistic meeting, with W. E. M. Hackleman to help with the singing. This meeting will begin Nov. 1. The church will conduct the every-member canvass in December.

Chest of Joash Now in Oregon.

The church at Forest Grove, Ore., will put in place the "chest of Joash" at a Sunday service soon into which will be cast the money to wipe out the church debt. This enterprise is in charge of the pastor, J. Francis Ashley. On the same day, a former pastor, Peter Burnett, will be present and preach. The church will serve dinner in the building at noon and the people will remain all day. The debt raising campaign is to be followed by an evangelistic meeting by the pastor.

Nelson Trimble Phones Sermon Up Salt River.

The members of the Salt River Church, Mo., took down their receivers on a recent evening and listened to an evangelistic sermon by Nelson Trimble, preached at Gant, Mo. The roads were impassable with mud and the people were not able to attend the ten-day meeting that was in progress, in sufficient numbers to satisfy the evangelist. It is not stated whether any responded to the invitation.

New Building for Walnut Grove Church.

The Walnut Grove Church in Cooper County, Mo., Nelson Trimble, pastor, laid the cornerstone for a seven thousand dollar building recently. The church is ten miles from a railroad. One device for raising money was to include the name of a donor on a document in the cornerstone if he purchased a cornerstone certificate at one dollar. Three hundred dollars was raised in this way.

Church Banquets L. O. Bricker.

The First Church, Atlanta, Ga., did not finish its hospitality when it bade farewell to the national convention. The hospitality committee which had entertained the convention in gracious southern style, arranged a banquet to their pastor, L. O. Bricker, at which four hundred guests were present. The churches at West End, East Point and College Park, participated. At the banquet, a portrait of the organizer of the First Christian Church, Francis P. Perdue, was unveiled by his granddaughter. During the evening a purse of gold was presented the pastor by the church, A. R. Moore making the presentation speech.

W. G. Cox Passes Away.

W. G. Cox, a retired minister of the Disciples, aged 78 years, died of pneumonia following a brief illness on Oct. 23. He was at the home of his son-in-law at the time of the passing. He was formerly pastor of the Middletown Church and had had previous charges in various sections of Kentucky.

Religious Education at Gary.

Christian Century readers are already aware of the appointment of Myron C. Settle to help work out a program to co-ordinate religious education with the public schools at Gary, Ind. A recent announcement from that field is concerning the opening of an interdenominational church for the children of the Froebel School at the Neighborhood House, at Seventeenth and Adams Streets. The school will be superintended by Rev. Thomas Owens, superintendent of the Neighborhood House, and will have for teachers Rev. Farrington, religious teacher of the First Methodist Church; Mr. Settle and Miss McLaughlin, an interdenominational worker, who recently came from the Christian Training School of Chicago.

Pastor Becomes Evangelist.

H. James Crockett was for three and a half years pastor at El Dorado, Kans., but closed his work there last summer. He has supplied a month in Minneapolis and is now in a meeting at Belmont, Kans. He has one more open date for a meeting in 1914.

W. E. M. Hackleman Helps.

W. E. M. Hackleman is to help the pastor at Kokomo in a meeting soon. After this engagement, he goes to Valdosta, Ga., to be with Allen Wilson in a meeting. He is open for some 1915 engagements.

Rededication at Hartford.

The church at Hartford, Ind., was rededicated on Oct. 18. A number of improvements have been made in the building. The pastor, G. D. Wyatt, spoke morning and evening but in the afternoon F. E. Smith of Muncie, Ind., was present, and spoke on the theme "Honoring God's House." The people brought lunches which were spread in the basement, and stayed all day. Almost enough money was raised to pay off the indebtedness.

Frank James to Serve Bible Schools.

Frank James has resigned the pastorate at the Third Church of Little Rock, Ark., to take effect Nov. 10. He has accepted the position of field secretary for the Bible-schools in Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Mississippi. Mr. James will establish headquarters in Atlanta, Ga. During his pastorate at Little Rock, he has liquidated a debt of two thousand dollars, and 55 new members have been added to the church. He is a graduate of Drake University, class of 1913. During his university work he specialized in the field of religious education.

Thomas W. Grafton on New Constitution.

The issue in Indiana politics just now is a new constitution for the state. The churches are taking part in the discussion because of the social and ethical considerations involved. Thomas W. Grafton spoke on the subject at the Third Church, Indianapolis, on Oct. 25. Mr. Grafton presented the following reasons for a new constitution:

1. The nation moves on; a constitution which met the needs of our forefathers is foreign to the needs of human society today.
2. The commission form of government must succeed the bi-partisan rule of cities.
3. The liquor question should be submitted to a state-wide vote of the people.
4. Change of social conditions demands enfranchisement of women.

Church Organization Presents Theatricals.

The Athletic Association of the Central Church, Indianapolis, is preparing to put on its fifth annual dramatic entertainment. This year the selection will be "The Chimes of Normandy." A cast and a chorus numbering 55 people will take part. Some prominent music people of Indianapolis will assist in preparing for the evening. The entertainment will be given in English's theater on Nov. 21.

South Carolina Holds Convention.

The South Carolina State Convention was held at the church at Washington and Pickens Streets, Columbia, beginning Nov. 4th. A number of prominent workers from outside the state will be present, among them F. M. Rains, R. M. Hopkins, J. H. Mohorter, Mrs. Payne and J. B. Lehman.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Word has just been received at this office of the death of F. G. Dunn, editor of the "Australian Christian," at Melbourne. He was a wise man, clear headed, strong in the faith of the gospel, with a pure, beautiful life, and he will be greatly missed by the workers in that and other lands.

Miss Sylvia M. Siegfried, missionary of the Foreign Society in the Philippine Islands, who is now home on furlough, recently visited her brother in Augusta, Ga., in connection with her attendance upon the Atlanta Convention.

The highest divorce rate of any country is in Japan; the next highest is in the United States.

Dr. W. N. Lemmon, Manila, P. I., speaking of the recent visit of the Commission to the mission fields, says: "The Commission has come and gone and we all love them. They are God's people and we were loath to give them up. I believe their trip will save you thousands in the future. They see things as they are.

The missionaries are greatly pleased with the two new buildings at Takinogawa, Japan. The Japanese are also proud of them. Seven new students are entering the Bible College at Takinogawa. This makes nearly twenty in the institution this year. The prospects are brighter now than during the past ten years.

Miss Eleanor May Moon arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Moon at Bolenge, Africa, August 19, 1914.

A. F. Hensey, writing from Bolenge, August 26th says: "Here in the Congo we are living in strange days. Brussels is in the hands of the Germans, and, in this part of the Colony, at least, martial law has been proclaimed. No steamers are coming or going, so mail, supplies and money will become increasingly difficult. Fortunately, we have on hand a fair supply of provisions, so hope to get along somehow. Many workmen and school boys have had to be dismissed and perhaps quite a few evangelists will have to leave their villages for a time. There is no danger to the missionaries. The native population is quiet, and at least on the surface is loyal to Belgium. Still, this is bound to be a trying time, so will you not ask the churches to remember us even more often at the Throne of Grace?"

JESUS AND PILATE.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR NOV. 22.

Matt. 27:11-31; Luke 23:1-25.
Memory Verses, Matt. 27:22-23.

Golden Text.—Pilate saith unto them, What then shall I do unto Jesus who is called Christ? Mt. 27:22.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(11) Now Jesus stood before the governor and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest. (12) And when he was accused by the chief priests and elders he answered nothing. (13) Then saith Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? (14) And he gave him no answer, not even to one word: insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly. (15) Now at the feast the governor was wont to release unto the multitude one prisoner, whom they would. (16) And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas. (17) When therefore they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ? (18) For he knew that for envy they had delivered him up. (19) And while he was sitting on the judgment-seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that righteous man; for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.

(20) Now the chief priests and the elders persuaded the multitudes that they should ask for Barabbas, and destroy Jesus. (21) But the governor answered and said unto them, Which of the two will ye that I release unto you? And they said, Barabbas. (22) Pilate saith unto them, What then shall I do unto Jesus who is called Christ? They all say, Let him be crucified. (23) And he said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out exceedingly, saying, Let him be crucified. (24) So when Pilate saw that he prevailed nothing, but rather that a tumult was arising, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this righteous man; see ye to it. (25) And all the people answered and said, His blood be on us, and on our children. (26) Then released he unto them Barabbas; but Jesus he scourged and delivered to be crucified.

Verse By Verse.

(From Tarbell's Teachers' Guide.)

v. 11. Now. The record which has been interrupted by verses 3-10, is now resumed. —The governor. Pontius Pilate, Roman procurator or governor of Judea from 26 A. D. to 36 A. D.—Art thou the King of the Jews? Caiaphas had asked Jesus if he were the Christ and to that Jesus had answered, Yes. The charge which the Jews preferred against Him to Pilate had evidently been that He claimed, not to be the Christ, for such a claim would not have troubled a Roman, but that he claimed to be the King of the Jews.—Thou sayest. I am. But he added, My Kingdom is not of this world. 18:36. Read also Jn. 18:36-38. Christ a king, Lk. 23:2.

v. 12. When he was accused by the chief priests and eldars. They accused him of perverting the nation, of forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, and of professing to be Christ a king, Lk.23:2.

v. 15. At the feast. The Passover.

v. 16. They. The multitude, verse 15.—Notable. One well known to the populace. He was a robber, Jn. 18:40; the leader of an insurrection and a murderer, Mk. 15:7.

v. 17. Pilate said unto them. See Luke 23:13-17.—For he knew that for envy they had delivered him up. He knew that the motive which actuated the chief priests and scribes was envy; the people would not be influenced by such a motive, and he expected the latter to ask for Jesus' release.

v. 19. His wife. Her name was Claudia Procula, according to tradition. In the Greek Church she is canonized.

v. 20. The chief priests and the elders persuaded the people. They knew how fickle were the people, and they had used the intervening time in getting control over them.

v. 23. Why, what evil hath he done? Pilate did not want to condemn an innocent man, but he wanted still less to incur the displeasure of the people.—Let him be crucified. Disappointed enthusiasm is dangerously near to hate. When the men who had hailed Jesus as Christ the King saw that he did no miracle, but quietly submitted to indignities, capture, mockery, they felt like men who had been deceived into acts of undeserved honor, and turning against him revengefully they broke into the cry, "Crucify him!" (Fairbairn).

v.23. Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him, Lk. 23:22.—They cried out exceedingly. "All the corrupt world buffet him: hierarchical, in the malice of the priests; monarchical, in the vacillations of Pilate; military, in the buffetings of the soldiers; and democratic, in the howlings of the mob."

v. 24. When Pilate saw that he prevailed nothing. The final cry which overcame his reluctance was the reminder of his own interests, "If thou release this man, thou art not Cæsar's friend: every man that maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar," Jn. 19:12.—He took water and washed his hands. A symbolical act, recalling the law of Deuteronomy 21:6-7.

v. 25-26. His blood be on us, and on our children. In their blind fury they care not who bears the consequence, if only Jesus be put to death. Compare Acts 5:28. —Scourged. A barbarous Roman practice.

Modern Pilates

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

The heart of this lesson is touched when we speak of one who lacks the courage of his convictions. Pilate was satisfied that Jesus was guiltless, he was convinced that his official duty consisted in pardoning him, and yet for fear of losing his position he allowed Jesus to die.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

FEAR OF THE CROWD.

Do you dare to do an unpopular thing? That lad who went away to school and who on the first night in the dormitory dared to get down on his knees and say his prayers when no other boy got down, possessed rare moral courage. A father spoke to me recently about the moral stress which is upon young people of high-school age in this time. Moral courage of the highest type is demanded in order that one be not swept off his feet. Muensterberg has written a wonderful essay on "Sex" in his new book called "Psychology and Social Sanity." In that chapter he shows that only one course can guarantee safety to young people and that consists in building up self-control. It is not enough to know what is right and what is wrong. There is no greater fallacy than that which teaches that because a boy knows what is right he will do it; or that because he knows what is dangerous he will avoid it. It is all very well to remove saloons but it is an even better thing to establish self-control. It will be a long, long time before this old world has had all the temptations taken out of it. Children must be brought up to resist and to overcome. Temper and appetite must be mastered first of all. Discipline must be established. Smoking, drinking, impurities are crowd-evils and must be overcome by self-control.

FEAR OF YOUR JOB.

Not only did Pilate fear the crowd but when they cried "You are not Caesar's friend" the rapier touched the heart. And yet we must not be too hot in our haste to decry poor Pilate. Hillis in his elegant essay on Ruskin speaks of how, in the cathedrals of the old world, Ruskin discovered the effects of the lie. A lying workman had put lying tiles on the roof, and a priceless Tintoretto had been ruined by the rains. Every lie built into a cathedral meant a great weakness and the ultimate ruination of something beautiful. Then Hillis speaks of the judicious lie of the historian, the sentimental lie of the friend, the corrupt lie of the politician. What shall we say of the cowardly lie of the preacher who having itching ears and itching palms plays to his rich auditors or to the sensation-loving galleries. Many a pitiable preacher minces the truth for fear of his bread and butter. It is a tragic fact. Let us hope that not very many are so fearful. What shall we say of the teacher whose quiet investigations lead him into truthful paths, but who, knowing that the trustees of his school would chop off his head if he taught the truth, gives way to soothing platitudes and mouths again the shibboleths. Poor, miserable coward. He murders truth to save his own worthless life even as Pilate murdered Jesus in order that he might avoid the condemnation of Caesar. Believe me, this is the lesson in real life! The lying merchant, the lying promoter, the lying physician, the lying attorney—I hand them all the same idea. Make the best of it.

WHO CRUCIFIED CHRIST?

In the gospel according to Oberammergau the two factors responsible for the murder of Jesus were the commercialism of the temple-traders and the religious bigotry of the high-churchmen. There you have it: love of money and sectarianism. Now what have we to say? Can we stand unconvicted here? In the Lawrence strike investigation it was learned that seventeen girl-mothers were getting $6.80 per week. They went to work early and left late and in the little interval at noon hurried home to press their tiny babies to their starving breasts. At that same time the manager to whom they appealed in vain, came home from a western city with a car load of well-fed, blooded dogs.

Now take a case on the other side: A mill owner ran his mill ten years without profit. Other owners said to him, "Why, you fool, why don't you close down, you are not making a cent?" But he answered, "Three thousand people have gathered about that mill. If I close down I will be taking the bread out of their mouths, therefore I will continue to run it although it earns not a penny of profit." Thus for ten lean years. Then came the fat years. His men struck and burned the mill to the ground and as the owner looked out of his east window and saw the red flames leaping to the sky he knelt and asked God to forgive them for they knew not what they were doing. And if we thus feel the force of commercialism what shall we say of bigotry? Nothing in the world injures the sacred cause of Christ today like the narrow sectarian spirit which still lives. Let the nerve of one of our favorite doctrines be touched, ever so gently, and we howl with frenzied pain. And thus is the gentle Saviour crucified anew and put to an open shame before the world of today.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 11.

The Power of Prayer. John 15:7; 14:13-14.

The last word of Pius X to his people was a call to prayer for the peace of the world. A President of the United States often begins his official life with a request for the prayers of the people that he may have wisdom to fulfill his task. The missionary in distant lands craves the prayers of his brethren. The subject of unity is not discussed until the guidance of heaven is sought. We could not name, if we tried, all the occasions of prayer. The religious man prays. The man who thinks he is irreligious is apt to cry out to God in the day of loss and agony.

PRAYER AND LIFE.

Prayer is a partial expression of the life. To say of a man that he prays leaves much of importance unsaid. Out of what sort of life do his petitions and thanksgivings come? Does he think of his devotions as vitally related to the rest of his experience or does he find them a means of relief from anxiety and worry in much the same way as others find a picture show a help in time of trouble? Prayer wheels and other mechanical aids to the worshiper are possible where the connection of prayer with life is imperfectly understood. When we turn to the subject of answers to prayer, we have also to consider the character of the man who seeks the favor of God. We dismiss at once the notion that God will hear the prayer of one who sets out to work injustice upon his neighbor. Many of the best Christians pronounce blasphemous the prayers of war lords for victory. They deny the legitimacy of the business in which these gentlemen are engaged. They are disposed to class promoters of war with common murderers.

THE TEST OF EXPERIENCE.

"It is not necessary that we should understand how prayer increases our zeal, our wisdom, our strength, our joy, or how it gives success to the cause, any more than that we should understand how our food is converted into flesh, and blood, and bones. It is only necessary that we eat; and it is only necessary that we pray as we are taught and commanded. Experience proves that the outward man is renewed day by day by our daily bread; and experience proves that the inward man is renewed day by day by prayer and thanksgiving."—Alexander Campbell.

PRAYER AND SOUND TEACHING.

We have great faith in the power of the teacher to change the world. If we want a reform, we go to the school teacher and ask her to train the children for the new order. The saloonkeeper knows what this method of procedure will do. We insist that the church rely upon its power of clear and forceful statement and we are re-enforcing the church school in order that religion may have its rightful place in the world. On the need of something more than form of sound doctrine, Alexander Campbell wrote: "Men may talk about religion, about sound doctrine, about ordinances, about institutions, about everything present and future; but without this communion with God, this habitual devotion of mind, these constant aspirations, ejaculations, and soarings to the throne of mercy and favor, man is unfit for heaven, and unworthy of the Christian profession. A zealot he may be, orthodox in doctrine, moral in demeanor; but he wants the life and power of Christianity. Meditation of what God has spoken to us, and the outpouring of our spirit to him, is to the moral man what free respiration in a pure atmosphere is to the physical man—life, health, vigor, beauty."

Neh. 4:9; Ps. 145:18; Eccl. 5:2; Matt. 6:5-6; 7:7-8; Lu. 11:13; Heb. 4:16; Jas. 5:16; John 9:31; Rom. 10:12-13; I John 5:14.

An Extraordinary Opportunity

Good Until November 10

The Christian Century has arranged with the leading magazines for a series of very special BARGAINS IN MAGAZINE SUBSCRIPTIONS, good for 30 days only. The volume of subscription business has grown enormously within the last few years. Most people like to subscribe in November and December. The congestion in attempting to handle almost a year's business in a month or two is a very serious problem. A remedy has suggested itself. Why not induce our readers to subscribe early, thus reducing complaints and avoiding the rush? It is worth something to accomplish this, and the following money-saving offers are the result. The thrifty will profit. The rest will keep us busy enough in December. Here are all the worth while magazines. Every club on this page will positively cost more this Fall. Buy now and save from 25 to 100%. This is your opportunity. Take advantage of it by sending your order TODAY.

Character Talks

By Frank Waller Allen, pastor of First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen.

SAYING PRAYERS AND PRAYING

There is an ancient and fishlike platitude which tells us that the Lord never gives a man a larger burden than he can bear; a greater sorrow than he can endure; a more alluring temptation than he can overcome, if he but wills to bear, to endure and conquer with Godly might. This might be true under an ideal social system; but it is not so today. Let us relieve God of the blame and say that men are going down every warm beat of the pulse under temptation too splendidly pleasing for them to endure; and sorrow this tick of the hour is killing her tens of thousands. And the cause and the cure is this: Too long we have made Jesus a myth for the mystic, an ecstacy for the emotionalist, and a walking dream for the abstractionist. The time is here to make Jesus a fact! Not alone a fact for the cloister, but a fact for the universal life of the world. If the leakage of his life and teaching have kept society from utterly rotting, what will the full voltage of his power be to the life of man? "Thy kingdom come . . . in earth" should be said less with the lips and prayed with ballots, bacon and backbone.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

THE CO-OPERATION COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

THE FIRST FRUITS.

A prompt response is being received to the first call of the Committee for the coöperation of all friends of The Christian Century. At this writing the coupons attached to this page are beginning to come in signed by ministers and teachers and business men, all sorts and conditions of men and women.

The past ten days have been good days for this great cause. One man makes his pledge read $20 per year for five years and encloses his check for the first installment. One subscription of $100 a year for five years, from a minister too, has been received, and another minister agrees to be responsible for $250 a year for five years. Two checks for $1,000 each have been received and some correspondence of a hopeful nature entered into.

The friends of this cause are evidently working. The Committee accepted its responsibilities with the firm faith that every loyal reader of the "Century" would coöperate, both by making a pledge and by enlisting others to give also. We have every reason so far to be encouraged.

RELIGIOUS JOURNALISM AS A MISSIONARY BENEVOLENCE.

The idea is an unfamiliar one. Is it a good idea? Especially is it a good idea to support by gifts a paper that conceives its mission as The Christian Century does? That depends upon whether one agrees with the "Century's" ideal for itself, and with its conviction regarding the present need among the Disciples.

The Christian Century believes that the Disciples' movement has been in danger of being side-tracked, and of ending in a self-satisfied, complacent denominationalism, instead of going on to accomplish its prophetic mission as the evangel of a completely united Church of Christ. It believes there are certain tendencies among the Disciples out of all accord with their most distinctive historic principles, and which if permitted to develop, would stultify the movement. With this conviction it would be false and recreant to its duty if it did not speak out upon these matters, and seek to remind the Disciples of those principles of Christian liberty, and of catholicity which have ever dominated the consciousness of our people.

Brother minister, teacher, or whoever you may be! Do you want a spirit of fear and intellectual squeamishness to creep over our virile-minded and aggressive young movement? Do you want the current reformation to become a stagnant pool in which only micro-organisms can successfully breed, or would you rather see it go on as a majestic river widening to the sea? Do you want us to become afraid of our own shadow and hide ourselves from truth and fact? Do you want the scripture injunction to self-examination ignored so far as our collective life is concerned?. If not, then you must believe in an open and fearless journalism among the Disciples. Bitterness and unlovely strife we do not want, and if The Christian Century were guilty of it, this committee would not undertake to conduct the present campaign upon its behalf. But investigation, discussion and the circulation of ideas we must have. Our health and efficiency as a religious people depend upon it. "Where there is no vision the people perish," and where there is a bound and gagged press there will be little vision in a Democracy such as ours.

In this conviction the Co-operation Committee solicits support for The Christian Century. We believe a great many Disciples want such a live and independent journal. We believe they would like to help free the paper from its material limitations in order that it may do a larger work along the lines in which it believes. If The Christian Century holds erroneous views concerning Christian life and faith, its policy of open discussion will do more than all else to disclose its errors and thus eradicate them. Truth only can profit by unveiling.

We request communications regarding this effort to place our journalism among our missionary benevolences and take it out of the field of commercialism. Write us your ideas whether they are for or against the proposal. If you are in accord with us send us your pledges as indicated below. Upon this five year basis there should be hundreds of men and women willing to unite in a fellowship of ideal service such as we propose.

DO IT NOW!

Do not delay sending in your pledge. We have made a good beginning. It is only a beginning. The services rendered to the Disciples of Christ in the past by The Christian Century entitle it to our loyal support. But the enormously increased service it can render the cause in the future makes its support by all friends of progress a matter of real conscience.

To the Co-operation Committee
of The Christian Century,
700 E. 40th Street, Chicago.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Bewildered Church and the New Hunger for the Spiritual

THE MODERN CHURCH IS CONSCIOUS OF NOT BEING READY TO INTERPRET AND SATISFY THE NEW HUNGER OF MANKIND FOR THE SPIRITUAL.

It is not strange that it is not ready. The Church has engaged itself in many interests which are but incidental to its spiritual mission, or quite unrelated to it, and which, indeed, have tended to displace its essential spiritual purpose by purposes and aims that were not essentially spiritual.

Rome seeking after and attaining secular political power is a classic historical example. A Church in whose consciousness secular political ambition can find lodgment thereby confesses its desertion or subversion of its spiritual function. It may continue to exercise sway over men's souls but its spiritual power is repressive and formal.

The Protestant Church also, not less than the Roman, has drained off spiritual passion into non-spiritual channels.

The flood of new spiritual life, upon whose crest Martin Luther rode, got drained off into theological creeds and ritualistic norms and denominational institutions, all of which centered upon themselves the interest that rightfully belonged to religion itself. Religion became abstractly intellectual, or formal, or clannish.

That there was much true spiritual life in creed loyalty and ritualistic scrupulousness and in denominational pride, it would be foolish to deny. But the deep hunger of the soul of man for fellowship with the Eternal could not find satisfaction in a religion dominated by interests such as these.

In our day, happily, these interests are growing less and less dominant. Theological systems are changing or being cast aside. They are seen to be necessarily temporary and tentative, and never final. Ritualistic distinctions do not go deep into the conscience of modern churchmen. Denominational exclusiveness and pride are giving way before the ideals of Christian unity and the brotherhood of man.

But with the abandonment of these old interests the Church is left pathetically helpless as an interpreter of God. It has no clear-cut sense of its mission any longer. Its message lacks substance and character. So long as men believed that God's great concern with them was that they should know and cherish sound theological doctrine, or observe correctly certain forms, or promote the interests of a particular sect, the Church's message on these things had positiveness, clearness, urgency and substance.

But neither the world nor the Church itself any longer believes that these interests are in the foreground of God's purposes with men. Yet the Church has not reached any clear conviction of what is in the foreground of God's purposes.

Hence we observe today a floundering Church, a weak and hesitant and vacillating Church, a leaderless Church, a Church responsive to superficial and false leadership, a Church pricking up its ears to every call: "Lo here!" or "Lo there!", a Church trying out experiments, a Church apologizing for its existence, a Church earnestly trying to justify its existence by doing everything under heaven except the one unique thing that gives it the right to be.

This spiritual leanness of the modern Church is clearly revealed by a cross-section view of its conventional procedure in actual practice.

We may begin with the local congregation, and inquire, What are the motives usually appealed to to induce people to become members of the Church? Anyone who has observed actual practice analytically will agree that the plain human desire for friendly fellowship is the most pronounced motive. Men and women are brought into the Church and kept in the Church on much the same principle that they are brought into lodges and other social organizations, that is, by the attraction of the social group.

Except in the case of those converted from some crass form of vice—those altogether without caste in the community—the consciousness of the adoption of a new inner principle of living is pale and shallow and negligible. The vast majority of our Protestant Church members have no spiritual life of their own below the conventional level of a good-natured disposition to be kind and helpful to others and to support the Church's institutions.

Our Church members are not to blame for this, for our pastors and teachers are, with one accord, telling us that there is nothing to religion except what one finds on this level of a good-natured disposition for social fellowship. Hence the local church's prosperity depends upon the cleverness of its leaders and its pastor in inventing devices for attracting people into the social organization, holding their loyalty and stimulating the organizational machinery with more or less substantial tasks.

This conception of the function of our Church life and of the character of religion explains the vast scale on which the churches have embarked in the restauranting business, the commercial activities of its consecrated women's societies, the universal demand for callow youthful pastors with more personal magnetism than spiritual experience and wisdom, the prevalence of "contests," the aversion to the prayer-meeting, the limitlessly wide range of the subject-matter of sermons, the moving-picture substitute for a gospel message, the inexorable demand for "entertainment" in connection with worship, that despicable thing called a "welcome committee," the coarsening of the gospel message with pathetic ministerial buffoonery, the irrational craze for numbers in the Sunday-school, the over-organized condition of most congregations, the men's smokers and the women's bazaars and the young people's musicales and so on and so on.

The modern Church is top-heavy with a non-spiritual institutionalism. The inner life of the soul goes unregarded while the leaders keep on talking about increasing the efficiency of the organization.

Probably the best illustration of the weakness of the spiritual life of the modern Church is found in its evangelism. Evangelism in recent times has developed into a craft by itself. Many congregations have no provision for "making converts" in their normal church activities, and so periodically import a professional craftsman who possesses the art of moving men in large masses.

The evangelist does not move men because he has a more vital truth to teach than has the local pastor, nor because he can convey the truth more clearly, nor yet because he has a richer spiritual life of his own to impart—no one would claim priority for the evangelist in any of these points.

The distinctive gift of the evangelist is the art of manipulating the stimuli of a mass situation—either the immediate congregation or the whole community itself—so as to induce action on the part of the individuals implicit in that situation. The evangelist gets results. He gets tremendous results. He adds hundreds and thousands to the churches and hundreds and thousands of them "stick."

But his art is a non-spiritual art. It may be legitimate enough at auctions, in political campaigns and even in campaigns for social righteousness, but its effect when employed by the Church in dealing with the soul is to deplete and degrade spiritual life.

True spiritual life proceeds from the individual to the social group not from the group to the individual. Its fountain and perennial source is the soul itself. Any reversal of this order, even though it may galvanize the institution, deceives and benumbs the soul.

For the truly spiritual is a well of living water opened up within the soul and springing up into Eternal Life.

America's Torch-Bearing in Asia

Commencement Address at St. John's University, Shanghai, China, Founded in 1879.

BY CHARLES SUMNER LOBINGIER.

ONE of the facts which most impresses a new-comer to China, like myself, is the preponderance of American influence in the awakening of this vast nation. Within the immediate vicinity of Shanghai alone there are several institutions of higher learning which, like St. John's University, have been founded and conducted under American auspices. A little to the west in this same province is Soochow University maintained by the southern Methodist Church of America, and a little farther still, but yet in Kiangsu, is Nanking University, interdenominational, but under American leadership. A few weeks ago it was my privilege to make the ascent of Taishan, the world's oldest sacred mountain, and at its base I found a flourishing secondary school supported by the Northern Methodist Church of the United States. And these, I learn, are instances that might be duplicated almost anywhere among the eighteen provinces of the old Middle Kingdom.

CHINESE STUDENTS IN AMERICA.

But America's educational influence in China is not limited to the teaching forces actually at work here, potent and far reaching as they are. For the universities of the homeland have long been attracting the sons of China to their doors. It is now almost forty years since Yung Wing, the pioneer Chinese student in America, graduated at Harvard. Meanwhile the number of such students has grown steadily until today it has reached one thousand. And the results of this movement are everywhere apparent. Only last month I visited Pei-Yang University near Tientsin, where I found as president Mr. Chao, a Chinese graduate ("summa cum laude") of Harvard, working harmoniously with a faculty largely American, but including other Chinese who had studied in America. At the recent annual dinner of the American University Club of Shanghai a very considerable number of those present were Chinese graduates of American institutions and their enthusiasm for alma mater was not less pronounced than that of the American members. I was informed in Peking that the dinner of the Corresponding Club there was the occasion for a similar manifestation.

These facts are apparent to any visitor in China. What is not so obvious is that this American educational effort in China is part of a national undertaking which began long ago and now well nigh encircles the vast continent of Asia.

EARLY INTEREST IN EDUCATION.

The early settlers of America, especially of New England, were believers in higher education. Within eighteen years after the landing at Plymouth Rock, the beginnings of a great university were made by John Harvard, a graduate of old Cambridge. New England was indeed the schoolmaster of the nation during at least its early years. It is related of John Randolph of Roanoke, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, that while standing with a fellow congressman from Connecticut on the steps of the Capitol at Washington, a drove of mules passed by on their way southward. "Some of your constituents?" remarked Randolph, who was something of a wag. "Yes," replied the Connecticut man, "going to Virginia to be schoolmasters."

The same New England which furnished schoolmasters for the South and West soon sent missionaries (as well as traders) to more distant lands; and the opening of the nineteenth century saw the humble beginnings of American influence in the Pacific. In 1800 Captain Gray, of the good ship "Columbia," discovered and named the great river of the Northwest and his was the first American craft to circumnavigate the globe. Then came the earliest missionaries to Burmah and in 1820 Hiram Bingham, the Apostle of Hawaii, began his labors with his fellow missionaries, who founded America's first educational outpost. Oahu College, established primarily for the children of missionaries, was frequented by the sons of California pioneers, for it was their nearest school, and today amid changed conditions and under a new name (Punahou Academy) it is doing a great share toward assimilating Hawaii's polyglot population.

Judge Charles S. Lobingier, of the United States Court for China.

AMERICA IN THE LEVANT.

So through the first half of the century the American missionary movement spread westward, gaining a foothold in China and Japan, and laying the foundations of those educational enterprises which have grown to such proportions in our own day.

But subsequently a corresponding effort began on the opposite side of this mighty continent. In 1863, an American merchant, Mr. Robert, endowed the college at Constantinople which bears his name. Technically, this is in Europe, but it stands on the shores of the Bosphorus, just across from Asia and Asiatics have been among its chief beneficiaries. Here have been educated for a half a century youth of the oppressed Christian races of Turkey. From here gleamed the first rays of light to penetrate the darkness of Turkish despotism. Is it not significant that General Savoff, the efficient Bulgarian leader in the recent war of liberation, was once a student at Robert College? Who can estimate the consequences to the Balkan peoples and to the world of this educational enterprise undertaken so modestly by an American citizen half a century ago?

SYRIAN PROTESTANT COLLEGE.

At Beirut in Syria, is another institution, the Syrian Protestant College, founded in 1866 under the auspices of the American Presbyterian Church. Here, almost at the base of Mt. Lebanon, amid the historic associations of many millenniums, and close to lands held sacred by the whole western world, stands an institution which, year by year, has given hope and inspiration to the unfortunate Arabic-speaking subjects of the Sultan. Anyone who has come in contact with its alumni must have been impressed with its far reaching influence.

In 1871 a mission school for girls was established under American auspices at Scutari, the Asiatic suburb of Constantinople. Within a score of years it grew into a college and now under the presidency of a noble American woman, Mary Mills Patrick, it is about to occupy its new home in Constantinople itself on the heights above the Bosphorus. And it is probably no exaggeration to say that whatever of enlightenment and progress has, in our day, come to the women of Turkey, Moslem as well as Christian, has emanated from Constantinople College.

INDIA AND THE PHILIPPINES.

Time will permit no more than a passing mention of American missionary schools and colleges in British India. But a little farther to the East, in the Philippine Islands, the United States government itself has undertaken an educational enterprise on a gigantic scale. Here the program, as officially announced, is not less ambitious than "to make the Philippines literate in English and to give them the elements, at least, of industrial training." For nearly fourteen years this enterprise has been in progress and about a half a million Philippine children are enrolled in public schools under American direction, but supported from Philippine revenues. Practically every native barrio or village has its primary school; every town of importance a secondary school; every province its high school; and at the apex of the pyramid stands the new and growing University of the Philippines to whose agricultural department, I am glad to hear, this institution has already furnished students.

WHAT OF THE RESULTS?

Thus the American educational effort —private, denominational, or governmental—has well-nigh surrounded the Asiatic continent. What of its results, present or prospective? Doubtless it has contributed much to the spread of the English language, already the "lingua franca" of the Far East and bidding fair to become the alternative tongue of more than one Oriental people. In the Philippines, where it relieves a babel of tongues and supplies a common language, the sole medium of instruction in all the government schools is English, and one hears it among the children even in the remotest districts. At the Commencement of Constantinople College one year ago this month a prize for English composition was awarded to a young Turkish girl whose poetic genius found ample expression in that language.

And along with the spread of English has come the diffusion of those ideas of democracy and liberty of which the English language and literature afford the most complete vehicle. Thus we may account, in part at least, for the political renaissance in the Balkans; for the struggles, blind and misdirected though they be, of enfeebled Persia toward freer institutions; and finally for the movement which overthrew the dragon throne of China.

And may we not hope and believe that these intellectual and political changes have been accompanied by a moral and spiritual awakening and that the prime object of the thousands of American men and women who have consecrated their lives to the uplift of Asia has not been unattained? For mere learning, without character, is dangerous, and a government lacking a moral basis rests upon sand. "Make it your aim to wish for moral well-being," said China's lawgiver and sage when asked what should be done in order to conduct the government of a country.

AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY.

Along with other nationalities Americans naturally hope for a larger share in the trade of China and are sometimes impatient that the increase is not more rapid. But there is high authority for seeking first the things of the kingdom of God and an assurance that material things will be added later. If it is the good fortune of my country to be the teacher of Asia, I do not fear that its commerce will flow entirely or chiefly in other channels. And is it not a higher honor to enlighten a people than to conquer it or even to supply its imports?

Nor should we suppose that Asia is the sole beneficiary of America's educational undertaking.

"Teaching we learn
And giving we receive."

And no nation can contribute so largely to the uplift of another without feeling the reacting impulse of lofty endeavor.

We are gathered today in a corner of Asia, the cradle of mankind, the source of all existing religions, the original home of letters—for the cadmus of ancient Hellas was but another name for the East. All the stories and legends represent the Wise Men as coming from the East and an English writer said that the farther he went West the surer he was that the Wise Men must have come from the East. So the motto of America's fraternity of scholars the Phi Beta Kappa, is "ex Oriente lux!"

REKINDLING THE FIRES.

But this institution though in the East is not of it, but is rather a link in a chain which has encircled the globe. The fires of learning which burned so brightly in ancient Asia were later extinguished or at least became dim and smoldering. But the torch of learning there lighted has been passed on. Asia hands it to Greece, Greece to Rome, Rome to Britain, Britain to America; and America brings it once more to Asia there to rekindle the fires at the ancient shrines of culture.

Mechanism Versus Message

BY WM. BAYARD CRAIG.

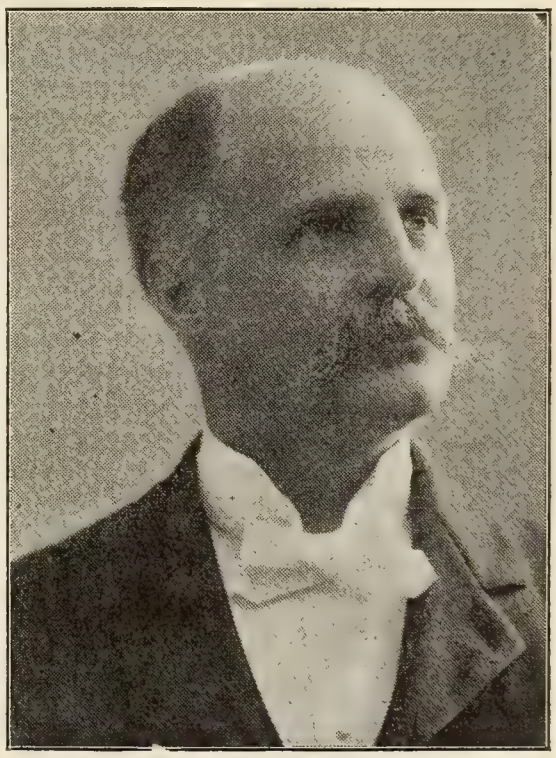
The following article came to our desk immediately following the Editor's review of the Berkeley questionnaire, but a page of the manuscript was missing and the whole had to be returned to the author for this missing page. Hence its opening allusion is somewhat belated, but the principle discussed is very timely. Dr. Craig's entire ministry, while extraordinarily fruitful in practical results especially in the building of beautiful church edifices, has been pre-eminently characterized by its high ethical and spiritual emphasis.

I AM CONFIDENT the readers of The Christian Century were greatly pleased with the masterly summing up of the "Questionnaire" on the Berkeley matter. It is fine. There is a natural suspicion that a paper starts a thing like that as a flare-light-advertising scheme rather than a truth-promoting enterprise. You have convinced us to the contrary. The treatment of the principle involved is wise, patient, and sweet, just the kind of thing we ought to find in a "constructive" journal. How much happier all would be if we could discuss differences of opinion in the Christian spirit of love and forbearance, keeping out the spirit of devilish hate and medieval proscription. Christian people must learn to do that or remain narrow and provincial. I am writing without reference to the merits of the Berkeley case one way or the other.

Some of our people are making a mistake, but the mistake is so human, so common and widespread, so inevitable and incurable by any other process than education and development, that it can be discussed without heat or offensive censure. It is foolish to spend our strength in contending for the integrity of church machinery while we lose sight of the purpose for which the church is organized. It is foolish to plead for Christian union in a very winsome way, but when a demand for some practical step toward union comes up do nothing for fear we will hurt the machinery. It is worse than foolish to abuse the fellow who tries to fix the machinery so it will meet the emergency..

CHURCH ORGANIZATION IS MACHINERY.

Church organization is sacred, is divine, but after all, it is only a piece of machinery constructed to accomplish a purpose. The end of the whole business is to make loving Christians with a pure heart, a good conscience and sincere faith. It was never intended to engender hate and light the fires of the Inquisition among brethren.



Rev. William Bayard Craig, D.D.

Thomas Campbell and his associates were so full of the seventeenth chapter of John and a fraternal longing for some form of practical Christian union, that they were in little danger of permitting their simple form of organization to usurp the chief place in their affections. They had no disposition to antagonize or proscribe those who had not reached their conclusions in regard to baptism, for instance. They had a fresh and vivid memory of their own experience in regard to that. It was later, when numbers increased, when organization was more complete, when the characteristics and "esprit du corps" of a denomination developed, that the splendid vision of the founders gave way to zeal for machinery and methods of work, and the bloodhounds were loosened to track down the heretic. This later stage is but a passing phase of our history. We will later see that the arch heresy is the lack of love and unwillingness to fraternize with all who love our Lord in sincerity and truth. Many have attained in our day the spirit of Thomas Campbell and the number will increase among us.

We make the mistake of ecclesiastical organizations all through the centuries. They become so devoted to their church and to the maintenance of the integrity of creed, ritual and order, that they miss the loving mission of the gospel to men in which the church is simply a tool to work with. The Roman Catholic Church is a great sinner in this way. That they may preserve, without fail, church machinery, canonical laws, established usage, they excommunicate Protestants, thus destroying the very purpose for which the Church exists, viz., the co-operation of all true lovers of Christ. They save their church and lose the big part they ought to have in the unity of the followers of Christ and the salvation of men.

A LESSON FROM THE EPISCOPALIANS.

The Episcopal Church lives in practical isolation from Protestant Christians in America, because it is such a stickler for Episcopal ways of running the church machinery.

Methodists, Baptists and others may hold the Disciples up to scorn on account of the Berkeley incident, but they are themselves far from guiltless. They, too, often violate the law of Christian love and the true fellowship of the saints, in their denominational zeal for the protection of denominational interests.

The Disciples, doubtless, may justly be brought to the bar of Christ for offences against the law of Christian love and fellowship, but when the Master says, "let him that is without guilt cast the first stone" the accusers go out one by one; there is no church left to do execution.

Probably there is no present remedy for the undue adoration of the machinery of the church. The Jews made the same mistake in regard to the function of the Sabbath. They destroyed the real purpose of the Sabbath by their blind zeal.

VIOLATING THE LAW OF LOVE.

Take this for illustration. Our whole brotherhood ought to be proud of a man, say like H. L. Willett, a man of broad culture, lofty ideals, blameless life, a man of national reputation and wide influence; a lovable, highly gifted man, a lover of Christ and loyal to the Disciples in the face of all kinds of opportunities to work in other camps, and we would all be proud of him if some were not so afraid he may damage some of our cherished church furniture and fixtures. Do not miss the point because you may object to the illustration: a thousand other illustrations would do just as well. The point is that we violate the law of love among ourselves and in our relationship to other Christian people because the forms of church organization have gotten into the focus of faith and devotion, instead of the Christ love and purpose.

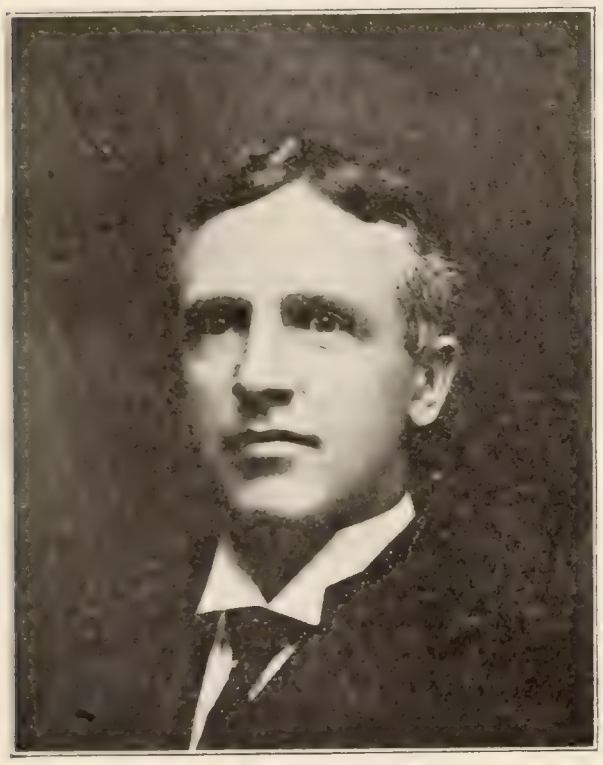
Deep conviction in religious life is of great importance. A good conscience is essential. The absolute Lordship and authority of Christ is in no wise to be compromised. The true Christian is always ready to say, "Lord, what would thou have me to do." These things are fundamental, and we can observe them to the letter and at the same time respect the convictions of the other Christian who differs in his conclusions in matters of Church government and orders and that is essential to any form of Christian union.

Church Builds for To-day's Need

Freemason Street Church, Norfolk, Va., Dedicates New Building to Religious Education and Social Service.

BY CHARLES M. WATSON.

ON OCTOBER 18 was dedicated our new Sunday-school building. About $25,000 was secured, only $16,000 having been asked for. Back of these pledges are net pledges already made of $41,297. These figures are mentioned chiefly to indicate that when the people see that a church is to be erected for business, they are glad to pay for it.



Rev. Charles M. Watson.

George L. Snively and the pastor conducted the services. The day closed with the confession of six young men.

This building, so far as we know, is a unique achievement. Almost two years ago the church decided to build. A questionnaire was sent all over the country to the leaders of all the communions asking what kind of a building is advisable in the light of present needs. From all sources came unanimous answers: that religious educational and social service ideals must prevail. The church sent a committee to visit buildings in Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania and North Carolina. Everywhere it was recognized that no building had been built by any church which answered the felt needs of the leaders of church life. The present structure is one of the pioneers in what will prove a new era in church building in this country.

THE KIND OF BUILDING NEEDED.

One must visit the building to properly understand how religious educational and social service ideals have been wrought into this answer to present-day needs. There are some twenty-nine class-rooms together with six rooms for secretarial purposes. These class rooms are so joined as to give either opportunity for segregation in the individual class or assembly for the department. In turn the segregation of the department can be turned by easy access to assembly for all or parts of the school as desired. This means that the Beginners' department, the Primary department, the Junior department, the Intermediate department boys and the Intermediate department girls have the facilities for carrying on special opening and closing exercises if such be desired, or of assembling with the school if such be called for. To have five or six and if need be more departments with individual class-rooms separated by sliding doors and so separated from the main school as to have the use of a piano without disturbing another department indicates the specialization possible, linking the building with the public schools in an endeavor to meet the educational needs of the growing boys and girls.

BUILT TO "DO SERVICE."

Now this does not mean that we have everything spick and span, fully accomplished in method and equipment, for all that answers the religious education of youth and the social needs of a community. We are rather like a young couple starting to housekeeping. There are many needs which will be supplied as we go. It does mean that as a congregation we have sincerely met a present-day need. It does mean that all over this building might be written: This building stands for honesty. When it was found that a room with a raised floor was not pedagogically correct, that floor came out and a level floor was put in. When the question came as to Brussels carpet or some such that was pretty, the matter was settled by the sensible and cork linoleum was put down. And so it went all through. Take the social hall in the basement. This is one of the points which will prove the building built to serve the community. The eleven-foot ceiling gives fine headway. The kitchen equipment is ideal. Or take it in the assembly room, with equipment for stereopticon and moving pictures. Or again in the mission study and teacher training room with the big open fireplace. These and other signs plainly tell of the sincere desire on the part of the congregation to erect a building not alone to hold services in but FOR SERVICE.

BUILD KINGDOM AROUND THE CHILD.

And so this congregation which for thirty-five years has worshiped on Freemason street turns to its new church home. The Freemason street property will be retained at least for the present. With so many needs coming in that section of the city out of which the church has been crowded, it is the earnest hope of the congregation that it will be able to carry on a down-town work. Will you answer this question: What would you do with this old structure on Freemason street if it were yours? Write the pastor of the church. The Sunday-school building on Colonial Avenue will be used as a house of worship until such a time as that can be added and the Trinity of Worship—devotion, education and social service—made complete. For the present the ideal of building the kingdom around the child and the ideal of that intimate neighborliness which embodies the truth, "Nothing human is alien to us"—these ideals will prevail. And because the heart throbs of our religious ideals have beat educational thoughts into our minds and sent tingling to our finger tips an eagerness to serve, we believe this sense of gripping the task set before us will enable us here to worship the God above us.

SOME POINTS OF EXCELLENCE.

In going over the building the other day the following points, some of which have already been mentioned, were noted. The building is built of tapestry brick. It covers an area of 68 by 98 feet. The area left for our future auditorium is 73½ by 90 feet. Cork linoleum (battle ship linoleum) is used. The class-rooms are so arranged as to meet all the individual and departmental demands of the standard set by the International Sunday-school Association. Electric call bells back of the platform to each room of the building. Mezzanine rooms with gallery for assembly. Building wired throughout for vacuum cleaner. Mission study and teacher training room with open fireplace. Social hall in basement with eleven-foot ceiling and model kitchen. Provision for stereopticon and moving pictures. Sanitary fountains for drinking purposes. Indirect lighting. Wilson folding doors. Felt-lined holders for communion cups. Plenum system for heating—combination of direct and indirect heat with multivane fan. Provision for orchestra.

Mr. J. G. Holladay, Superintendent of Freemason Street School, Norfolk.

The building bears to mind the fact illustrated in the earnest testimony given by the Scotchman: "My Lord is not the same this year as last. He's bigger and grander than ever before." It reminds us that while there is a changeless Christ, there is also a changing Christ. All life tells the story; why not the church? God interpreted himself in the terms of life; this building comes seeking to interpret the life-giving Christ in terms which will answer the religious educational and social service ideals the times demand. This building sets forth the ideal of a congregation which has had a vision. With liberality and unanimity they have followed the vision. The building stands for that vision. Further, they have arranged with Miss Eva Lemert, a Sunday-school specialist, for a campaign in religious education. Standing for Christian nurture, Christian teaching, Christian character, Christian service—here is an appeal which is heart-searching and mind-challenging. Men and women with a thorough knowledge of the Bible; men and women with a keen desire to serve their fellowman, men and women trained to Christian leadership—this is the goal for which this building stands.

Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Disciples of his have here built this truth of his life into a building in their desire to minister, to serve the community.

Christian Endeavor on Battleships

With Stories of Some Christian Endeavor Heroes Among Seamen.

BY A. G. FEGERT.

The Christian Endeavor movement knows no barriers. The sun always shines upon it. Wherever the gospel of Christ is preached, Christian Endeavor may be found with its beneficent influences.

More or less is known about the influence of Christian Endeavor in all lands, connected with more than eighty denominations. Little, however, is known by the average person about the work of the Floating department of the Christian Endeavor movement, otherwise known as the work among seamen.

The story of the splendid work done by Christian Endeavor organizations among the sailors of the merchant marine in the ports along the shores of the Great Lakes and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans would in itself make interesting reading. But this story deals with the work on war-ships. We hear and read much during this awful European conflict of dreadnaughts and superdreadnaughts and other classes of warships. And as we read we deplore that implements of war with their potential death-dealing qualities were ever invented.

ENDEAVORERS IN EUROPEAN WAR.

However, the Christian Endeavor movement with its message for "Christ and the church" is welcomed as heartily on board these grim battle-ships as it is in the churches in our own land.

On many of the war-ships of all the nations now engaged in the needless war for racial and commercial supremacy there are those among the crews who wear the Christian Endeavor emblem. Also among the crews on the battle-ships of neutral nations are those who belong or have belonged to a Floating Christian Endeavor society.

What the heavy armored steel plates are to the boilers, magazines, and delicate mechanisms of a big war-ship, Christian Endeavor is to the character of the members of the Floating societies of Christian Endeavor. One marine on an American battle-ship who was a member of a Floating Christian Endeavor society said, "I know what the great temptations are in a soldier's, sailor's, or marine's life; but they can keep away from them if they look to God for help."

From the time when the first Floating Christian Endeavor society was organized on board the revenue cutter Dexter in 1890 to the present time, the members have been inspired to better living and higher thinking.

To link the work together around the world on ships and port with port, the World's Floating Christian Endeavor Union was organized in 1908, which is a constituent part of the World's Christian Endeavor Union. Miss Antoinette Palmer Jones, of Falmouth, Mass., who helped to organize the first Floating Christian Endeavor society in 1890 is the president.

Speaking of the work on battle-ships, Miss Jones recently said: "The results of nearly twenty-five years cannot be tabulated. Among the things that stand out prominently in connection with the work on battle-ships are the following:

"The Floating Society of Christian Endeavor on the old U. S. S. Charleston was instrumental in founding the Christian Endeavor Home for Seamen at Nagasaki, Japan, which has been of blessed service since 1895 to sailors of many nations.

"Members of the society were on board the old U. S. S. Maine when it was blown up in Havana Harbor, February 15, 1898.

"A Floating Society of Christian Endeavor went into the battle of Manila Bay on Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, that memorable May 1."

AN ENDEAVORER ON THE "MAINE."

Carlton H. Jencks, one of the martyrs who went down with the Maine that awful night in February, was the man credited with the establishing of the Christian Endeavor Home for Seamen at Nagasaki, Japan. Two years after he enlisted in 1892 as an "apprentice" he was transferred to the old U. S. S. Charleston as it started on its cruise for the Orient. After touching at several ports they were detained in Nagasaki, Japan, for ten months.

It was during this time that young Jencks realized the great need for a "home" for sailors. To promote the project, the Floating Christian Endeavor society on board the U. S. S. Charleston pledged $600 for what was to be known as the "Christian Endeavor Home for Seamen." The missionaries who had been dreaming of such a project pledged $250. Through the solicitation of the Christian Endeavorers the officers of the Charleston contributed $200. Crews and officers of other American and British ships contributed to the fund until sufficient money was obtained to purchase and equip the home. Young Jencks, but eighteen years of age then, had the privilege of presenting the home to the local Christian leaders with a large American flag. He was later transferred to the lamented U. S. S. Maine as gunner's mate, and was but twenty-one years of age when he died, as he had lived, a loyal member of a Floating Christian Endeavor society. A beautiful monument marks his grave in the National Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Tne inspiration which Albert Marquardt got as the corresponding secretary of the Floating Christian Endeavor Society on Dewey's flagship the Olympia, which led in the attack on Manila, led him to become a missionary among the miners in Colorado. He often rides one hundred miles on his motorcycle on Sunday to reach his congregations. The motorcycle was presented to him by the Hartford, Conn., Camp of United States Spanish War Veterans, of which he was a former chaplain.

QUIET WORK ON SHIPS.

The work of organizing and developing Christian Endeavor societies among the crews of battle-ships is not one accompanied by the firing of salutes or the use of other noise-making means. It is very quietly done.

Because of the ten thousand new men who enter the United States navy annually to take the place of a like number who retire to civilian life there is not the permanency to the Floating organization that there is to the church society.

The spirit of Christian Endeavor endures, however; and the work goes on from year to year, touching new lives and helping the members to live useful, clean lives "for Christ and the church."

It is a work all should encourage.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

UNCLE SAM'S MISSIONARIES.

NOT all missionaries in non-Christian lands are sent out by missionary societies. The almost uniformly high class of men appointed by the United States government to represent it in such lands in various capacities makes Uncle Sam himself a sort of missionary society, whether he wills or not.

For you cannot set a Christian man down in a community under any kind of auspices but that his Christian light is bound to shine.

That is certainly the case with Judge Charles S. Lobingier, Judge of the United States Court at Shanghai. For several years past Mr. Lobingier was Judge of the Court of First Instance at Manila, in the Philippines, and has within the present year been further elevated to his responsible post in China.

He is a broad-minded, loyal-hearted Disciple of Christ, sharing the name made beloved by his uncle, Rev. Henry Schell Lobingier, one of the most gracious and spiritual ministers our brotherhood has produced, whose biography was beautifully recorded in a volume by Dr. Barton O. Aylesworth.

Judge Lobingier's address at St. John's University Commencement last summer and presented in this issue of The Christian Century is greatly prized by our editorial judgment and will be read with satisfaction by our subscribers.

TOKENS OF RECONCILIATION.

ON several occasions The Christian Century has been prompted both to criticize and to condone the somewhat too drastic, and perhaps belligerent, treatment of certain subjects by its modest but very ably conducted contemporary, The Christian Union Advocate, of San Francisco.

Rev. H. J. Loken, the editor, has associated with him a group of very clear-headed and brave-hearted writers who, with their chief, have held themselves in admirable self-control under the trying circumstances connected with the excommunication of Berkeley Church by the Northern California Convention. Yet they have not been altogether faultless, and we have said so, though our heart declares that they have kept better-natured than most of us would have been able to keep ourselves and our pages under similar provocation.

In a gracious editorial which, for strength of conviction, charity toward others and humility in the face of one's own shortcomings, cannot, we venture, be surpassed by any writer on the Pacific Coast or any coast, the Advocate in its October issue speaks as follows:

AN IDEAL FOR THE FUTURE.

It is a source of regret to the editors of the "Advocate" and to the constituency which they represent that the discussion of certain issues during the past has been prompted by other than pure Christian motives. Both those who agree with us and those who differ have been guilty sometimes of letting feelings of personal resentment or exasperation control them to some extent. Nor do we except ourselves. We have no desire to deny our faults but rather to repent of them. While the things we have contended for we contend for still and while we propose to be no whit less frank and direct in our handling of issues, yet we earnestly desire to keep every discussion upon the high plane of Christian motive and we hope and trust that others will coöperate with us in this. Our end is not antagonism but reconciliation and we hope that we all have sufficient grace to survive any surface differences in cementing our deeper unity on the most enduring foundation. It is not primarily a matter of being progressive or of being reactionary but of loving one another and being fair and generous in all our dealings with each other.

A similar editorial, not quite so faultless in its charity and humility, but probably as well intended, appears simultaneously in The Christian Church News, the California state paper edited by Rev. E. B. Ware.

It would seem as if a spirit of reconciliation is moving in the hearts of the California church leaders, all of whom, we have continued to believe, have the feeling of brotherhood and unity too strong and too deep to allow the surface differences of the past summer to harden into permanent alienation.

During the months to come all true lovers of our great cause will be much in prayer that the words of the Advocate's editorial may become realities among our churches on the Pacific Coast.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS.

TUESDAY of last week was a critical moment in the history of temperance legislation. Several states voted on the subject, and a majority of them won. The loss of the issue in any one of them is of course to be deeply regretted. But in those with which we are particularly acquainted, as in Ohio, the temperance workers have nothing to regret in the splendid fight that was made.

Every campaign of this sort brings nearer the inevitable overthrow of the traffic. It is merely fighting in these days for a prolongation of an existence certain to end before many years. In the meantime sentiment is gained by every campaign. Thousands of men abandon the drink habit and become champions of temperance even where the present results are adverse. It is one of the satisfactions of all right-minded men that no one who votes in favor of sobriety, honesty and public welfare ever loses his vote, no matter what the present results of an election be.

There is always the probability that the next wave of public sentiment will drown out the business of the saloon, and there is the complete certainty that soon or late this will be the result.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

WOMEN'S progress toward the ballot was shown by the results of last week's election. Considerable new territory was added to the domain of equal political rights. In Illinois there was a degree of surprise manifested among the women voters at the limited franchise they possess.

Two years ago when, as it was supposed, the state admitted women to the ballot, it was taken for granted that this was a genuine victory for the suffrage workers. It was not then perceived that only a limited number of public officers were included in the list for which women were permitted to exercise the franchise.

In the recent election in this city the very offices in which woman's discriminating judgment would have placed the right candidates were discovered to be beyond the reach of women's votes.

Perhaps it would have been better to wait a little longer and pursue the constructive methods of education carried on by the older group of suffragists, whose counsels did not avail at the moment when the newer administration accepted the compromise now in force, and exultantly proclaimed a sweeping victory for equal suffrage.

A good deal of campaigning has yet to be done in this state before woman's suffrage reaches the stage where it is worthy to be called equal suffrage.

THE MISUSE OF PROPHECY.

MANY excellent Christian people have been stirred by the present war in Europe to a fresh reading of the Scriptures with the thought that very probably somewhere in the prophetic utterances of the Bible there will be found references to these tragic events.

It need not be doubted that those who go to the Bible with such a conception of prophecy, and in the mood so to interpret any utterances that may lend themselves to this purpose, will find what they seek.

The study of prophecy has always suffered at the hands of those who superficially examine the sacred Word. Particularly do the apocalyptic books, like Daniel and Revelation, yield fantastic meanings to those who are unwilling or unable to pay the price of a sounder and truer study of the prophetic messages.

The real Bible student soon discovers that the prophets were not concerned with events of the distant future, but attempted to interpret the movements of their times as the tokens of God's work in human history, and the indices of duty for their own people.

Studied in the light of the national history and with a clear understanding of the relations between text and context, the prophetic portions of the Bible lend themselves to no fantastic and distorted interpretations, such as those too frequently forced upon them by superficial teachers and writers.

The present war is a great world tragedy, and its issues are unknown to any prophet, biblical or otherwise. But its consequences are in many regards already determinable by those well-recognized laws of the divine government clearly set forth in the Holy Scriptures.

It is one thing to recognize the out working of immutable principles in human events. It is another thing to attempt, after the manner of some would-be interpreters, to find in the prophetic oracles of the Bible a description of present world events.

IS THIS CHURCH AN EXCEPTION OR THE RULE?

A CORRESPONDENT referring to an editorial of last week says: "I surely enjoyed that editorial on 'Convention Music.' I have been sadly up against the situation our music men have created in the church. The church here has never had a hymnal—nothing but the limp back 'revival dreadfuls,' and the congregation falls down on the dozen or so real hymns in the back of that!"

A DEVOUT WISH BEGINNING TO BE CONSUMMATED.

HOW long seem the years in which discerning souls among the Disciples have implored the good Spirit of inspiration to breathe a message into the heart and put a pen into the hand of our thoughtful scholars and impel them to write books!

We have been a preaching people, but not a book-writing people. A few books, mostly on controversial themes, have been written, but these dealt with matters of more or less provincial interest and could not be expected to circulate outside the circle of the theological elect. Books dealing with life, real life, human life—we have not made them.

But here all at once they begin to come!

Fred E. Hagin's masterful study of Japan, Peter C. Macfarlane's brilliant stories of "Those Who Have Come Back," Edgar D. Jones' spiritual interpretations under the sweet title, "The Inner Circle," Alva W. Taylor's "Missions and Social Service," W. J. Lhamon's "The Character Christ," H. L. Willett's "The Call of the Christ," E. S. Ames' "Psychology of Religious Experience" and Vachel Lindsay's three volumes of poetry, "The Congo," "Adventures While Preaching the Gospel of Beauty," and "General Booth Enters Heaven."

Do you not feel a lift in your soul as you read these titles, you, gentle reader, whose interest in and patience with abstract discussion and the eternal "restatement of our plea" has long since been exhausted?

The Disciples are getting closer and closer to life, to warm, real, human life. Legalism and literature never go together, and never can go together. The bonds of our legalism are broken. They never can be repaired.

The appearance of the beginnings of a literature of life is the surest token of the new freedom upon which our great brotherhood is entering.

THE CHRISTIANS IN TURKEY.

THE situation has grown very grave in the Turkish empire during the past week. The beginnings of hostilities between Russia and Turkey have necessarily involved the other belligerent powers. The sentiments of the native population in the Turkish empire are exceedingly various. In many districts the people are bitterly rebellious at the thought of any heavier burdens than they are now bearing, and military conscription and taxes are the heaviest of all. Even among Mohammedans this sentiment of aversion to war is general. Yet the military party of the Young Turks is in the saddle, and apparently the solicitations and promises of Germany have prevailed against better and more conservative opinions.

In the meantime the oppressive measures used in drafting men and collecting horses and draft animals of every sort are of the severest. Letters have been received within the last few days from native Christians in Jerusalem begging in the most important terms for loans from friends in America to enable them to pay the exemption price of $300, which will allow them to avoid the dreaded military service. But even in cases where this has been paid, corrupt military officials exercise their unrestricted power to arrest, imprison, despoil and plunge again into the toils of the conscription process the very men who thought they had purchased immunity.

Furthermore, in order to incite the Mohammedan population to a war-like mood it is apparent that the authorities are taking steps to proclaim a holy war, which if successful would mean the rising of the Mohammedan population in all the lands of the Orient for the extermination of all non-Moslems. The success of such an effort is of course a problem. But no one doubts that the tension is very great, and the position of missionaries and native Christians alike is perilous, particularly in the interior.

PET NAMES.

A CERTAIN evangelist, still living but not evangelizing, used to be called the "Kansas Cyclone." In contrast another got himself styled the "Gentleman Evangelist" because he wore evening clothes and flashed a brilliant diamond from his bosom. One, still operating, claims to have the greatest voice ever created, and is often advertised as the "Leather Lunged." And here comes one who styles himself the "Fog-horn Evangelist" because he was born and reared on the coast of Nova Scotia, where the sound of the fog-horn never ceases.

AFTERMATH.

REPORTING a great convention like that held by the Disciples of Christ at Atlanta in October always brings with it some compunctions of the editorial conscience after the story is all written up and off the press. There are so many aspects to such a convention and so much that is deserving of especial note that the most conscientious effort to "cover" it all is destined to failure.

The compliments received in this office on the Convention issue of The Christian Century have brought unfeigned satisfaction to the entire staff, but they have also made us aware of much that was omitted.

One address particularly that made a deep impression upon the audience, and into the preparation of which the speaker had manifestly put all his heart and mind, was that given by Rev. R. H. Miller on the evening devoted to the Men and Millions Movement. Mr. Miller was just leaving a long pastorate at Buffalo, N. Y., to accept the associate leadership of the Movement with Dr. A. E. Cory, and his speech was therefore his maiden interpretation of the great task to which he was consecrating himself.

He spoke on the spiritual significance of the Movement. It was a great note that he struck—not a note merely, but a whole chord, rich with spiritual insights. Following Dr. Cory's masterful presentation, and a service of prayer, the people arose and withdrew from the hall in a hush of awe and benediction.

Mr. Miller's entrance into the field of the general brotherhood's affairs is an event of the first magnitude. Since his address at Atlanta the confidence with which the brotherhood has from the first regarded the Men and Millions Movement has been doubly assured.

Another item of far-reaching importance altogether omitted from our report was the report of a Commission on Religious Education which is in some respects monumental. We can satisfy our editorial conscience on this item only by publishing a large part, if not the whole, of the text itself. This we will do next week.

The Visitor

AKRON is one of the most alert and rapidly growing cities in Ohio. In 1890 its population was 27,000. Today it is 110,000. Of its 200 miles of streets more than half are paved, so that automobile riding is a delight. It has street railway trackage of fifty-five miles, with a four-cent carfare, and in its traction system there are included 236 miles. One usually thinks of Akron as a city of cereal industry, because it is widely known as the home of Quaker Oats. And yet this industry which puts out fifty millions of cereal food packages every year, is actually its second business enterprise, being greatly exceeded by the manufacture of rubber, under the direction of twenty-two companies, with a capitalized investment of $115,000,000, and a daily output of 25,000 automobile tires. The Goodrich Company alone manufactures 40,000 articles, or as they say, "Everything in rubber." Still a third industry is that of clay sewer pipe. There are 20,000 carloads of sewer pipe shipped annually.

In this city there are sixty-six churches, and five of them are churches of the Disciples. Sunday, Nov. 1, was the semi-centennial of the High St. Bible-school. It was a great day in Akron, coming as it did just before the election that was to determine whether or not Ohio should enact state prohibition of the liquor traffic. The forces were lined up on both sides, and the greatest public interest prevailed. In the morning at nine o'clock the Brotherhood Class of the High St. Church, which numbers 300 men, and meets for lack of church accommodation in the gymnasium of the central Y. M. C. A., devoted its meeting hour to the theme of the day. This class is taught regularly by Rev. L. N. D. Wells, the pastor of the church, and is a compact and enthusiastic body of men. At the close of the hour the class marched in a body to the High St. Church to participate in the anniversary exercises of the day. But its appearance on the street was hailed as a temperance demonstration, which indeed it was.

In the afternoon at two o'clock a great procession, numbering more than 2,000 men, marched through the streets of Akron to the rink where a stirring temperance address was delivered, and measures were consummated for an automobile campaign through the entire county on the following day. The fact that Ohio failed to carry the prohibition amendment was certainly not due to any lack of interest on the part of the temperance workers in Akron and vicinity.

But the event in which the High St. Church and its Bible-school were chiefly interested was the anniversary. In the autumn of 1864 the Bible-school of this church was organized, with a total membership of ninety-three. At the present time it has an enrollment of 2,200, with sixty teachers, eight departments, and annual missionary offerings aggregating nearly $1,400. It has a living link, Mrs. Eva Raw Baird, of Luchow Fu, China. In 1913 this school led the Disciples of Christ in offerings for home missions. And best of all, every officer of the church is a member of the Bible-school. Here is a vital and aggressive organization. It has numbers to satisfy anyone who believes that numbers are effective only so far as they represent an actually enlisted and Bible-studying constituency. There is no effort at mere display.

Rev. L. N. D. Wells.

The exercises of the day were impressive. The committee in charge, of which Mr. K. H. Hays was chairman, had prepared an admirable souvenir program giving something of a history of the school, a few entries from its earliest record, and lists of some of its class membership rolls during the first year of its existence. Then there were portraits of its eight living charter members, of the fifteen ministers who have served the church throughout its history, the seventeen superintendents who have directed the work of the school, group pictures of the Brotherhood Class of men, of the official board of the Church, and the official board of the Bible-school. In addition the program of the day was printed in full, with cuts of the old and the present church, the pastor, Mr. Wells, and the present superintendent, Wm. Spanton. The preparation of such a program, escpecially the securing of the many portraits, must have involved no little labor. It is an artistic creation and a valuable souvenir to anybody interested in the High St. Church.

* * *

The most interesting feature of the program came when the greetings of living pastors and superintendents were presented. The earlier ministers of the church were J. O. Beardslee, L. R. Norton, R. L. Howe, Lathrop Cooley, John F. Rowe, R. G. White, F. M. Green and E. A. Bosworth. These have all entered into the larger life. From each of the living ex-pastors of the church warm and interesting messages were received. These were C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati; Levi Marshall, of Nevada, Mo.; Frank A. Morgan, of Chicago; C. J. Tanner, of Detroit; J. G. Slayter, of Dallas, and George Darsie, of Terre Haute. Their messages were received with satisfaction by the congregation that filled every available space in the church. It need hardly be added that Mr. Wells' brief and timely words were welcomed by his people as the prophetic and hopeful pledge of many years of continued ministry with the congregation and Bible-school that have found in him the man of their choice and the leader of the hour. Messages were also read from two former superintendents of the Bible-school, C. L. Rockwell and A. L. White; and six former superintendents, M. E. Baker, S. H. Mantle, Charles Traxler, W. A. Slabaugh, A. S. Mottinger and K. H. Hays spoke briefly of their experiences as leaders of the school. Frank Root, the predecessor of the present superintendent, sent a letter of good wishes from his sick bed, and Mr. Spanton, who now leads the school so efficiently, spoke modestly of his work. Not the least interesting of the brief addresses of the hour was that of Mrs. Baird, who told of the recent dedication at Luchow Fu, China, of a Bible-school building as a part of the work of the Akron school.

Such an occasion means much, not only to a church like High St. and its sister churches of the Disciples in Akron, but to the community at large. This congregation has already purchased property and is completing a building for a new congregation, most of whose members will be dismissed from its membership shortly to form a new church. And thus in the truest sense it is the mother of the cause in that growing city. In looking over the list of membership one comes frequently upon the honored name of Allen and other families active through the years of the church, some of whose members still abide.

The visitor enjoyed the warm hospitality of the home of Charles Traxler, a former member of the West London Tabernacle, but for many years a leading spirit and an official in the High St. Church. He is a man of vision, consecrated and aggressive in every good work. He has given largely of his time and effort not only to the Church and school, but to such public reforms as the temperance cause.

Such a church as High St. is an honor to the Disciples of Christ, and under the leadership of such a man as L. N. D. Wells it may be trusted to have its part in every forward movement undertaken by the Disciples. H. L. W.

How is the World Saved?

BY DEAN SHAILER MATHEWS.

Dean Mathews has been described as "progressively conservative and constructively radical," and this address fully exemplified this statement. It was radical in that it struck some hard blows at many of the still prevailing medieval additions to the Gospel, and it was conservative because it showed what salvation is according to the Bible and human experience.

The medieval church conjured up all sorts of theories about the atonement; one was that God traded with the devil. He exchanged Jesus for the lives of a few saints, and then Jesus afterward by his great power escaped the clutches of Satan.

What sort of a God would you call that? That looks like obtaining goods under false pretenses. Would you have a God who creates a pious fraud?

This is the conception of a brutal age.

The medium through which man's salvation is wrought was first illustrated by a glance at the experiences of the race.

All salvation is secured through suffering and sacrifice.

The pioneer redeemed land in this way, primitive man conquered and rose to civilization through suffering. The idea of sacrifice lies at the root of all life.

Salvation of the Gospel is of this same order and this was shown by a consideration of the sufferings Jesus underwent.

And the taking of men as hostages suggested the theory that Christ was one. God is merciful, they said, but a king must be just, so Christ was punished to satisfy this sense of justice.

Then in the eighteenth century the rise of commercialism produced the theory of purchase of redemption by the sufferings of Christ. Many of our current church hymns contain this idea.

The question of salvation has become simpler than of old, but less dramatic.

It is a question of many saviors as well as of one. We must interpret God's way of salvation to the world.

There must be some way to reconcile the cruelties of nature and the adversities of life with the theory of a loving God. We must interpret these things.

The significant theory about Christ is not the suffering but the salvation. He suffered that He might save, but did not save that He might suffer.

How is the world saved?

It is by dying to many things, and living to other things. He that will lose his life shall find it.

It is through sacrifice, for thus you are filling the great plan of Christ. It is by closer living with God. "If any man would follow Me let him take up his cross."

This is the great law of all salvation. You lose and gain. Christ reveals Himself, lifts us out of earth to heaven, out of the mud sloughs to the throne; out of sensual pleasures to the joys of the spirit.

This is not a message of suffering, but a plan of salvation, for salvation is greater than suffering, just as God is greater than the world of things.

WISDOM FROM DR. C. E. JEFFERSON.

Some ministers try to drive. Their fatal weakness is an inability to see that shepherds cannot drive. Such men are always cutting, lashing, forcing, and therefore always getting into trouble. They lack the magic of the shepherd touch.

* * *

A layman, no matter how great a saint, may exchange one position for another, if by so doing he increases his income without the sacrifice of important interests, but this in a minister is by many people counted reprehensible, even positively disgraceful. There is in many quarters a jealous solicitude lest ministers get more money than they ought to have.

* * *

Pastoral work delivers a minister from many errors and delusions. Robertson used to say, "It is visitation of the poor which more than anything else brings a man into contact with the actual and the real, and destroys fanciful dreams." The life of a minister exposes him to many distorting influences, and he needs close contact with the world of working men and women to keep him sane and sweet.

* * *

Worry is one of the universal sins. It is a cosmopolitan sin. There are sins which are provincial in their nature. They fasten upon certain classes of the population and infest certain strata of our national life. But worry is a universal sin. It flourishes everywhere. It is common in every continent and blossoms under every sky. It is no respecter of persons or places. It will live with the poor man in his hut. It will travel up the marble stairway of the king and lie down with him on his bed.

* * *

You cannot build a church on a string of maxims, though every maxim be a priceless pearl. You cannot build a lasting institution on a sheet of paper, though the Sermon on the Mount is written on it. The principles embodied in the Sermon on the Mount will never account for the career and conquests of the Church of Christ. Those principles are beautiful, but had they been spoken by a Plato or an Aristotle, a Seneca or a Marcus Aurelius, they would never have revolutionized the lives of men as they have done and are doing still, nor could they have turned the stream of centuries into a new channel. Transforming power does not lie in ethical principles or beautiful sentences, but in a man. So Jesus himself declared, I am the way, the truth, and the life." He never seemed eager to induce men to subscribe to his statements. His constant appeal was, "Come unto me." We read the gospels to little purpose if we read them with Jesus out.

Statue to Henry Ward Beecher.

A statue has been erected to the memory of Henry Ward Beecher in Beecher Memorial Park in Brooklyn, near the Plymouth Church, where Mr. Beecher once preached. The statue represents the scene in Beecher's ministry when he auctioned off the two slave girls and these girls appear at the feet of the great preacher. Newell Dwight Hillis made the address at the unveiling. Two great-granddaughters of the great preacher drew back the flag that had veiled the statue. The figure represents Henry Ward Beecher in the fulness of his maturity. Newell Dwight Hillis said that in our commercial age the great sermons of Beecher might not attract more than a corporal's guard to hear them but that there was still work for young men and women of vision to do.

Church Becomes Congregational.

That denominational bonds are becoming weakened is seen by the vote of a large United Brethren Church at Canton, O., with 800 members, to change its denominational affiliations and become a Congregational Church. Rev. C. W. Rickard has been pastor of this church for ten years. Some years ago there was a movement to unite the Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestants. This may have prepared the way for the church's action. Disciples have known of this church for some time as being a friendly rival of their Canton Church in a certain type of Sunday-school activity.

Sunday-school Convention in Tokyo.

The World's Sunday-school Convention will be held in Tokyo, Oct. 18 to 26, 1916. Already the great leaders of the movement are beginning their campaign of promotion. Frank L. Brown, the world's secretary, has sent out from his office in the Metropolitan tower of New York a tract called "Tokyo Talking Points." Four Japanese men of great prominence will be sponsors to the convention: Count Okuma, the prime minister of the empire; Baron Shibusawa, the Japanese financier; Baron Sakatani, mayor of Tokyo, and Mr. Nakano, the president of Tokyo's chamber of commerce.

Evangelism With Home Forces.

The churches of the different denominations in Rochester, N. Y., are planning a winter's evangelistic campaign which is attracting wide attention. They are not bringing in professional evangelists but are training and utilizing the forces in the local community and the home church. The city has been divided into thirty districts so as to make responsibility definite. Conferences for workers are to be held. On Oct. 15, a conference for Sunday-school teachers was held to interpret evangelism from the teacher's standpoint. Certain special days in behalf of the local church have been set apart. Even the Lutheran and the Episcopal churches have agreed to co-operate.

Novelist Enters Pulpit.

The churches of Claremont, New Hampshire, held a union service in the opera house on a recent evening that was out of the ordinary, as both Catholic and Protestant churches co-operated. The celebrated novelist, Winston Churchill, was invited to preach. He took for his text, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Not all literary men are speaking in behalf of organized religion these days, and this occurrence is a matter of encouragement.

Go-to-Prayer-meeting Night.

The Methodists of Chicago have originated a movement which is becoming nation-wide in its significance to this denomination. They have set apart Nov. 11 as their "go-to-prayer-meeting" night. On that night all over the country there are an unusual number of Methodists in the churches at prayer. Bishop McDowell says of the movement. "Among the most useful means of grace known to the Church is the meeting for prayer, fellowship, testimony, and Christian song. The greatest need of our lives is the grace to live those lives nobly and well. We are busy enough; we are burdened enough; we easily drift away from the sources of grace for ourselves and for our work in the world. We need the uplift and the outlook, the new touch with the spirit of Christ, which the prayer-meeting will give. I do not ask you to go for the sake of the prayer-meeting. In the Master's name, I do ask for your sake and for His."

G. Campbell Morgan Ill.

G. Campbell Morgan is ill of typhoid fever and the issue of the disease is not yet apparent. This news will be received with sorrow by American Christians for G. Campbell Morgan is perhaps the best known among them of any of the British preachers. He has become a very familiar figure at our summer conferences.

Spanish Protestants Get Together.

The Protestant movement in Spain has been making good headway in recent years. Recently the Protestants have formed an alliance for the purposes of brotherhood and mutual fellowship. The head of this alliance is an ex-priest who was converted in reading up against Protestantism. The headquarters are in an old building whose chambers were once used for the purposes of torture of those who fell under the displeasure of the Inquisition.

Evangelizing in England.

J. Wilbur Chapman and Chas. M. Alexander have been conducting evangelistic meetings in London. They preached for a time in Guild Hall, a privilege which has never before been extended to any but members of the Anglican church. Later they have gone to Spurgeon's old church where A. C. Dixon, formerly of Chicago, is now pastor. The war has made English people turn their faces toward God and they are quite ready for the gospel.

Church Peace Union.

The impression is general that the Church Peace Union which called a meeting at Constance, Germany, just on the eve of the war, did not succeed in having the meeting but this is erroneous. There were three full sessions of the conference in the room of the Insel Hotel where John Huss was tried and after the conference was forced to leave Germany on account of the government seizure of the railroads, there was a fourth session at the Westminster Palace Hotel in London. Over half of the expected delegates arrived in spite of the conditions. There were fifty out of the sixty Americans there. The permanent achievement of the conference was the formation of an institution called the "World Alliance of the Churches for International Goodwill." A continuation committee of sixty was authorized to begin work at once in the interest of all the churches of the world in this Alliance.

Catholics in Social Service.

Plans have been laid for the resumption of active work this winter in the Catholic social center movement. The campaign for the establishment of a social settlement was started several months ago. The settlement work will provide the following lines of practical endeavor: Kindergartens and a day nursery where the children of working women may be cared for while the mothers are at work; a visiting nurse department, with a trained nurse in charge; a service department, with a trained worker in charge, always ready to give comfort and advice to those in trouble; clubrooms for boys and girls and their elders, equipped with facilities for social gatherings and the various educational and other activities of the settlement; classes in domestic science and manual training; a legal department where counsel and assistance will be extended; an employment exchange where the man and the job may be brought together; a gymnasium, with shower baths and swimming pool; a reading-room and circulating library. In connection with this department there will be frequent lectures and conferences on citizenship and public affairs. An effort is being made to enlist the advice and co-operation of business men in the plan to make the settlement a vital factor in the civic life of Chicago.

Pastorless Churches in New York.

Three large Presbyterian churches in Manhattan are reported to be without pastors—one of them for over two years! Another (Reformed) church recently built a $500,000 plant in Manhattan, expecting to sell their old property to help pay for the new church, etc. Not being able to sell on account of a reversionary clause, they have just sold the new plant (at a loss of about $250,000) to a Presbyterian congregation. Another sad case is that of the Madison avenue Reformed Church, at Fifty-seventh street and Madison avenue, which has property valued at $1,000,000 but on account of lack of members and small collections is unable to meet the interest charges on a mortgage of $250,000 placed two years ago. According to the information given to the trustees of the New York classis, or central organization, the church will cease to hold services in February next unless some way of getting money and members is devised. The church was formed in 1808. The death of its pastor, Rev. Dr. A. E. Kittredge, and the removal of members to other churches are given as the cause of the church's plight.

A Messenger from Europe.

Rev. D. N. Furnajieff, pastor of the Evangelical church of Sofia, Bulgaria, has been brought to this country by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ to address the churches relative to the moral and religious aspects of the European war. Rev. Mr. Furnajieff had a special permit and moved freely through the lines during the Balkan war, and has a special knowledge of the situation in the present conflict. He is to speak in various parts of America and arrangements can be made to secure him through the Federal Council whose offices are at 105 E. 22nd St., New York.

The Yale School of Religion.

The Yale School of Religion opened its ninety-third year this fall. This institution has had $375,000 increase in endowment and in consequence certain departments have been enlarged and strengthened, notably those of Religious Education and Social Service. The Prudential Life Insurance Company has presented the school with eight thousand volumes relating to the work of social service. The total enrollment of the school is 108, of whom twenty-nine are Congregationalists, twenty-two Methodists, nineteen Disciples, eleven Presbyterians, and ten are Baptists. The school is emphasizing the interdenominational character of its work.

Rural Life Survey in Ohio.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has just begun a state-wide rural survey of the state of Ohio. The Field Representative of the Federal Council, Rev. Chas. O. Gill, is making his permanent headquarters in Columbus. The subjects that will receive investigation are "Financing the Country Church," "The Training of Country Pastors Through Co-operation and Federation," and "the Country Church as a Community Center." President E. O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, and Gifford Pinchot are also co-operating with the movement. The results of the survey are to be published and should be a distinct contribution to the literature of the country church.

Unitarians and Universalists.

In three different states, the state meetings of Unitarians and Universalists this fall were held in the same city. These states were Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. The men of the two denominations exchanged speakers on their programs and the fellowship was very close.

Preacher and Brewers.

A few preachers have sold their services to the brewers in recent temperance fights. Among those who have spoken in behalf of the liquor dealers has been one Joseph E. Meeker of St. Louis. He ran for Congress this fall from a wet district. The St. Louis Republic asks the brewers if they want this recent convert to represent them in Washington. The danger set forth by the daily press is that this recent convert to the cause of a wet nation may be over radical in behalf of his views and is therefore unsafe. It is a strange position for a man who has ever worn the livery of heaven to find himself in.

Syracuse Churches Advertise.

The Ministers' Association of Syracuse, N. Y., is running a half page of church advertising in a local newspaper each Saturday.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

J. B. BRINEY IN THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.

(Third Installment.)

Mr. Morrison finds some difficulty in the selection of a word to convey the meaning of baptizo, hesitating a little between "initiate" and "induct." His idea seems to be that baptism, in the New Testament, means to "initiate" into a religious community. A common-sense rule of interpretation is that the proper meaning of a word may be substituted for the word in any given case, without disturbing the sense. Let us try this on a passage or two of Scripture: "Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was initiated of John into [eis] the Jordan" (Mark 1:9). Here Jesus was iniated, not into a religious community, but into a river! "Or are ye ignorant that all we who are initiated into Christ were initiated into his death?" (Rom. 6:3.) Here people were initiated, not into a religious community, but into Christ, and into his death! "But I have an initiation to be initiated with" (Luke 12:50). Into what religious community was Jesus initiated in his sufferings? Into what ridiculous straits a man is initiated when he attemps to evade the plain teaching of the word of God.

In dealing with the commission our author performs some strange freaks. He summarily disposes of Mark's version of it as follows:

It is well known to the reader, no doubt, that the authenticity of the last twelve verses of Mark's Gospel, including his account of a commission similar to Matthew's, is rejected by scholarship, both conservative and radical."

This indicates that Mr. Morrison does not understand the status of the controversy in regard to the passage involved. It is the genuineness of the passage (that is, Mark's authorship) that is pretty generally called in question, and not its authenticity (that is, its inspiration). After giving an opinion against the genuineness of the passage, Dean Alford says: "The inference therefore seems to me to be that it is an authentic fragment, placed as a completion of the gospel in very early times" (italics Alford's.)

Dr. Samuel Davidson, who was selected by Dr. Tischendorf to translate his Greek text into English, in his introduction to his translation, says:

"But orthodox impugners of the passage call it "genuine and inspired, an addition that ought as much to be received as part of our second gospel, as the last part of Deuteronomy is received as the right and proper conclusion of the books of Moses"; and say that it "has ever been regarded as possessing the same canonical authority with the three gospels." If this language be taken in its natural sense, the section has the same authority and value as the rest of the gospel, though it was not written by Mark."

In dealing with an intricate question one should have at least a fairly good understanding of the subject. Our author forgets himself before he completes his book, and on page 203 says, "When our Lord says, 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved,'" thus putting into the Master's mouth the very words that he had just dismissed as unauthentic.

Perhaps the most presumptuous and daring thing that Mr. Morrison does is to dismiss "born of water" from John 3:5 as spurious. He admits that if those words belong to the passage, they fix immersion as the meaning of baptism, and, as his book is written to try to invalidate that idea, he is obliged to attempt to get rid of that phrase: and what an attempt! There is not a critical suspicion upon the phrase from any source that is entitled to consideration in the investigation of such a question. The only authority alluded to in support of our author's hitherto unheard-of assumption is a "scholarly paper, as yet unpublished, by Prof. Frederick O. Norton, Ph.D., of Drake University, which he read before the Congress of Disciples in Kansas City, Mo., in the spring of 1912." It is well that this "scholarly paper" is "yet unpublished," and it is devoutly to be wished that it may forever retain its present position of obscurity. When the word of God has to be mutilated to maintain a theory, it is time to crucify the theory.

Among the many wild assertions of the book under review, the following occupies a conspicuous place: "The reader should remind himself afresh that the effect of our study so far is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatever stands behind the practice of immersion." In view of this wild asseveration, it is marvelous that our author can contend, as he does, for immersion as the "mode of baptism" that must prevail in a united Christendom. It has no divine authority behind it, and yet it must be a plank in the platform upon which Christian people must come together in one body and maintain the unity of the Spirit! This violates one of the cardinal points in the basis of union that we have always advocated; namely, that nothing but a "thus saith the Lord" can have any place in a scriptural basis of union.

Numerous other inconsistencies and errors I would like to notice, did not space forbid. Enough has been noticed, however, to show the unreliableness and crudeness of "The Meaning of Baptism." Our author is in the habit of referring to his chapters as "studies," but nearly every chapter is a pitiful special plea for some unscriptural and erroneous position.

This book, together with other productions from the same pen, makes it perfectly manifest that our author has abandoned the historical position of the Christian church, and is doing all he can do to destroy that position. He is not of us, and he should have the grace to go out from among us, as others have done. He is entitled to no recognition in any gathering of our people in any church capacity, for such recognition would give at least quasi endorsement to his vagaries.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

"SMALL SAINTS OF LITTLE SINNERS."

A most dashing experiment in the manufacture of small saints out of young sinners has just begun to succeed in a surprising degree. The place of the experiment is a Dorset farm in England, given by Lord Sandwich—who has a nephew, George Montagu.

Small criminals, both boys and girls, are sent to this farm, where they are taught to govern themselves in their own parliament and their own law courts. Some most sternly just judges have been discovered.

The effect of self-government has proved an almost instantaneous cure in some recent instances. For example, an ill-dressed and dirty boy was forcibly clothed at the expense of the community, and the scheme proved so successful that he worked like a Trojan till he had paid back to the Poor Law guardians the cost of his outfit.

Again, it was decided by the manager that the boarding expenses were too high. A council of boys and girls at once sat on the subject. They decided to buy margarine in place of butter, and by cutting down here and there they soon reduced expenses to the proper margin, to their own great delight and the benefit of the community.

The first year of this "Little Republic" concludes in June, and the success has been striking—in the opinion of the police court commmissioners and others—that a great effort is to made to extend the republic.

PORTO RICANS LEARN NURSING.

Two young Porto Rican girls who have spent several years in the George O. Robinson Orphanage at San Juan, Porto Rico, are now taking nurse training at the Presbyterian Hospital in San Juan. The two young women who came to the States after graduating from the home and took two years of training at Rust Hall, are now serving admirably in the orphanage, one as kindergartner and the other as teacher of domestic science. Miss Osmond, who has been for the past three years supervisor of the day and kindergarten school under the Woman's Home Missionary Society in Porto Rico, spent the last year in the States returning to her work early in September. Miss Osmond is a graduate of the National College in Chicago, Ill.

EUROPEAN WOMEN WORK.

In Europe women are demonstrating that they can take on the industrial duties of men. With all the able-bodied men of Germany, Austria, France, Russia, Belgium, Servia and Montenegro, and nearly all of Great Britain, Switzerland, Holland, Italy, and Portugal entirely removed from their usual labors, the activities of peace would come to an abrupt stop if it were not for the women. But now, as heretofore, they are stepping into the places of the men who have gone to the war, and crops will be harvested—and planted, too, if the war should last until next seeding time—and factories are kept open. Shops are doing business and transportation remains in operation. All this is largely possible through the efforts of the women who aid old men and boys in keeping the great industrial machine moving. In France it is reported that women are acting as conductors on street cars and omnibuses, that they are replacing men as waiters, factory operatives, heads of shops, and in short in all the walks of life. The same is true in Germany. Belgium is so torn by war that there is almost a total suspension of industry for the time, but when the inevitable reconstruction comes women will be doing their share of the work. In Great Britain conditions are not as bad as on the Continent, but they are bad enough, and women there will have to replace the hundreds of thousands of men who have been changed in a few weeks from peaceful producers to military consumers of the nation's wealth.

TEACHING THRIFT.

The father of a young family has this plan for training the children in thrifty habits of saving. On each birthday he gives the birthday child as many dollars as the child is years old. The child is allowed to handle the money, and keep it in possession for awhile, for the pleasure of it. Then a bank kept for the purpose is produced, the money is dropped in, and afterward, father takes it for deposit, in the real bank, says The Mother's Magazine. He explains why it is a good thing to have a bank account, and to put away money for a time of need. He promises when, in course of time, the birthday money reaches the sum of $100, that he will buy a bond, which will bring in interest that may be spent by the owner, while the interest is kept intact. This prospect is so stimulating, and the whole plan so appealing, that no birthday child wishes to divert the anniversary gift from its destination.

Along with this training in thrift, the father sees to it that systematic and regular giving becomes a fixed habit, by arranging that each child shall not only give in Sunday-school, as well as a certain monthly sum at the Mission Band meeting; but he also sees that church envelopes are provided, so that each may do his own share in maintaining the regular offerings of the whole congregation.

WHAT IS CULTURE?

At a recent dinner gathering of which Jane Addams of Hull House was the honored guest, the conversation turned to the subject of culture. One notable person and another was named as embodying different guests' ideas of culture. At length a hitherto silent guest spoke up. "I think our ideas differ a bit as to what culture is." Then, turning to Miss Addams, "How would you define culture, Miss Addams?"

Miss Addams was thoughtful for a moment. "That person is most cultivated," she said at last, "who is able to put himself in the place of the greatest number of other persons."

In other words, to be cultured is to understand.

In Memory of Mrs. Wiison.

The women of the Southern Presbyterian Church are working out a plan to establish a fund for the education of mountain children of the South. The fund will be in the name of Ellen Axsen Wilson, the deceased wife of the President.

"The Ladies Cleared Ninety Dollars"

HILDA RICHMOND IN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Of all the examples of "frenzied finance" perhaps the most innocent and amusing is that of the usual church supper. Whatever may be said for or against this popular way of making money from any other standpoint, it is quite certain the dear ladies who help these social affairs along never doubt for a moment that they are perfectly successful as to profit. The other day we heard some ladies telling of a certain church supper, and deploring the fact that their own church did not more frequently make money in this fashion. "Why, the ladies cleared $90!" said one member of the group half enviously. "Cleared, mind you! I think that is wonderful for one evening's work."

Perhaps it would have been "wonderful" if both her statements had been correct. A dozen ladies worked the greater part of two days at the church getting ready for the supper, to say nothing of the cakes baked at home, the large number of workers needed for the afternoon and evening of the great event, and the extra services of the church janitor for several days before and after. The entire church was solicited for money, cakes, cream, bread, butter, and all but the chickens, which were bought and prepared by a committee at the church, instead of being brought cooked from the homes. Sixty chickens were required at nearly $1 each. The ice cream also was purchased with money solicited for that purpose. Twelve gallons were needed, at eighty cents a gallon. Of course, no account could be kept of the supplies donated from the homes of members, but every woman knows that a fine large iced cake is worth at least $1 in these days of high prices.

Well, as long as the ladies think they made a great deal of money, no great harm is done; but sometimes the men folks get to thinking that if their wives and mothers and sisters disposed of the household allowance in the same way they finance the "Ladies' Aid" and kindred societies in the church, there must be a great leak somewhere. We once heard a man say that after seeing his wife manage a chicken supper for the church, and manage it successfully from the ladies' standpoint, he decided that in case he died she would not have enough property to keep her for five years, and he was fairly well to do. As a money-making plan—really a money-making scheme—the church supper is a dismal failure, but as a money-getting proposition there is something to be said in its favor. The dear ladies can take $2, and juggle them neatly by way of the chicken-and-ice-cream route, and get a whole dollar back after two or three days of hard work. And they are so happy while doing it, and so sure they are helping the church along, that it is a sin and shame to disturb their innocent fancies. Some day the chicken supper will go out of style, and something new will come to provide money for church enterprises, but let us hope that the ladies will not clear any more than they do by their present plans. If they were more successful, the men could not afford to do very much for the church finances, and things would be worse than they are now.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Cross in Japan. By Fred Eugene Hagin. Many events have served to bring Japan into a striking prominence in the life of farther Asia in recent years, and to keep it there. The interpretations of Japan come to us from two widely different sources. There are those who emphasize the rapid rise of the Sunrise Empire to military efficiency, its eager desire to increase its territory at the expense of neighboring nations and of the United States, its bitter resentment of what it regards as the gross injustice of its treatment of the people of the Pacific slope, and its deliberate purpose to strike at America at the first opportunity. On the other hand, there is a much larger company of friendly and more convincing interpreters of Japan who assure us that our nearest neighbor across the Pacific has no possible interests that could be served by an embroilment with the United States, and that for the most part, aside from jingo extremists, the people of Japan of all classes hold an attitude of entire friendship with the United States, and wish to keep that attitude.

Mr. Hagin is an experienced and honored missionary of the Disciples of Christ in Japan. His residence in that country for many years has given him an intimate knowledge of the land, its people, their arts and crafts, their industrial and social conditions, their individual and domestic life, their morality and their religion. The book is written as only so well informed a writer could present the facts. Mr. Hagin has given us not merely a missionary recital, though the entire work of 350 pages is informed with the Christian spirit of eager belief in the religious possibilities of the land. Rather is it a study of almost every feature of Japanese life, presented with literary charm and with wealth of detail and illustration. We know of nothing that quite compares with this book in the extent of the material presented and the timeliness of its message. It is interesting alike to the student of missions and to the reader who wishes only the entertainment of scenes in a distant and fascinating land. Its perusal ought to afford a rich increase of knowledge regarding a wonderful land and people, and at the same time a new conception of the missionary opportunity which Japan offers, and some of the outstanding difficulties in the way of its complete Christianization. Mr. Hagin is to be congratulated upon his admirable work, and the Disciples of Christ should be proud of this new and valuable addition to missionary literature by one of their own representatives. The American Indian on the New Trail. By Thomas C. Moffet. The story of the red people appeals to every student of American origins. Some of the most romantic and tragic chapters in the history of our land relate to the Indians and their struggles with the invaders who gradually drove them from their land. The present volume is an attempt to interpret the past story and the present condition of the Indian tribes of this continent, and especially to describe the efforts now making in their behalf in the form of education and Christian missions. In a graphic manner Mr. Moffet describes the early Indians and their religious ideas, and the later record of the white and the red races in their contest for the possession of the continent. The remaining chapters deal with organized Christian enterprise in behalf of these aboriginal groups, and some of the perils which now confront the Indian are detailed. This is a book that would have pleased Helen Hunt Jackson, that skilled and sympathetic portrayer of Indian life and wrongs. Appendices supply detailed information regarding the missionary work of the different boards among these people, and a bibliography of the subject. (Missionary Education Movement of the U. S. and Canada.)

F. E. Hagin, Author of "The Cross In Japan."

Vital Elements of Preaching. By Arthur S. Hoyt. The author of this work is well known as the professor of Homiletics and Sociology in Auburn Theological Seminary and the writer of several books on preaching. The contents of this volume are a series of lectures delivered at the University of Chicago and at Auburn Seminary. They deal with important phases of the preacher's task such as, "The Called Men," "The Human Touch," "The Ministry of Comfort," "The Preacher's Growth," "Positive Preaching," and "The Master's Method." The book will be found useful in the classroom for preacher training, and in the minister's study. (Macmillan. $1.50 net.)

The Question of Alcohol. By Edward Huntington Williams, M. D. If one wishes to know what can be said on the negative side of the temperance question, this book will supply the information. The author believes that the deadly danger of prohibition lies in the fact that everybody will be driven to the use of drugs thereby. Temperance instruction in the public schools is derided and deprecated. The discredited plea that alcohol is a food is revived. Prohibition of course is a failure, and actually increases the amount of liquor consumed. The solution of the drink problem is to be found in a regulated saloon, which of course means a respectable saloon. The difficulty with this book is that it comes too late to help the discredited and defeated saloon business. (The Goodhue Co. 75 cents.)

Tents of a Night. By Mary Findlater. A story of Lowland Scotch life. The book is characterized by insight into the contradictions of the Scotch character—mingled candor and caution, meanness and generosity. The book abounds in pleasing humor. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York. $1.35 net.)

Ned Brewster's Caribou Hunt. By Chauncey J. Hawkins. Here is a city boy who goes for the first time into the wilds to rough it and to "hunt" with a camera. Some stirring adventures are narrated. The book is illustrated from photographs "taken on the spot" by the author. (Little, Brown & Co., New York, $1.20 net.)

"Where the Long Trail Begins"

A Book by S. S. Lappin.

REVIEWED BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

I had Editor S. S. Lappin's book "Where the Long Trail Begins" in my possession for a month before I read it. When it came I laid it aside to take it up some cosy evening when I might feel myself in an especial mood for its perusal. Various duties crowded the little volume out of my mind until one evening I came across it half-hidden by other books; and, opening it, I read it through with much pleasure and a great deal of profit.

The fact is, the book moved me deeply, and in the course of its reading more than once I felt a lump rising in my throat. I want to say now two or three things about this little volume.

First, and to begin with, the little book is mechanically a thing of art. It is the finest piece of printing and binding I have ever seen from the Standard's press, and will compare favorably with work done by many of the great publishing houses in the East.

In the second place, the style of the volume is choice and especially adapted to the reminiscent strain which, like a prominent figure in a work of tapestry, runs throughout the entire volume. Mr. Lappin's style is always readable, but nothing he has yet written is as smooth and even and attractive as the several chapters of this volume.

Third, there is a very large and generous charity upon all the pages of this little idyllic volume. One could scarcely believe that the author of these paragraphs, which so abound in a fine spirit of tolerance and wide sympathies, could have any taste for the polemic or the controversial. And I like to believe that Mr. Lappin has written into this book his real generous self and that these pages show his attitude towards his brothers all. No matter what Mr. Lappin may write in the future in the way of the controversial, and no matter how widely I may disagree with what he may write, I shall want to estimate him as he has written himself into this volume.

I commend "Where the Long Trail Begins" as worthy of a wide and appreciative reading.

Disciples Table Talk

Pastor Demands Law Enforcement.

L. E. Brown, who is pastor at Connersville, Ind., recently delivered a strong sermon on law enforcement in his city and named the mayor and chief of police as being derelict in their duty. He charged that there were five open gambling places conducted in defiance of the law. Drunken men were not arrested as they should be. The city officials asked the Ministerial Association to consent to Sunday moving pictures of a religious sort with one-fourth of the proceeds going to charity. This consent was denied the officials.

Churches Reconciled.

Two churches in St. Louis that have been estranged for eleven years are forming a merger and forgetting their differences. The Tuxedo church in Tuxedo Park has voted to receive back into fellowship the members of the Old Orchard church that left eleven years ago. There are about fifty members in the Old Orchard church and the work of maintaining preaching by so small a congregation became too strenuous. Frank T. Edwards of the Old Orchard church resigned and went to East St. Louis in order to facilitate the union. Charles E. Smith of the Tuxedo church will continue as pastor of the re-united church.

Wabash County, Ill., Churches Meet.

The churches of Wabash county, Ill., met for a county convention at Mt. Carmel, Oct. 29. W. W. Weedon presided over the deliberations. There were addresses on "County Co-operation," "The Distinctive Features of the Christian Church," and a sermon on "The Event of all Time." The next meeting will go to Allendale and the incoming president is O. H. Wood of Barney's Prairie.

Pastor Speaks to Hebrews.

Earle Wilfley, pastor of the Vermont Avenue church in Washington, D. C., spoke in the Washington Hebrew Temple recently to the Hebrew Sisterhood. Dr. Wilfley spoke on the broadening of the scope of religion and related the task of religion with the on-coming of civilization. His address was well received by the ladies who heard it.

New Methods at Ann Arbor.

The church at Ann Arbor, Mich., of which Geo. W. Knepper is pastor is receiving a good deal of attention in the secular press these days on account of new methods adopted in its work. On November 1, a junior congregation was held in a room adjoining the church congregation with deacons and elders chosen from the children and only the preacher a grown-up. The church maintains a nursery for babies and a kindergarten for small children, conducted during the morning service. Sunday evenings, refreshments are served after the evening service, to which the students of the state university are specially invited. Mr. Knepper publicly announces that he will not accept either a wedding fee or a funeral fee. This church has only 150 members aside from the student membership but it gave to missions last year the tidy sum of $1,200.

A National Secondary Superintendent.

Robt. M. Hopkins writes: "Following the recommendation of the recent Atlanta Convention, the Bible-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society has added a secondary superintendent to its corps of divisional superintendents. For a year or more we have had efficient superintendents for the Elementary and Adult Divisions. Miss Hazel A. Lewis is our elementary superintendent and W. J. Clarke our adult superintendent. We have lacked the secondary superintendent. We are very happy to announce that Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus is to assume the duties of this office beginning November 1. Miss Maus is no stranger to our Bible-school workers. She has already done a very large work in the field throughout the country. As associate editor of Sunday-school literature of the Christian Board of Publication her name is already well known. She now comes to give her full time to the administrative and field duties of this important office in connection with the American Society. We feel sure that this appointment is heartily approved by all who know her. There is no department in all the work of the modern Sunday-school more fraught with remarkable opportunities for the kingdom than the Secondary Department. This should be the harvest time for all the work of religious education. To the average school it is the weakest department. It is to be hoped that Miss Maus with her splendid enthusiasm and far reaching insight into the problems of this great department will be of tremendous help to all the workers in the local school throughout the country. We are hoping that the Bible-schools will show their hearty approval of the election of Miss Maus through their offerings the Sunday before Thanksgiving out of which she, together with all our other workers, must be supported."

Rev. Frank E. Bowen, City Evangelist for Kansas City Disciples, and wife. Mr. Bowen is reported ill from overwork.

City Superintendent Ill.

Frank L. Bowen who is known as one of the most successful city superintendents among us is ill from overwork and has gone to the country near Jacksonville, Ill. His illness will greatly embarrass our force in Kansas City.

Evangelist Preaches Millennium.

Clyde Lee Fife who is in a meeting at Terre Haute, Ind., declared that the present war and the concentration of capital were marks of the second coming of Christ in visible presence to the earth. He presented various recent happenings as being the fulfilment of prophecy and the beginning of the end of the age.

Minister's Health Fails.

The friends of R. H. Tanksley of Anthony, Kans., will receive with regret the announcement that he has had a nervous break-down and will be obliged to retire from the ministry, at least for a time. With his wife, he has gone to relatives in Missouri where he has hopes of regaining his health.

Evangelism at Rock Island.

A number of the churches of various denominations in Rock Island will hold simultaneous evangelistic campaigns in the near future. The churches that do not go in have recently held meetings or have plans to be carried out a little later. Our Second church is announced as co-operating in the movement and the plan has the approval of the Ministerial Alliance of the city.

Oliver Stewart in Flying Squadron.

Oliver Stewart of the Hyde Park church, Chicago, the great temperance leader of the Disciples, is this year connected with the movement known as the "Flying Squadron" and is touring the country in company with Former Governor Handly of Indiana in the interest of national prohibition.

Sunday Schools and Home Missions.

Our Sunday-schools are each year becoming greater factors in the work of the church. This is notably true in many forms of service in the local congregations; it is also increasingly true in all our missionary work. In the last five years the offerings of the Sunday-schools to the American Christian Missionary Society have increased from fifteen to over forty thousand dollars. The one day in the year in which the Sunday-schools as schools are asked to give to home missions is the Sunday before Thanksgiving. This day has been set apart thus for twenty-five years. All the Disciple schools are urged to send their offerings to the American Christian Missionary Society, Carew Building, Cincinati, Ohio. A special exercise has been prepared setting forth this work. Copies will be sent free upon request. Address R. M. Hopkins, Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

In and Around Chicago

The ministers of Chicago of the various denominations will hold a union meeting in the Y. M. C. A. on November 30, at which Rev. D. N. Furnajieff, pastor of the Evangelical Church, Sofia, Bulgaria, and president of the Bulgarian Evangelical Society, will speak. He has been brought to America to promote friendly relations with the foreign students. He also gives inside history with regard to the present European war. He is a graduate of Princeton University of this country and speaks English perfectly.

William Campbell, the only surviving son of Alexander Campbell, whose home is in Wellsburg, W. Va., will spend the winter with his son, Argyle, in Evanston. Mr. Campbell is now well advanced in years but is still regular in attendance at the church.

A club of twelve ladies with social connections on the North Shore have been organized for the study of the Bible and they have engaged Dr. Willett through the Extension Department of the University of Chicago to appear before them every two weeks this winter for one of his Bible lectures.

W. C. Hull, who has been for the past year pastor of the Douglas Park Church, has resigned to return to California. Under his ministry the Douglas Park Church has prospered.

The Memorial Church has issued a call to Dr. H. L. Willett to return to the pastorate of that church. No answer has been made by Dr. Willett at present writing.

The meeting held at West Pullman Church, Chas. O. Lee, pastor, in which C. G. Kindred, of Englewood, preached, resulted in three additions. There have been two more since the meeting closed.

Chas. O. Lee read before the Ministers' meeting on Nov. 9 on the subject, "The Ethics of Alexander Campbell." The address showed that the interests of this great leader were not simply doctrinal but ethical as well, with many foregleams of the modern attitude.

The Sunday-school reports of the Chicago group are printed every week in the parish paper of the Chicago Heights Church and reach all Chicago pastors and superintendents before they are a week old. The total attendance of the group for the past month has run well above 3,000 every Sunday.

Dr. E. S. Ames has a class of fifteen in "The Psychology of Religion" which meets in the business district of Chicago in connection with University College, a form of university extension work.

Pastor Has Appendicitis.

Claude Harmon, a student in the University of Washington and pastor of the Tacoma church has been taken ill with appendicitis and has undergone an operation at his home while in a critical condition. At the last report, he was doing nicely. His father, Judge U. E. Harmon, is counsel for the Western Washington Christian Missionary Society.

W. C. Pearce on Pacific Coast.

W. C. Pearce, associate general secretary of the International Sunday-school association, and known throughout the brotherhood as a loyal Disciple, is now speaking on the Pacific Coast and appeared recently at the King county convention in Western Washington. The reports indicate that his work is well received everywhere. He is a member of the Englewood church, Chicago.

Drake Gets New Flag-pole.

A. G. Downing, one of the good friends of Drake and a member of the board of trustees, recently gave a flag-pole to the university. It was dedicated October 29, with an address by Prof. O. B. Clark on "The New Meaning of the Flag" and a poem by Prof. Smith, written for the occasion, "The Flag-pole with the Stars and Stripes," was read by Prof. Evans, of the department of Public Speaking.

Social Building Used.

The church at Warren, Ohio, has erected at a cost of $45,000, a building to be used for the social uses of the community. It is equipped with parlors, social rooms, retiring rooms, dining hall and kitchen. The church board at Warren has passed a resolution strictly prohibiting the use of the church auditorium for any other than the purposes of worship, believing that this room should keep about it only the associations that pertain to prayer and the preaching of the word.

Severance Has New Building.

Chancellor Oeschger of Cotner University dedicated a new building at Severance, Kans., on October 26. The people stayed at the church all day, meals being served both at noon and in the evening. The building cost $7,500 and $3,500 was raised during the day which was more than enough to provide for the indebtedness. A. J. Pirtle is the pastor.

Minister Retires.

Frank M. Bare was for several years pastor at Phoenix, Arizona, but has returned to Mesa of that state. He has also had a pastorate at Williams, Ariz . He announces that he intends to retire from the ministry.

A. B. Philputt Reviews Novel.

The popular pastor of the Central Church of Indianapolis, gave a book review before a community meeting in a branch building of the public library of Indianapolis recently. He selected Churchill's "Inside the Cup." Mr. Philputt gave an outline of the story. He said that the reform advocated by the preacher hero could have been better accomplished by less violence and more tactful methods, although the motives of the preacher hero to make the church a more active force for social justice and community uplift were highly commendable. The speaker said the church should frown on dishonest business methods. He said that great good can be accomplished through properly organized charity and that church members should participate in movements for the advancement of social and industrial betterment.

Simultaneous Campaign at Battle Creek.

Churches of the various denominations at Battle Creek, Mich., have agreed to conduct a simultaneous evangelistic campaign in their city with services in each church. The special services are to last for two weeks. M. H. Garrard is the pastor of our church and he will be assisted by a singer from Larned, Kans., A. L. Haley.

Benefit for Old People.

Our people in St. Louis held a mass meeting at the Planters' Hotel to arrange for a flower day for the benefit of the Old People's home in that city. A part of the plan is to provide flowers for the old people themselves but the larger project involves the raising of funds for the institution.

Fresno Church Has Branch.

The church at Fresno, Cal., has purchased some property from the Methodists and has established a mission in another section of the city, supervision of which will be the special work of the assistant to Dr. Breeden who is being selected. The Sunday-school of the new mission already has an attendance of 200.

Pastor Celebrates Anniversary.

The sixth anniversary of the pastorate of Charles R. Oakley was celebrated at Mansfield, Ohio, recently. It is the longest pastorate the church has ever had. The past year has been one of special prosperity. There have been seventy-seven baptisms and sixty other additions. The congregation has had a net gain in membership of 112. The net gain in six years has been nearly four hundred and the present membership of the church is 900. The church gave to missions last year twelve hundred dollars which was a gain of two hundred over last year.

Minister Suffers Misfortune.

W. A. Howard, who is a student at Valparaiso University, was starting away to his preaching appointment at Hobart, Ind., recently when he was taken ill with typhoid fever. As he was acting peculiarly he was put in jail by ignorant officials. Reports were spread that were damaging to his character. He was rescued by the church people at Valparaiso and is now being carefully treated at the Christian Hospital of Valparaiso.

Churches Come Together.

The church at Red Cloud, Neb., sent out a call to its membership for a special meeting on October 26, at which time they were to discuss union with the local Congregational church in order that the Christian people of the community might become a stronger and more uplifting influence in the community.

New California Secretary.

The state of California is so large that it has two state organizations. North California has just called Ellis Purlee to be state secretary and Bible-school superintendent. He is to go to the First Church in San Francisco at once where a crisis confronts us. Afterwards he is to tour his section of the state for funds. He will have headquarters at Alameda.

Pushing New Church.

The church at Hillsboro, Ohio, is busy with a new building which is being pushed with great vigor to get it ready for an early dedication. With fair weather, it will soon be done.

C. W. B. M. Has Contest.

The C. W. B. M. auxiliary at Hanford, Cal., has arranged for a unique missionary drill. It is arranged on the plan of the old time spelling bee. The missionaries' names will be announced one by one and the persons contesting will be required to give the name of the station. A prize of a very old gold coin is to be given by the leader with the result that all the ladies in this auxiliary are studying the annual reports of the society with unusual zeal.

Dedications.

Alvadore, Ore., Fern Ridge church, Nov. 8.

Minister at Press Club.

The newspaper men got some preaching at their common place of meeting at the Press Club of South Bend, Ind., on November 2. The new minister of the First Church, J. M. Alexander, spoke to the quill-drivers from a layman's point of view. This is but one of the many ways in which Mr. Alexander is making himself at home in his new situation.

New Church at Lonoke.

Last February Evangelist Clark organized a new church at Lonoke, Ark. The church was small but it went right to work. A hall was secured for a meeting place. In August W. L. Harris, of Kansas City, held a meeting for them, with thirty-six accessions. The church has now called a pastor and has purchased two well-located lots. A building committee has been appointed and they will submit plans for a new building at an early date. There is every reason to believe this church will go right forward.

Men Paint Church.

A number of male members of the church at Lawrence, Kans., volunteered to paint the church building. Even the roof was given a new coat. The women of the congregation served a luncheon for the workmen at the noon hour.

Five Years at Wichita.

Walter Scott Priest celebrated five years of service at Wichita, Kans., on November 1. During this five years, a mortgage on the church building of $4,000 was paid off. The north end mission has been organized into a church. The daughter church now has 500 members. Later a mission was constituted in the west end, and a building has been erected at a cost of $5,000. This church now has 160 members and is self-supporting. The Central Church has built an annex to its building costing $5,000. In this annex is a matrimonial parlor and an office. Mr. Priest has received 851 new members into the church in this period of whom 307 were baptized. He has had 274 weddings and 210 funerals. Three years ago the church gave him a Buick roadster to use in his pastoral work. The church has recently extended him a call to remain for another five-year period.

Churches Fight Neighborhood Saloons.

In residential territory on the East Side in Kansas City, two neighborhood saloons menaced the good name of the community. The report went abroad that the churches of the neighborhood were not in sympathy with the efforts of the East Side Betterment League. In the Jackson Avenue church and in other neighborhood churches action was taken on November 1, without a dissenting vote, which supported the reform work. It is believed that the police commissioners of Kansas City will rid the neighborhood of the menace.

Assistant for Dr. Breeden.

On account of the recent illness of Dr. H. O. Breeden at Fresno, Cal., the church has decided to call an assistant to help out in the parish activities. Shirley Shaw held this position last year. Candidates for the position are under consideration at the present time.

Ups and Downs of a Church.

The First Church of Carthage, N. Y., was organized in 1855, with seventeen charter members. The church prospered until 1884 when the building was destroyed by fire. The edifice was never rebuilt and the lot was sold. Nothing further was done until 1906 at which time Mr. Squires was called as pastor. This work soon ceased and nothing more was done until 1912 at which time evangelistic meetings were held. The new church was organized in 1913 with twenty-one members. Henry W. Gair of Buffalo, N. Y., became pastor here in March, 1914. A lot was purchased and a building was started immediately. The new building was dedicated on November 1. S. C. Brock will hold a two-weeks' meeting following the dedication. The new building will seat 200 people.

Champaign Women Help War Victims.

The Woman's Club of Champaign met in our University Place church recently for a luncheon. A purely social function turned into a meeting for helping the war victims and a considerable sum of money was raised for this purpose.

Mrs. Weaver Tells Stories.

Mrs. Gustine Courson Weaver, who is known to Disciples through her missionary service in Japan in company with her husband, Clifford Weaver, is acquiring a wide reputation through her work with children. She has organized the Story-Tellers League with fifty members in which is a company of people who agree to work at the task of telling stories to children. Mrs. Weaver is president of the organization. Mrs. Weaver was the Teller of Noontide Stories at Columbia University Library on September 15, and also appeared in the same role at the annual flower festival for children given by Mrs. Helen Gould Shephard at Lyndhurst-on-Hudson, September 16. Mrs. Weaver is still interested in missionary work and is the president of the Woman's Missionary Social Union of Texarkana, Texas, where she lives.

Rev. Walter Scott Priest, Who has Just Closed His Fifth Year at Wichita, Kans.

Ministerial Relief Goes Forward.

The Board of Ministerial Relief of the Disciples is making progress. They had a gain in receipts last year of $5,728.29. In October of the new year, the receipts were 50 per cent greater than in October of last year. Four new names have been added to the pension roll the past month, making a total of living pensioners of 115.

Sunday-school Evangelism.

Central School at Youngstown, Ohio, used the month of September to fill up their ranks, which had been depleted during the summer. In October, their energies were devoted to the cause of state-wide prohibition. November is to be evangelistic month. Every teacher in the school is to make a careful list of all people above the Primary Department who are not members of the church. The teachers are to pray for these people daily. The devotional committee of each class is to assist. A part of each lesson period is to be used in presenting the initial things of the work of salvation. From November 22 to 29, there are to be special evangelistic services in the church each evening under the auspices of the Sunday-school with preaching by the pastor. It is hoped that the church may have a great ingathering through these special efforts.

Fellowship in F. W. Allen's Church.

The First Church of Springfield, Ill., is having great audiences under the opening ministry of Frank Walter Allen. One of the significant developments of this pastorate has been the organization of a fellowship class, composed of the young people of the church. The messages of literature, prophecy and of the Nazarene are discussed as they relate themselves to the life of the youth. The class meets under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. at the evening hour. The first Sunday evening of each month, the evening church service relates itself to the needs of the young people. Rabbi Tadesche spoke to the young people on the evening of November 1. There is a program of service and a program of amusement for the class.

Preaches to Young People.

George A. Miller is announcing a series of sermons for young people to be given in Ninth Street church, Washington, D. C., beginning November 1. They organize themselves around the great characters of the Bible. The series is as follows:

"Paul—Preparation for Life."
"Moses—Decision."
"Timothy—Companionship."
"Joseph—Virtue Rewarded."
"Josiah—A Great Purpose."
"David—Making the Most of Life."
"John Mark—Another Chance."
"Ruth—Home Affection."
"Christ—Accomplishment and Influence."

Eight Years at Indianapolis.

Charles M. Fillmore has finished out eight years of service with the Hillside church at Indianapolis. In the morning of the anniversary Sunday, an impressive "Covenant Service" was used which has been compiled by Mr. Fillmore from the scriptures. The church has taken as its motto for this coming year, "Each for all; all for each."

Edward Wilson Tells Stories.

Edward C. Wilson, Fellow in Psychology in Clark University, Worcester, Mass., had charge of telling stories in the parks of Worcester for the months of June, July and August, during which time the Bible stories were told to the thousands of children who visited the parks on Sunday afternoon. There were twelve workers engaged every Sunday and they met each week for training in matter and method, under the tutelage of Mr. Wilson. This work was under the auspices of Mr. Wilson. Mr. Wilson supplied the pulpit recently for Harry Minnick in the First Church in Worcester.

R. M. Hopkins Helps with Cornerstone.

The church at Hagerstown, Md., is building a new Bible-school building in the rear of the present church. Robert M. Hopkins was with them to help lay the cornerstone on November 1. The building is to cost $30,000 and one-third of it is already raised. Mr. Hopkins expounded the ideals of religious education in a modern and convincing way. The pastor, George B. Townsend, spoke congratulating the people upon their liberal giving.

General Convention Chiefs Meet.

While Mr. Chilton was in his meeting at Liberty, Mo., there was a meeting of the heads of the General Convention at Liberty. Robert Graham Frank, pastor of the local church and secretary of the General Convention, called to his counsel Walter M. White of Cedar Rapids, president of the organization, Col. F. W. Fleming of Kansas City, treasurer, and W. F. Richardson of Kansas City.

Ministers' Children at Transylvania.

Transylvania University is fortunate this year in the evidence that our ministers are loyal to our own educational institutions. There are in this school this fall the children of twenty-five Disciple ministers. Among these are J. V. Collis, Lexington; Gordon Barnes, Richmond; and P. B. Rains, Cincinnati. There are students in the university this year from various parts of the world. Among these are O. E. Lovell, Johannesburg, S. Africa, C. M. Gordon, Melbourne, Australia, and H. E. McMillan, Toronto, Canada. The seniors are carrying canes and the freshmen have green skull caps.

Plant a Church a Year.

The church at Hammond, Ind., has adopted for its motto "Plant a Church a Year." Last year a work was planted at Shelby. This year, the pastor, Chas. J. Sharpe, went to Pence, Ind., and held a meeting. There were 127 additions in the meeting and ninety-eight were baptized. On the nineteenth day of the meeting, $7,000 was raised for a $10,000 building. One of the converts, the founder of the village, gave the village park for a site for the new building. P. J. Lough was called as pastor before the meeting closed.

Becomes Disciple Minister.

R. C. Dillman, who has been six years a minister in another communion has united with the Disciples and identified himself with our church at Lafayette, Ind. He is now preaching for a near-by church at Battle Ground, Ind.

Returns to Former Charge.

J. H. Tiller went to Bloomfield, Mo., fifteen years ago and not finding a church, started a meeting on his own responsibility. At the close of this meeting, they built a church at a cost of $2,500. There were not over twenty members. This year, Mr. Tiller was again chosen minister after an absence of many years. A new church building has just been finished and dedicated. The church now has a membership of 220 and there is every prospect of further progress.

James Egbert Leads Building Project.

The church at Cheney, Washington, has been in a building project the past year under the leadership of the minister, James Egbert. A property worth $15,000 has been acquired. It is just across the street from the new state normal building where every year from fifteen hundred to two thousand school children prepare to teach in different parts of Washington. All the money needed was raised on dedication day. The Church Extension Society carries a small loan on the property.

Wm. J. Frost Becomes Disciple.

Wm. J. Frost of Missouri recently united with the Disciples in a meeting conducted by J. J. Taylor, evangelist. Mr. Frost is a graduate of William Woods College and of the University of Kansas. He has a preaching experience in another communion and is a trained singer, so he gives great promise of usefulness among us.

Oregon Ministers Meet.

The preachers of Oregon who live within a hundred miles of Portland, have organized a fellowship of an unusual sort. The outlying ministers come into Portland once a quarter and the ministers all pool their railroad expenses so that it costs every minister an equal sum, even the Portland ministers taking their share. F. T. Porter of Salem is president of this fellowship and P. C. Heyward is secretary. The secretary recently united with the Disciples from the Seven-day Adventists.

Oregon Ministers Victimized.

A very smooth stranger who has pretended to be hunting for work has secured ten dollar loans from a number of our ministers in Oregon. The Oregon ministers have gained much wisdom from this experience and will not give money to strangers henceforth. They feel that it is their function rather to find work for such individuals and in every way prevent fraud being practiced upon Christian people.

Faithful Women Save the Day.

A group of women in Linden, Tenn., were determined to have a church. They importuned in vain for preaching but finally induced Percy G. Cross to come to Linden and hold a meeting in the courthouse. The men of the households had not shown much interest in the project but the women were ardent personal workers. There were fifty-six additions, forty-four by baptism. A church was organized with ninety members. Over $2,000 dollars was secured for a new church building. Four young men were induced to enter Christian colleges, one to be a minister and one a missionary.

Health First

In buying food articles we must consider several things—economy, results, convenience, reliability; but the most important is Health.

Health means everything. If one gets cheated in buying dresses, shoes or bonnets it is provoking, but the harm is chiefly loss of money. In buying food articles, if imitations or poor stuffs are supplied, there is a loss of money and probably an injury to health also; and good health is beyond price.

Remember these facts when buying baking powder.

Evangelists Fear Ecclesiasticism.

The new National Association of Evangelists has fallen under the criticism of some of the fraternity on account of the use of the term "accredited evangelist." The Association, through its officers disclaims any purpose to exercise any ecclesiastical authority over the members. "Accredited" means of good reputation.

Pittsburgh Ministers.

The ministers of larger Pittsburgh have voted to discontinue some of their meetings. They will meet but twice a month henceforth. The first meeting in the month will be held with the First Church, North Side. On the last meeting of the month, they will meet with the United and Social Auxiliaries at the several churches.

An Active Church.

The church at Lebanon, Ind., of which A. L. Ward is pastor, has a number of very interesting activities. Recently there was organized a company of boys called "The Knights of the Holy Cross." An evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Chas. H. Winders of Irvington church, Indianapolis, began November 9. Wallace Tuttle, of Columbus, will lead the music. The sermon topics for October 25, were "A Business Man at Prayer" and "The Dismissed Christ."

Special Service for Men.

The Memorial church at Rock Island, Ill., arranged a special service for men on the evening of October 25. This service is to be followed by others for a period of a month. The men are invited to the church for a social half-hour before the service. They then march into the church together and sit in specially assigned seats. The minister, M. E. Chatley, at the first of these special services, took the topic, "Men's Relation to their Church." A number of men in the church membership and outside of it had been requested to write out their opinions on the topic beforehand and excerpts from these letters were read during the sermon. The second sermon in the series will be on the topic, "Men and Their Country."

Minister's Son Becomes Minister.

Frank Tinder, son of F. M. Tinder, pastor of the church at Lancaster, Ky., and formerly pastor at Carlisle, preached his first sermon at the church at Stony Creek, near Louisville, November 1. Mr. Tinder, Jr., is a student at the Bible College of Transylvania University at Lexington and is preparing to make himself efficient in following his father's calling.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

H. C. Hobgood reports having traveled 200 miles or more overland, and sixty miles by canoe in Africa. He baptized twelve at Ifoku, fourteen at Iyete, and twenty-two at Bongale during August. Bongale is 275 miles by river from Lotumbe on the way to Tomba, where a great host of inquirers are waiting. This is the place where R. Ray Eldred died about a year ago.

Herbert Smith on the Congo reports that the missionaries have plenty to eat, but they cannot get money. He states that there is no need of any anxiety on the part of the people at home about the missionaries. He reports twenty-four baptisms at Lotumbe July 12. Part of these walked 100 miles to be baptized and then walked home.

Dr. Shelton and Dr. Hardy are at Batang, and Mr. and Mrs. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. Ogden expected to leave Tatsienlu, September 3. They hoped to reach Batang in about thirty days from that time. Dr. Shelton finds things in better shape in Batang than he had dared to hope. The total loss of lumber and brick and medical and household effects was about $1,440.

During the year David Rioch and family, P. A. Sherman and wife, and Miss Josepha Franklin and Miss Mary L. Clarke of India will all return home on their furlough.

CHRIST CRUCIFIED.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 29.

Mark 15:21-41; Luke 23:39-43.

Memory Verses, 25-27.

Golden Text.—Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. Isa. 53-4.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(22) And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull. (23) And they offered him wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not. (24) And they crucify him, and part his garments among them, casting lots upon them, what each should take. (25) And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. (26) And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. (27) And with him they crucify two robbers; one on his right hand, and one on his left. (29) And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ha! thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, (30) save thyself, and come down from the cross. (31) In like manner also the chief priests mocking him among themselves with the scribes said, He saved others; himself he cannot save. (32) Let the Christ, the King of Israel, now come down from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reproached him.

(33) And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. (34) And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, E-lo-i, E-lo-i, la-ma sa-bach-tha-ni? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? (35) And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elijah. (36) And one ran, and filling a sponge full of vinegar, put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let be: let us see whether Elijah cometh to take him down. (37) And Jesus uttered a loud voice, and gave up the ghost.

Verse By Verse.

(From Tarbell's Teachers' Guide.)

v. 22-23. The place of a skull. We call the knoll Calvary, from the Latin word Calvaris which means a skull.—They offered him. It was customary to give something to stupefy one about to be crucified.—He received it not. Matthew says that he tasted it and would not take it because he knew it was meant to stupefy him. And he had work yet to do, Lk. 23:39-43; Jn. 19:26-27.

v. 24. Casting lots upon them. Ps. 22:18. There were the headdress, the shoes, the outer garment, and the girdle, one article for each, and then the ownership of the seamless inner garment would be determined by lot. —What each should take. The garments were the perquisites of the executioners. John 19:25-27, adds here Jesus' words to John and to his mother.

v. 25. They crucified him. See his words at this time, Lk. 23:24. John 19:14 says it was the sixth hour.

v. 26-27. Was written. In Hebrew, Latin and Greek, Jn. 19:20.—Many ancient authorities insert verse 28: And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was reckoned with the transgressors. See Lk. 22:37, RVm.

v. 29-31. They that passed by railed on him. Mocked him. "When our own patriot Defoe was pilloried, the people disappointed his judges by offering him flowers and greeting him with cheers instead of hailing him with mockery; but no such reversal of his unjust sentence awaited our Lord." (Dods).—Thou that destroyeth . . . three days. Or, sanctuary, RVm. See Mt. 26:61. — Himself he cannot save. Or, can he not save himself? RVm. "Of course not: he that will save others cannot save himself!" (Robertson).

v. 33. There was darkness over the whole land. Or, earth, RVm. "It seems only in accordance with the Evangelic narrative to regard the occurrence of the event as supernatural while the event itself might have been brought about by natural causes; and among these we must call special attention to the earthquake in which this darkness terminated. For it is a well known phenomenon that such darkness frequently precedes earthquakes. The language of the Evangelists seems to imply that this darkness extended, not only over the land of Israel, but over the habited earth. The expression must, of course, not be pressed to its full literality, but explained that many thought it extended far beyond Judea and to other lands" (Edersheim).—When the sixth hour was come . . . until the ninth hour. From twelve noon till three p. m.

v. 34. Eloi, Eloi, lama, Sabachthani. A quotation from Ps. 22:1.—Why hast thou forsaken me? Or, why didst thou forsake me? RVm.—"He forsaken! Who can comprehend it?" (Luther). "Separation from God is the true death, the wages of sin; and in that dread hour he bore in his own consciousness the uttermost of its penalty," suggests Dr. Maclaren. "Jesus uttered Ps. 22:1: he had meditated on the whole Psalm as foreshadowing his experience," argues Dr. Horton. "If on the cross he was consciously quoting the Psalm of the suffering Messiah, and the first verse was overheard, we are relieved of the difficulty which some have found in the thought that even for a moment Jesus felt forsaken by God. But on the other hand, this difficulty often disappears, and becomes the deepest well of comfort, in the dark hours of the Christian's experience."

v. 37. And Jesus uttered a loud voice. Crying with a loud voice, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," Lk. 23:46.—And gave up the ghost. There is but one word in the Greek, expired. The word ghost originally meant breath, mind, and later came to mean spirit.

Christ's Cross—and Ours

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

There has been much philosophy of the cross. Here is a lesson not to theologize about but to put into real life. The cross has its firm place. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission," seems to be true of all reform and of all vicarious sacrifice. The mother, the patriot, the social reformer, the preacher of the Gospel, the herald of Christ on foreign fields, the slum preacher, the good friend, the home-maker, the church builder, the evangelist, all ought to know, all must know the way of the cross.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

Could Jesus have saved the world without the experience of the cross? No. President Eliot, when head of Harvard, used to say that you could not make a bad young man good by threatening him nor by softly passing over his faults. The most powerful appeal that could be made to him was to show him his sins in terms of the suffering of some one whom he loved. Did his sin cause his mother, his father, his sweetheart deep and unjust suffering—that or nothing would turn him from his selfish way. We must see our sins in terms of Jesus' suffering. Every selfish sin of mine wounds the heart of my Master, crucifies him anew. This is not mysticism. This is simple truth.

The cross is that upon which Jesus laid down his life for the world. Your cross is that upon which you lay down your life for society. It is your life work. You have no business doing anything which does not afford you that opportunity. Softness, ease, luxury, are the bane of modern life. Are you conscious of laying down your life for men?

PROSPERITY.

I am tired of the doctrine of the "Full Dinner Pail." We worship at the shrine of "Prosperity." There is not one man in a thousand who can stand it. I tell you prosperity rots the fiber of the soul. It turns our heads and makes us insolent. It sets us up above our fellows and ministers to our vanity. The cotton of comfort stops our ears and we no longer hear the moans in the wind-swept street. Prosperity even makes a church self-sufficient. Prosperity kills personal work. Prosperity makes ministers lazy. Prosperity makes the service chilly. No, the best thing in the world is not prosperity as such. When people are struggling to become they are pious and sympathetic, but when they arrive they are insolent and cold. The doctrine of the cross and the doctrine of fat, sleek, selfish prosperity have nothing in common.

INCOMES.

You cannot measure men by incomes. The only accurate measure is outgo. It would be interesting to get a look into the heavenly Bradstreet or Dun. How are men rated by God? How much confidence can you place in this man in heavenly dealings? Can you trust him? What are his spiritual assets? What his resources of sympathy? What is his outgo? That is the only way God rates a man. In what proportion does he lay down his life? I have no use for a lazy faith which sings in selfish ecstasy, "Jesus Paid It All." You have your cross also. I like much better that fine hymn of the church, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone?" or, "Must I be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease?" And then those splendid verses:

> Are there no foes for me to face?
> Must I not stem the flood?
> Is this vile world a friend to grace
> To help me on to God?
>
> Sure I must fight if I would reign;
> Increase my courage, Lord;
> I'll bear the cross, endure the pain,
> Supported by Thy word.

GRENFELL.

I read yesterday those matchless words which Dr. Grenfell recently uttered before the students at Harvard and which are said to have made the greatest impression since the voice of Philipps Brooks wrought its spell in that chapel. They were simple words. He defined faith as being willing to invest your all in Christ. Twenty-six years before, he had done it and it had worked. As a surgeon he said that if a certain remedy had worked for twenty-six years and always with the same good results he would have confidence, but this remedy had worked for more than nineteen hundred years. Had it been a cross? Those who carry crosses do not talk much about it. Livingstone did not, Jesus did not, Grenfell does not. Mrs. Montgomery, just back from a trip in the Orient, says that she has to come back to fashionable American churches and among overdressed women to hear the talk of "Sacrifice." Sacrifice—Great God, what do we know about it? What right have we to talk about the cross? We who bow in dust before the shrine of prosperity? Pampered, coddled, soft and flabby children in the protected nursery of selfish ease! Let us stop talking!

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 25.

Reasons for Thankfulness. 2 Cor. 9:15; 1 Pet. 2:21-25; 2 Cor. 4:15-18.

Reason is less likely to create the thankful spirit than the thankful spirit is to discover reasons for its existence. There are reasons, of course, but these can all be enlisted on the side of pessimism if we believe that everything is going to the bad. The world does not always move to suit us. Mind is not master of all that we see. The ways of the Supreme Being are not always our ways. We become perplexed and we rebel unless we enlarge our interests and identify ourselves with the more comprehensive movements of history and with the ongoing of nature.

UNKNOWN BENEFACTORS.

The soldiers of the Civil War on their memorial day pay honor to the unknown dead. Many of these dead are known to those who remain but their graves are unmarked. There is also the desire to honor the men whose names are forgotten, whose particular achievements are passed over in silence by the historian. The nation owes much to these men. And we owe much to nameless benefactors. We are loud in our praises of conspicuous men. We owe less to the great ones of history than we owe to the millions of whom we have never heard. Our imaginations have been so feeble that we have been unable to picture in any adequate way the work of these obscure millions. The historians and the poets and painters have glorified the exceptional man. We must now honor the man who stands in his place among his fellows and does his share of the work as the others are doing theirs.

DISCONTENT.

We have reasons to be thankful because of the growing discontent of the world. Men are unwilling to be driven like slaves. They do not receive kindly the admonition that they should be content with such things as they have when they know that they are toiling to support in luxury and idleness the men and women who preach contentment to them. We are dissatisfied with a religion that is only partly Christian. The paganism and the pre-scientific theories of nature that are offered to us as essential parts of Christianity we are loath to accept. We may easily go too far and reject a practice or a belief because it is distasteful to us when a candid examination of it would lead us to see its usefulness.

TOLERATION.

Dr. Lyman Abbott says that when he was preparing for the Christian ministry his father gave him this counsel concerning sectarian differences and Christian unity: "I am convinced that nine-tenths of the controversies which have agitated the Christian world have been controversies about words, and I rather think the other tenth has been also." Dr. Abbott says he did not concur in his father's judgment at the time but that experience has convinced him that it is almost literally true. Others are coming to the same conclusion. There are differences, but they are fewer than sectarian leaders would have us believe. The world is losing interest in controversies which once held its attention. We think we have reason to believe in the sincerity and intelligence of religious men. We honor our own beliefs but we recognize our limitations and we try to see the value in the experience of other men. The toleration of the present is not indifference. For some it is, we may admit, but for the majority we may believe that it is a wider and better faith.

Ps. 48:11; 50:14; 106:1; Ecc. 7:14; Joel 2:26; Rom. 2:4; Eph. 5:19-20; Phil. 4:6; Col. 1:12; 2:7; 3:15-17; Rev. 5:9-10; 7:9-12; 15:3-4; 19:1.

A Story With a Moral

Here is a story which came to us at the Atlanta Convention. It is a story worth reading, especially if you are interested in higher ideals for Sunday Schools in general and in particular for your school.

A CERTAIN Sunday-school of the Southland, in one of the largest and best known churches of the brotherhood of Disciples, determined last summer to adopt graded literature in all its departments. (Previous to this time only the Beginners and Primary Departments were using the Graded Lessons.)

The Director of Religious Education in the school is a graduate of the University of Virginia, and for many years was a teacher in one of the leading educational institutions of the South. He is a ripe scholar, without prejudice and with enthusiasm for high educational ideals—and withal a very practical Sunday-school man.

This educational director called his nineteen teachers together. He said, "We will send for samples of the graded literature produced by our three leading publishers." The teachers agreed upon the plan. The literature was ordered.

When the sample texts arrived, the Director again called together his teachers. "Now," he said, "we will tear off the covers of these Intermediate text books, in all three systems."

"Now," said the Director, "I will read to you a sample lesson from each of these Intermediate texts. I will choose corresponding lessons in each of the texts. I want you to listen to the reading from the three systems of literature, weigh each carefully, then tell me which you think is best adapted to the educational work we are doing for your children and mine."

The reading began. The chapter from System Number One was read. Then from Number Two. Last, from Number Three. The Director went down the line of nineteen teachers, asking each of them which treatment of the lesson would aid him best in training his pupils in the Christian religion. What was the result? Each of the nineteen teachers voted. ALL VOTED without exception for System Number Two.

A second lesson was read by the Director from System Number One, System Number Two, and System Number Three. The same question as before was put to the nineteen teachers. When the teachers had all voted, it was found that they were all again agreed in their preference for System Number Two.

SYSTEM NUMBER TWO WAS THE BETHANY SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

OF COURSE, there was no hesitation on the part of the Religious Director of that Sunday-school and his teachers in making choice of literature for their school.

This story has a moral, and the story is for you, Mr. Pastor, Mr. Superintendent, Mr. Teacher.

Have you made a test of the merits of the various systems of Graded Literature available, before deciding upon the spiritual food that is to go into the character of your young people? Do this, and without delay. January is the nick of time to make a WISE CHOICE. Do not neglect in your examination ANY GOOD SYSTEM published.

Samples of the Bethany System will be sent you for the asking.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

THE CO-OPERATION COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

ANOTHER WAY TO HELP.

The Co-operation Committee is interested in every aspect of The Christian Century's success. Primarily we are called upon to secure gift funds to sustain and promote this enterprise. But the friends of the better type of Christian journalism among the Disciples can do other things in addition to giving money.

We learn by conference with the office of the Disciples Publication Society that this season of the year is the time when the Sunday-schools generally take up the question of their supplies for the next year. It is well-known even by the general public that the publishing of Sunday-school literature, is the backbone of the religious publishing business. Few, if any, weekly religious newspapers are paying propositions. Certainly no national newspaper of the Disciples is by itself a paying proposition. But taken in connection with the publication of books and Sunday-school literature the religious publishing house as a whole may be made to pay a reasonable profit.

We feel therefore that it is the duty of all friends of higher ideals in journalism to bring to the attention of their Sunday-schools the system of literature put out by the Disciples Publication Society. This literature is now used in every school represented by the membership of this committee, and while we take pleasure in testifying as to the enthusiasm with which it is received by our teachers and pupils it is not our intention in this place to shout its praises.

We do feel, however, that the least any pastor or superintendent can do is to examine it. If it is not the best there is we do not believe it should be purchased merely from a sense of loyalty to the Disciples Publication Society.

THE BEST IS NONE TOO GOOD.

Every Sunday-school ought to have the very best that can be found. No literature for the teaching of religion to children and young men and women is too good. And no consideration of denominational loyalty or publisher's preference ought to weigh an ounce when a school is choosing its literature of religious education. The pupil's welfare is the only consideration that should weigh at all.

The committee and its representative, the present writer, have noted with much interest the advertisement appearing in recent issues of The Christian Century [it is found also in this issue on page 4.—Editor] entitled "A Story with a Moral." That superintendent did his simple duty. If he and his teachers had concluded that some other supplies were better than the Bethany System he would have done wrong to purchase the Bethany. But he put the whole matter to a fair test, and that is what every Sunday-school worker ought to do.

MR. CLARK'S LEADERSHIP.

The members of the committee had occasion to come into close contact again and again at the Atlanta Convention with Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark who is the head of the Sunday-school department of the Disciples Publication Society and editor of The Conquest, a paper which he originated not quite a year ago. Mr. Clark received his training in this work in the Christian Publishing Company of St. Louis during Dr. Garrison's regime there. He worked for that house more than five years. He was at one time editor of The Front Rank and there conceived the idea of a weekly paper for adult and young people's classes on quite unique lines. This idea he has been given complete freedom to work out in The Conquest. And if the committee may judge from the fine subscription list already secured to this attractive paper we feel that Mr Clark has proved his editorial genius and his knowledge of what Sunday-schools really want and need.

A GROWING PATRONAGE.

Mr. Clark's work in heading up the Bethany System of lesson literature has been remarkable. The reports examined by the committee show that the patronage of this literature has grown steadily from the beginning, and that it has been due not to any aggressive promotion activities but apparently to the merit of the goods alone. As most readers of these words are aware, the Bethany System is the product of the co-operation of the leading specialists of the Sunday-school world, representing the leading Christian denominations. That the Disciples should have had editorial representation in creating this literature is a matter for which we are all grateful. And now that this marvelous system which, we are told, contains 132 separate periodicals, is complete, we believe it to be a great privilege of our schools to use it.

It seems to be a fine way to practice Christian unity in Sunday-school work, and every Disciple should take heart from the fact that it is possible at last for Christ's people of the various denominations to lay aside sectarian differences and make a body of literature expressing the great non-denominational truths for which Disciples love to stand.

The committee, therefore, hopes that every pastor and superintendent and Sunday-school worker who reads these words will write to Mr. Clark asking for further information about the Bethany System and The Conquest.

700 E. 40th Street, Chicago.
Dear Fellow-Workers:

I hereby agree to give ten dollars a year for five years to the support of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. I will send the first installment before January 1, 1915.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Christ's Churchmen Will Not Let Christ's Work Suffer!

CHRIST'S ENTERPRISES IN THE WORLD FACE TODAY A GRAVE EMERGENCY AND CHRIST'S CHURCHMEN MUST MEET THE CRITICAL HOUR WITH EMERGENCY MEASURES OF LOVE AND LOYALTY AND SACRIFICE.

Conventional charity that divides its alms among unselfish causes from the "small change" of one's purse, or from the safe and easy surplus of one's earnings, or from unexpected "windfalls" or the so-called "velvet" that one picks up in the path of routine business, or even from the tenth of one's income which many devout souls set apart for Christ's work—all such charity should in these searching times be abrogated and replaced by a charity that cuts deep into the flesh of self-indulgence and perhaps into the bone of one's working capital.

This is not the time for Christian-minded men and women to evade Christian duties and burdens by making poor mouths and whining about the uncertain business conditions. It is one of those great moments in Christian history that can be met adequately only by a great faith, a sacrificial faith, that puts one's personal comfort and even one's personal welfare subordinate to the welfare of the enterprises that spring out of the heart of Christ.

It is sanely within the truth to declare that, in this time of world-wide emergency, a Christian who spends money upon selfish luxuries, or wastes it upon unneeded trifles, or hoards it in unreasonable anxiety, should be made to see that he is disloyal to his Lord in the most critical hour of his Lord's need.

The pleadings of stricken Belgium's 7,000,000 sufferers sounding in our ears—

The desperate anxiety of our missionary leaders lest they must call a halt to the far-flung battle line of peaceful Christian conquest—

The mathematically impossible task before our charity organizations of caring for an army of the unemployed from thirty to fifty per cent larger than last year with receipts literally cut in half—

The imminent necessity faced by many local churches for retrenchment and contraction of their activities on behalf of men's souls—

These suggest but a few outstanding emergencies with which lovers of Christ and lovers of mankind are in these extraordinary days confronted.

* * *

There is no way for these emergencies to be met save by emergency measures. No measure is adequate save for Christian men and women prayerfully and gratefully and systematically to reduce their personal expenditures to the minimum of reasonable necessity and to increase their gifts to Christ's enterprises by at least the total amount of such reduction.

It is a time for Christians to do without things!

The hour has struck for the adoption of a policy of sane but strenuous asceticism in every Christian life and every Christian home and every Christian counting room in America.

The ascetic attitude toward life is not a normal, year-in-and-year-out Christian attitude.

Pleasures have their place in human well-being.

Luxuries are by no means always sinful.

And trifles that we could get along without are sometimes truly good to have.

But there are times when Christian ethics prescribes a policy of asceticism. And it must be clear to every live Christian conscience that this present is such a time.

The sincere Christian heart will feel that it is better to suffer oneself than to see Christ's work and Christ's little ones suffer.

Because a man's income has been reduced is no good reason now why he should reduce his gifts. It is a reason why he should cut his expenses, and cut them again and yet again, that he may if possible thereby increase his gifts to Christ.

The times are not bad; they are uncertain. American business has not yet adjusted itself to the new conditions created by the war, though it is slowly and successfully doing so. It is the duty of the Christian business man to be an optimist, not alone in his words but in his deeds; to talk hopefully and to give hopefully, gratefully and with faith.

At this time when friends of The Christian Century are soliciting gifts for it because they believe it to be one of the enterprises doing Christ's work in the world, it is meet and fitting that this paper should lift up its voice on behalf of all Christ's enterprises whose claims appeal to the conscience of his disciples.

Christian colleges must not be crippled by churchmen's parsimony. Christian missions and missionaries at home and abroad must not suffer while we are comfortable.

The orphans and the aged must not be neglected.

Our aged and infirm ministers must not be left in destitution. Retrenchment in the activities of the local church is a sin—a sin personally to be accounted for by every member of the church who insists upon maintaining his own normal scale of comfort in these days of world-wide need.

No, Christ's true churchman will say in his heart, "It is better for me to suffer than for Christ's work to suffer. If there is retrenchment it must begin with me, not with Christ's work. My comfort is not so important as his Kingdom. I will seek first his Kingdom and his righteousness and trust God for my own welfare!"

* * *

America is today a haven of refuge and an earthly paradise! All the rest of the world is in woe and want.

We must share their woe and want. We must share with them by giving directly toward their relief, and by giving with extraordinary devotion to the Christian enterprises which their war has flung into jeopardy.

To go on in our complacent way enjoying our unique and unthreatened prosperity is pagan; it is to act as if we had never known Christ.

The need is unprecedented!

The gifts must therefore be unprecedented!

And the sacrifice must therefore be unprecedented!

Christ's churchmen will not disappoint their Lord in these great days when he stretches forth his compassionate hands appealing for them to have fellowship with him in the new sufferings he is compelled to undergo at the hands of cruel men!

Looking to the Heights

With a Message of Cheer for Oppressed City-Dwellers.

BY CHARLES E. JEFFERSON.

THE human race may be divided into two classes—those who look upward and those who look downward; those who are attracted by the low places, and those who cannot escape the teasing witchery of the mountains. Some men hear upward, just as some men hear downward. The fourth evangelist tells us that when a voice from heaven once spoke to Jesus some of the people who stood near said it thundered; others said that an angel spoke to him. There are souls to whom there are no spirit voices, all they ever hear is physical vibrations.

THE SOUNDS OF THE CITY.

What do you hear, O man, standing in the center of this mighty city with its thousand voices sounding in your ears? One man says, "I hear the snarl and roar of beasts, the growl of greed, the burning hiss of lust, the grunt of satisfaction." Another man says, "I hear many discordant and earth-born noises, but under all and over all I catch the voices of the spirit, voices of faith and hope and heroism and love." One man turns his ear toward the pit, another man attunes his ear to the heights. New York is a wondrously beautiful city to men who lift their eyes to the heights. No matter what street you look down, the eye can run on until it finds a church or a home for the blind or deaf, or poor or aged, or a school, some institution which has been created by the highest forces of the soul. The city is full of the evidences of the visitation of God's Spirit. You descend stairs that look as if they would land you in a cellar, and lo! you are on the heights, in the presence of courage superior to your own, and of self-sacrifice so beautiful that it leaves you awestruck. You enter the dark chamber of a grimy tenement in an alley, and behold, you are face to face with a miracle wrought by the Lord God Almighty in a human heart. You turn a corner in a sodden and sunken section of the city, and lo! you see in a human face the clear shining of the sun of righteousness. You look down a narrow, dingy street, and see the bright eyes of little boys and girls looking toward the heights of that fair land of which youth knows how to dream and instinctively you look there, too. Of course, in our great city there are pools and swamps, dens and pits, black, filthy, sickening and loathsome, but my eyes shall be lifted to the heights and I will think of the great and noble institutions which are sown thickly up and down this island, founded by men and women who feared God and kept his commandments and supported today by the generous gifts and sacrificial labors of those whose hearts God hath touched.

THE BRIGHT SIDE OF CITY LIFE.

I will not deny the depths nor apologize for the valleys or try to convince myself that all is well with the world, but this one thing I will steadfastly do, I will lift up mine eyes to the mountains. I will think of our noble city officials (not the ignoble ones) who in high and difficult places are bearing the burden of public office, rendering, by the honest and capable administration of the department entrusted to their care, a service to the city which money cannot pay for, and which makes us their debtors. I will think of the gentlemanly policemen (not the boorish ones), men who do their duty in the fear of God, men who cannot be bought and who do not know the fear of man. I will think of the policemen who are considerate to strangers and chivalric in assisting women and little children across the crowded and dangerous thoroughfares, and who, by their vigilance and courage and fidelity, make us proud of them and the city. I will think of the capable and patient street car conductors (not the ill-bred and surly ones), who have the instincts of gentlemen and the considerateness of apostles of Christ. I will think of the conductors who watch anxiously, almost like fathers, over the getting in and getting out of little children and who help working women to lift off their heavy bundles and who are tender in their attentions to the crippled and the aged and the blind.

MEN WITH CLEAN HANDS AND PURE HEARTS.

I will lift up mine eyes to the heights. Of all men who have clean hands and a true heart, will I think. I will think of the New York merchants who conduct their business honestly, of the New York politicians who have never yet stooped to an act which has sullied their conscience or tarnished their name; of the New York millionaires who have maintained a simple heart and who live an unostentatious life, of the servant girls who fulfill Paul's high requirement and render their service as unto God. My eyes shall feast upon the heights. I will think of the chauffeurs who are not savages nor murderers, but gentlemen who drive their machines carefully through crowded streets. I will think of the good husbands who love their wives with unwavering fidelity, of the good wives whose love for their husbands death itself cannot quench; of the good fathers who carry their children in the "round tower" of their hearts, of the good mothers whose sacrifice for their children is a beautiful symbol of the sacrifice of God; of the good boys and girls who honor their father and mother up to the high level of God's commandment; of all the good sons and daughters who bear with the infirmities of parents who are aged and minister to them in their weakness and invalidism with the glad patience of saints and with a fullness of affectionate devotion at which even the angels must rejoice.

A CLOUD OF WITNESSES.

I will think of the lawyers who at the sacrifice of larger fees discountenance and prevent litigation, and of the doctors who minister to moneyless sick men and women by day and by night, expecting no reward other than that which God gives to hearts which spend themselves in service to humanity; of the editors who have not written down to the ignorance or prejudice of their worst readers, but who have written up to the level of their best readers; of the teachers who have faithfully instructed the pupils entrusted to them, sowing seed in their minds and hearts which will bring forth harvests to God's glory after the teachers are in their graves; of the bankers who have been scrupulously honest; of the mechanics who have put conscience into their workmanship; of the artisans who have labored with the fidelity and painstaking pride of artists; of the boys and girls in the factories and the great stores, who have done their work well; of the drivers of trucks and big wagons; and the carriers of packages and bundles; and the street sweepers; and the men who use the pick and shovel; and all the tens of thousands of those whom the world calls common laborers, but who are known, each one, to the heart of God and who have been blest by him for some noble deed which they have done this year. I will look over the heads of reprobates and scapegraces of both sexes, and the coarse and foul specimens of degenerate humanity whose blotches and deformities the papers photograph for the delectation of diseased and darkened minds. I will lift mine eyes to the hills, to the tall men and women, to the best in every profession and calling and class; to the summits of society; to the heights of character; to the culminating mountain glories of our twentieth century civilization.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE HILLS.

I object to turning my eyes in the direction of the cowards and the shirks, the weaklings and the workers of iniquity. I am determined to lift mine eyes to the hills where our modern Gideons and Baraks and Samsons are fighting valiantly against tremendous odds, to the mountain where our twentieth century Davids and Samuels by a faith unsurpassed in the olden times are subduing kingdoms, working righteousness, obtaining promises and stopping the mouths of lions. If I can once see myself surrounded by a cloud of this sort of witnesses I can run successfully the race which is set before me, and carry with me a jubilant and a grateful heart.

Let us, then, all with one accord, lift up our eyes to the hills. Having gazed upon the high places of our city, let us look at the mountain peaks of our nation. This is no day to think of Benedict Arnold and Aaron Burr, or of any of the charlatans and loud-mouthed demagogues who have disgraced us in the halls of congress or out of them. Let us lift up our eyes to the mountains. Look at Benjamin Franklin and Samuel Adams and Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson, and Alexander Hamilton, and George Washington overtopping them all. Let your eyes run down the Presidential range with the great Lincoln towering in the center, and while you look up to our immortal dead, do not forget to look at our living immortals.

GREAT MEN PRESENT AND PAST.

We have men today, as true and brave and faithful, as keen of eye and strong in intellect and great in character as any of the men who sway our spirits from their tombs. If any of us have been dejected over what seems to us the degeneracy of political life and action, if we have been dismayed by the presence of political pygmies and shysters, let us today lift up our eyes to the hills. Our Republic is a mountain which can be seen around the world. In every land eyes are lifted toward it, and human hearts thank God for what it stands for in the world. Shame on us if, morbidly intent on the study of the shadows in the valleys, we lose the power of lifting our eyes to the hills!

LIFT UP YOUR EYES TO THE MOUNTAINS.

Let us look to the mountains of the world. The daily press has reminded you from time to time of the marshes and swamp, of the volcanic crevasses and the darksome pits, but today let us lift up our eyes to the mountains. There are many tragedies and wrongs, numerous outrages and national crimes, but these are only valleys which run across the continent of the world's vast life. The men who write books and magazine articles on the miserable condition of the modern world, of the intellectual mediocrity and moral decadence, of its brutality and absence of high ideals, describe accurately what they see, but they do not see enough. They do not see all that there is to see. They search the valleys; they do not lift up their eyes to the hills. The valleys, it is true, are dark and dismal, but the little hills are altogether glorious. Let us think today of how the cause of peace is moving forward in the world, of how the social conscience is growing sensitive to the needs and woes of men, of how philanthropy is getting a warmer heart and dreaming a wider dream, of how the Christian Church, baptized with a new spirit, is taking hold with consecrated and earnest hands of the evils which afflict the hearts and destroy the homes of men. Education is constantly widening the area of its beneficent influence; legislation the world over is becoming increasingly humane; liberty is coming like an angel from God to bless new millions of our race. The nations are coming constantly closer together and international bonds are being multiplied and strengthened. You need not deny the existence of valleys, but it is not right to forget the mountains. Lift up your eyes and look at Persia, and then at Turkey, and then at China, three mountains on whose summits this light of liberty has been playing in a way to startle the mind and dazzle the heart. It is a great day we are living in, and happy the man who has formed the habit of looking to the mountains.

A CURE FOR CYNICISM.

It is when we look to the mountains that we lose something of our peevishness and ardor as critics. The incessant denunciation and interminable fault-finding of certain persons is due to their inability to lift their eyes to the mountains. When men become incorrigibly cynical and meet everything with a sneer it is because they have looked into the gutters and not at the mountains. A flat world cannot be anything but uninteresting, stale and unprofitable. It is only when we look upward that life becomes worth while.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE MOUNTAINS.

Not only do we get reverence from the heights, but also the inspiration of hope. The coming day does not communicate its secret to the valley. It whispers it first to the mountain, and the tallest mountain receives the message first. Only men who lift their eyes to the mountains know really what is coming. The valley men are often honest men, but they do not see much. They cannot because they look in the wrong direction. Only men who lift their eyes to the best things which mortals think and the greatest things which mortals achieve have any rightful claim upon our attention when they attempt to paint the future. He who looks the highest knows best what is going to be.

Man's Dreams Will Yet Come True

BY BRAND WHITLOCK.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the ignorance and all the woe in the world tonight, never before has there been such widespread opportunity for enlightenment, never such widespread comfort, never so much kindness, so much pity for animals, for children, and, above all, never have women been shown such consideration. It needs no very powerful imagination, peering into the shadowy background of human history, to appreciate the tremendous implications of this fact. Indeed, the great feminist movement of our time, a movement which in the histories of mankind centuries hence will be given the sectional mark of the beginning of a new age, is in itself the proof of a great advance, in which the ballot will be the very least important of all the liberties to be won.

With all the complications of this vast and confusing interplay of the forces of this age, the city is inextricably bound by its awful responsibility for so much that is bad, for so much that is good, in our time. And in the cities, now as always, the struggle for liberty will go on. The old leaders will pass, and the new will pass, and pass swiftly, for they are quickly consumed in the stress and heat of the passionate and savage struggle. To them must ever come the fatigue of long drawn opposition, of the repeated and unavailing assaults on the cold, solid and impregnable walls of institutions. In this fatigue they may grow conservative after a while, and they should pray to be spared the acquiescence of the middle years, the base capitulation of age.

TOWARD THE LIGHT.

But always the people remain, pressing onward in a great stream up the slopes, and always somehow toward the light. For the great dream beckons, leads them on, the dream of social harmony always prefigured in human thought as the city. This radiant vision of the city is the oldest dream in the world. All literature is saturated with it. It has been the ideal of human achievement since the day when the men on the plains of Shinar sought to build a city whose towers should reach unto heaven. It was the angelic vision of the mystic on Patmos, the city descending out of heaven and lying foursquare, the city where there was to be no more sorrow nor crying. It has been the goal of civilization down to this hour of the night, when, however vaguely and dimly, the ideal stirs the thousands in this feverish town going about their strange and various businesses, pleasures, devotions, sacrifices, sins. It has been the everlasting dream of humanity. And humanity will continue to struggle for it, to struggle toward it. And some day, somewhere, to the sons of men the dream will come true.

The Parable of the Prodigal Father

BLAKE W. GODFREY, IN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A CERTAIN man had two sons; and the younger of them said to his father, "Father, give me the portion of thy time, and thy attention, and thy companionship, and thy counsel which falleth to me."

And he divided unto them his living in that he paid the boy's bills, and sent him to a select preparatory school, and to dancing school, and to college and tried to believe that he was doing his full duty by the boy.

And not many days after, the father gathered all his interests and aspirations and ambitions and took his journey into a far country, into a land of stocks and bonds and securities and other things which do not interest a boy; and there he wasted his precious opportunity of being a chum to his own son.

And when he had spent the very best of his life and had gained money but had failed to find satisfaction, there arose a mighty famine in his heart; and he began to be in want of sympathy and real companionship.

And he went and joined himself to one of the clubs of that country; and they elected him chairman of the House Committee and president of the club and sent him to congress. And he would fain have satisfied himself with the husks that other men did eat and no man gave unto him any real friendship.

But when he came to himself, he said, "How many men of my acquaintance have boys whom they understand and who understand them, who talk about their boys and associate with their boys and seem perfectly happy in the comradeship of their sons, and I perish here with heart hunger! I will arise and go to my son, and will say unto him, "Son, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called thy father; make me as one of thy acquaintances."

And he arose and came to his son. But while he was yet afar off, his son saw him and was moved with astonishment, and instead of running and falling on his neck, he drew back and was ill at ease.

And the father said unto him, "Son, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight: I am no more worthy to be called thy father. Forgive me now and let me be your friend."

But the son said, "Not so. I wish it were possible, but it is too late. There was a time when I wanted to know things, when I wanted companionship and counsel, but you were too busy. I got the information, and I got the companionship; but I got the wrong kind and now, alas, I am wrecked in soul and in body and there is nothing you can do for me. It is too late, too late, too late."

Light in Mexican Darkness

Story of the Work of the People's Institute, Piedras Negras, Mexico.

BY JASPER T. MOSES.

A MESSAGE of hope and of opportunity comes from the Mexican border at this time when the average outsider can see little hope for the constructive work of civilization in the land of the Aztecs. In spite of the turmoil of revolution and counter-revolution, the work of the People's Institute, an American missionary enterprise at Piedras Negras, has been making remarkable strides, and has had a widespread influence among the leaders of the Constitutionalist party throughout Mexico.

The man who has made this institution and has imparted to it so much of his own spirit of energy and of service is Samuel Guy Inman, a Columbia graduate,

Rev. S. G. Inman, Director People's Institute, Piedras Negras, Mexico.

for a time assistant pastor of the Central Church of the Disciples of Christ in New York City, and later minister of the Tabernacle Church in Fort Worth, Texas. Though Mr. Inman has seen barely a decade of service on the Mexican field, he is probably today better known among the leaders of Mexican affairs than any other representative of American Protestantism. This is due to his intense enthusiasm and tireless persistence in his chosen work, to the unconventionality of his methods, and to the fact that he was thrown into a most strategic position and was more than equal to the demands which it made upon him.

MEXICAN LEADERS ENLISTED.

At a time when we are repeatedly assured that the Yankee cannot understand the Latin, that the two civilizations have no common points, it is heartening to know of an institution frankly representative of American Protestantism that has touched helpfully and sympathetically scores of the leaders of Mexican politics, has enlisted their hearty co-operation, and won from them words of high praise and gratitude.

Many of the younger workers for the Constitutionalist cause are frank to acknowledge that they received much of their inspiration to work for the political betterment of Mexico from their contact with the People's Institute. Here they found the incentive to idealism, to seek justice for all no matter what the cost, that had been lacking in their former sordid lives. Not least of the service which Mr. Inman has been able to accomplish through the institution at Piedras Negras has been the interpretation of American civilization and ideals to the minds of Mexican leaders made receptive by their appreciation of his helpfulness to them and their people.

After all, Mr. Inman might have lost the great opportunity that came to him had he been content to peg away along the conventional lines that missionary work has assumed in Mexico for the past third of a century. For years the tragedy of Protestant effort in Mexico has been that its message scarcely touched the upper classes.

BEGINNING OF MR. INMAN'S WORK.

A greatly needed work has been done in educating and evangelizing thousands of the lower class. Many have thus risen from the very bottom to places of comparative influence in official and educational ranks, and some able native leaders of the church have been developed. So encouraging has been this feature of the work, that most missionaries and boards have felt that their program of educating a middle class for Mexico out of the dregs of her populace was justified by the results; and they have practically neglected reaching after the upper stratum which has always seemed so impervious to the evangelical message.

Going to Monterey in 1905, Guy Inman, as his friends call him, was put in charge of the evangelistic work of the Disciples of Christ for the city with several Mexican assistants. After being on the ground only a year, he managed one of the most successful revival campaigns ever held in the country. But all the time Mr. Inman kept feeling that something was lacking. He made friends here and there with intelligent and observing Mexicans, for he is one who can do this readily. The heart-to-heart, man-to-man way in which he put his religious message to these men seemed to carry conviction; but they would never do more than agree politely and somewhat wistfully to all that was said, refusing to commit themselves further when pressed for action.

It seemed that all the traditions of Mexican Protestantism isolated it from the upper classes with their social and religious conservatism. It became evident to Mr. Inman that the same methods that had been fairly successful in reaching the peon would not do for those who felt themselves inhabitants of a vastly superior realm—republican pratings about the equality of man to the contrary notwithstanding. A fresh start in a new environment was needed where the Christian message could be put on a higher plane, and not associated in the popular mind with the popular classes alone. Indeed the distinctively religious side of the work was not to be made obtrusively prominent in the beginning of this experiment.

In 1909 the Inmans were transferred from Monterey to Piedras Negras, the border town opposite Eagle Pass, Texas. This is a city of 10,000 inhabitants, the terminus of the Mexican International Railway, and the center of a group of coal mining towns. The Disciples' mission had no work in Piedras Negras, and the former station of another board there had been practically abandoned. It was not at first planned that Mr. Inman should devote much time to the local field, as he had been given the oversight of a group of native ministers and churches that had to be visited regularly from Piedras Negras as a convenient center. Instead of installing his family in an American built cottage in one of the suburbs inhabited by railway officials to enjoy the congenial society of their compatriots, Mr. Inman rented a native dwelling on the main plaza of the town. In the front room he installed his personal library, a couple of reading tables with chairs, and a case of current magazines and newspapers in Spanish, and opened the first free public reading room in Piedras Negras.

A DEBATING CLUB ORGANIZED.

One by one, young men of the town dropped into the reading room, incredulous at first that such a commodity could possibly be offered "free, gratis, for nothing." Some of the leading professional men were first attracted by the musical evenings given by Mrs. Inman. The first organized work was a debating club, which was very successful, and developed into a series of public moral conferences held in the Municipal Theater with the patronage of the city officials and other prominent men of the place. These public conferences were held on Sunday and drew large crowds. The regimental band furnished music, and the stage bore an imposing array of local dignitaries at each of these occasions. The speakers were usually earnest young Mexicans whose interest in the matters under discussion had been aroused by Mr. Inman and the literature he had recommended at the reading room. One of the conferences was on "Gambling," and resulted in so arousing public sentiment that the pre-Lenten gambling fair of the town, which paid considerable license money and was an old-established custom in Piedras Negras, was abolished.

The People's Institute.

SOCIAL SERVICE AT THE INSTITUTE.

Naturally so successful a work made enemies as well as friends. The leader of the opposition was the parish priest who began to hold forth to his congregation almost weekly with tirades of abuse against the Inmans and their work. He went so far as to threaten excommunication against any who visited the reading room; and by a similar threat against the woman who owned the property occupied by the mission, secured her refusal to renew the lease at the end of the first year's occupancy. It was impossible to rent another house, and Mr. Inman was forced to institute a building campaign or abandon the work. Through influential Mexican friends splendid lots, fronting the Custom House and at the corner of the main plaza were secured at a bargain. Ten thousand dollars for the building was raised largely in Texas by the personal solicitation of Mr. Inman. At the cornerstone laying high officials of the city and state were present, and the governor ot Coahuila sent his personal representative to the dedicatory exercises.

The very name of the new institution, "The People's Institute" struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the better element of the city. Fortunately, Mr. Inman has the rare gift of getting other people to work, and he soon had an imposing faculty of volunteer teachers for his night school. A gymnasium, game room. reading room and assembly room were features of the new building, whose activities suggested the typical Y. M. C. A. of our smaller American cities. Another idea that appealed to the Mexican love of hospitality and of ceremonious display was the public guest chamber of the Institute, reserved for the entertainment of distinguished and official visitors to the city. Any one who has endured the tortures of the hotel in the average Mexican town can appreciate the obvious side of this; but not all of us would be long-headed enough to foresee the advertising value to the Institute that actually accrued from this scheme. Illustrious Mexicans of all sorts, as well as foreign envoys and savants from China to Argentina were entertained at the Institute in the next few years, and each went on his way spreading the praise of the practical and helpful work that centered there.

MADERO'S TRIUMPH.

In the triumph of the Madero revolution which came soon after the dedication of the new building, several of the men who had served on the faculty and on the advisory board of the Institute were advanced to positions of importance. The newly appointed governor of Coahuila, Don Venustiano Carranza, became a firm friend of the People's Institute, making his first public speech as governor in its auditorium. Under his influence, the state legislature voted a monthly subsidy to the night school work. Governor Carranza remarked to a group at the dining table of the director of the Institute that twenty-five similar institutions scattered throughout Mexico would soon cure her people of the revolution habit.

A significant work of furthering the friendly sentiment between America and Mexico has been carried out in the observance of the national holidays of both countries at the Institute. Thus the higher idealism of both peoples has been set forth, the one to the other. The character of Washington has always appealed strongly to the Mexicans, and the observance of his birthday has become one of the conspicuous annual events in the work at Piedras Negras. Leading citizens of Texas have spoken from time to time in the Institute, helping to show the Mexicans the friendly interest of their northern neighbors.

THE DOWNFALL OF MADERO.

The downfall of Madero and the counter-revolution against Huerta headed by Carranza brought stirring days to the workers of the People's Institute. The approach of the Constitutionalist army left the city practically deserted by the frightened people, after it had been filled with refugees from the advance of the victorious rebels. At this time as at other critical periods in the ebb and flow of the contending armies, the People's Institute became the center of relief work for the famished people. The occupation of the city by Carranza as his provisional capitol threw the Institute strongly into the limelight, as the rebel officers were in the handsome customs house opposite the Institute. The night school work having been abandoned, the building became the recreation center for the soldiers who thronged the town. The latest war bulletins were supplied, Victrola concerts, lectures on themes of the hour and a free clinic were maintained. Leading men from all over Mexico who came to consult with Sr. Carranza used the reading room to while away their otherwise unoccupied time, and became acquainted with the director and the work.

Lic. M. Aguirre Berlanga, of Guadalajara, Civil and Military Secretary State of Jalisco. A splendid type of the younger group of Constitutionalist officials brought under the influence of the People's Institute.

INTRODUCING EMERSON TO MEXICO.

"I have read every word in every paper and magazine you have in your reading room," said a Mexican commercial traveler who was cut off from the South by the destruction of the railway, "and have spent not less than eight hours daily in the room for the past three weeks. I have also read this book through three times. It is the finest thing I ever got hold of. Tell me about this man, Emerson. Where did he learn so much about life? I like these other books, 'Character,' and 'Self Help,' by Smiles, too; but he doesn't get to the bottom of things like Emerson. I think I can get a train out this afternoon; and I want to tell you how much I appreciate this reading room. The only other place I could have spent my time would have been in the saloons; but I haven't been in one since coming here. I shall never forget what I have learned in these three weeks, and I am going to try to follow out what you taught me in those Bible classes. Adios, and may God keep you!"

CARRANZA'S VISITS TO THE INSTITUTE.

The foregoing is only typical of scores of similar testimonies from business and professional men as well as soldiers to their appreciation of the work of the People's Institute during those troubled days. The library and maps were frequently consulted by General Carranza's staff, and in emergencies the director was asked to translate documents that needed immediate attention. The General and his officers paid frequent friendly calls, and were well represented at public meetings as well as at the Easter religious services in the Institute. Through the kindness of the president's family, an abundance of beautiful flowers was provided for Easter decorations in the Institute chapel.

Twice the building of the People's Institute has been enlarged to accommodate its ever-growing work. The latest addition is a one-story stone structure at the rear to house the industrial training work and the free shower baths. Most of the expense of these improvements has been provided for on the field, and by friends who have visited the plant. The recent accession of General Carranza to the presidency, troubled though his tenure seems to be, and the general occupation of office, throughout Mexico by the Constitutionalist party, have brought into great prominence many of the best friends of the People's Institute. Governors, secretaries of state, high army officials, railway superintendents and leaders in all walks of life scattered far and wide have been helpfully touched by its influence. Many of these men are anxious to co-operate in the establishment of similar institutions elsewhere just so soon as Mexico's internal condition will justify it.

IN THE MEXICAN INTERIOR.

Says Mr. Inman in a recent letter, "I took a trip down through the interior a few days ago. Everywhere I found the Catholic churches closed and most of the priests gone from their parishes. When told that a number of the exiled priests and nuns were making their living by waiting on table, Pres. Carranza expressed his satisfaction that at last they had found some way to make an honest livelihood. 'But,' he added, 'we can never approve their return to the confessionals again to take charge of the consciences of our people.' As opposed to this odium expressed for the Romanists, everywhere the people are voicing their new appreciation of Protestantism, and their desire to hear more of its teachings. I have never been the recipient of so many attentions on the train and in other public places as on this little trip. One man who was particularly attentive I was unable to recognize until he told me the name of his boy who used to be a pupil in the Institute while the father was working in the shops in Piedras Negras. Now he is the superintendent of the National Lines

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE SUPREME TASK.

IT is of first importance that any group of Christian people that has attained the estate of a purposeful self-conscious movement should understand its mission, know the causes that have given it a distinctive place in the universal church, and be ready to bear persistent testimony to the truth it holds.

The Disciples are no exception to this principle. Lamenting as they do the unnecessary historical reasons that thrust them forth into the religious world with all the appearance of a denomination, they must still maintain with stout insistence the evil of denominationalism and their purpose not to be involved responsibly in the denominational order.

In this position lies their unique plea and opportunity. On the great common elements of the Christian confession—the lordship of Jesus, the authority of the Scriptures, the divine mission of the Church, and the hope of the life to come—they are at one with all the household of faith. But in their plea for the reunion of Christendom they have a peculiar and timely message.

Many voices there are which are today pleading for the same desired result. But the Disciples constitute the sole body of Christians whose distinguishing affirmation is the sin of division and the duty of unity.

To forget this fact and prove recreant to the obligation is both an error in the estimate of values and a sin against a noble history.

For all Christians to pray and labor for the coming of unity is a privilege.

For the Disciples both to pray for its coming and to practice it as a present reality, is a duty past all misreading.

PERT ANSWERS TO THE UNANSWERABLE.

COMES in the mail this morning a postal card with the following: "What do you know about the Jews returning to the Holy Land, the Rapture, the Great Tribulation, the Resurrection of the Dead Christians, the Anti-Christ, the Millennium, the Judgment and Hell with real fire? You will learn more in this one sermon than any one you ever heard."

Then follows the minister's name, and the church where this rare opportunity for initiation into the secrets of the future is to be offered.

There is much of this pert and impertinent dabbling in prophetic lore in these days. The war has released a flood of apocalyptic speculation and assertion, superficial in its basis, audacious in its use of Scripture, and demoralizing in its effect on the casual hearer.

There is a sane and entirely praiseworthy desire on the part of Christian people to know what the Bible has to say on the really important things of the faith.

But the Bible has its disclosures and its reserves.

And no man finds less in it than he who comes with irreverence and haste to capitalize its vivid images of sin, righteousness and judgment in the interest of some lurid theory of immanent catastrophies.

Such men promise what they cannot deliver. They have nothing to draw with, and the well is deep.

THE APPORTIONMENT.

NO piece of work done in recent years among the Disciples is more gratifying than the preparation of the apportionment presented by Rev. Graham Frank at the Atlanta convention. It was a task of unusual magnitude to study the statistics and estimate the abilities of all the churches among the Disciples, and assign to each its reasonable portion of a total budget in support of our missionary, philanthropic and educational work.

The apportionment is not an assessment in any sense. It is merely a standard of responsibility which each church has placed before it for its consideration and effort. By such means the congregations have some adequate appreciation of the part it is hoped they will take in the co-operative work of the Disciples, and the sum which good and wise men believe they can undertake to raise.

The apportionment plan is the most satisfactory approach to unified action in co-operative effort which has ever been made among us. It will not be accepted at once by all the churches, but gradually the most independent and self-centered will come to realize the value of the method, and its solution of some of the most perplexing problems connected with the work of missions and philanthropy.

It is a long step in advance, and deserves the support and co-operation of all Disciples.

LET US GIVE THANKS THAT IT ISN'T.

GRADUATE STUDENTS.

REPORTS indicate that an unusually large number of Disciples are in residence at the leading universities in graduate study.

There are many reasons for this, and the fact is highly gratifying.

The Disciples who graduate from our colleges and from the state universities are increasingly aware that graduate studies in the best divinity schools and theological seminaries are essential to the most efficient work in the ministry, on the mission field and in other forms of Christian service.

Disciples who graduate from our colleges and from the who have not received this special preparation. Some of them have not even been college trained. Their service has been of the utmost value, and in every case they have been given to understand that academic limitations are no bar, either to recognition or success.

Yet it is increasingly apparent that for the average man a full college course and some competent graduate experience are requisite to the highest usefulness.

More than this, the cost of graduate residence at a recognized university is so moderate, and the opportunities for scholarships and self-help so abundant that excuses for the neglect of such training are increasingly unconvincing.

To be sure, some courage and resolution are required, and perhaps some sacrifice. Men who say that they are willing to enter a graduate divinity school provided they can be furnished a church which will pay them a comfortable salary and keep them "in the condition to which they have been accustomed" are not likely to get very far. They ought not to expect it.

But those who are willing to make some sacrifices and take some risks to accomplish so important an object may count on the fullest measure of help from those charged with such responsibilities, and may have no fears as to the attainment of their purpose.

The invitation to graduate study was never so urgent. The need of it was never so apparent. The advantages derived from it were never so great. The number pursuing it never so large.

With rare exceptions, the man who wants to undertake it need not fear the issue.

A THANKSGIVING VOTE FOR THE PRESIDENT.

THE sharp and, for the moment, decisive turn of public sentiment away from the Democratic Party as shown at the recent elections, lays an extra responsibility upon all high-minded men, irrespective of political preferences, to keep interpreting to a forgetful public the so far successful peace policy of President Wilson.

Thanksgiving Day should be another election day at which the people of the United States may register in their hearts a vote of appreciation of the wise and gracious policy of their President in keeping this nation out of bloody war.

The cartoon on the opposite page depicts what might have been and what, under a good providence, we have been saved from.

SOME QUESTIONS AS TO EDITORIAL POLICY.

THE following communication was received from Dr. Chilton some weeks ago. The questions arose in his mind during the time when the agitation over the excommunication of the Berkeley church was at its height and The Christian Century was opening its pages for a free and hearty discussion of the issue by representatives of all sides.

EDITOR THE CHRISTAN CENTURY: I have noted with some concern the extended space you have given the Berkeley incident and have wondered if you intend to continue the agitation indefinitely, or do you regard it as a temporary phase of your work? Is it your purpose to carry this controversy into local churches and conventions everywhere in so far as the "Century" has power to do so? Will you encourage our churches to receive the unimmersed into fellowship even at the cost of strife and division? I believe there are many who would like to have you express yourself at length upon these questions. Yours very truly,

First Church, St. Joseph, Mo. C. M. CHILTON.

It seemed best to defer our reply to these questions until the agitation over the Berkeley incident had appreciably abated. Meanwhile the pages of The Christian Century have seemed to make any statement unnecessary. The subject-matter of our recent editorial and contributed pages says for itself that the Berkeley affair is conceived as a passing if not wholly past incident. Signs are beginning to appear indicating that adjustment and reconciliation are in process among the churches of northern California, for which all lovers of peace and progress are devoutly grateful.

Still, Dr. Chilton's inquiries afford an opportunity to state our position which we feel moved to do in a few brief sentences.

It is not the purpose of The Christian Century to carry the controversy into our conventions anywhere. Our purpose is precisely the contrary. We deplore the appearance of such controversy in any convention of Disciples, and will do all within our power to keep it out of our conventions. Our basic contention in the California incident was that such a question was altogether out of place in a missionary gathering of representatives of Disciples churches.

Nor is it the purpose of The Christian Century to carry "the controversy" into our local churches anywhere. But it is our purpose to carry the TRUTH into the practice of our local churches and into the hearts of all Disciples of Christ everywhere, so far as the "Century" has power to do so.

We believe that the business of the Disciples is to plead for Christian union as an ultimate goal for all Christ's people, AND TO PRACTICE IT OURSELVES HERE AND NOW AS A PRESENT REALITY. We believe that the practice of unity with all Christ's people is as important a duty, for Disciples, as the practice of unity among ourselves.

We hold that the sense of this duty must be made urgent and keenly personal in the souls of all Disciples, so that they cannot tolerate complacently any sectarian practice whatsoever without self-reproach.

We hold that the opening of the doors of our fellowship to all Christ's disciples, irrespective of the mode of their baptism, is, in these days, a slight, almost a casual, thing to do. But we hold that the refusal to do so by a church that pleads for unity and claims to desire to practice it, is a most grave matter, revealing, as it does, a disposition inimical to the cause of Christian unity and unresponsive to the will of Christ.

We cannot, therefore, in good conscience speak to our readers from week to week on the living issues confronted by the modern Church without including this living issue with others. And because we believe it has been so long suppressed by our teachers and writers, and because its suppression has allowed us Disciples to fall into a semi-conscious but increasingly complacent denominationalism ourselves, The Christian Century feels in stern duty bound to press the truth upon the conscience of our people at every reasonable opportunity.

But our method is distinctly the method of education, not of controversy. We believe that every church of Disciples ought to practice Christian unity, but we do not believe that it ought to create division in its own fellowship. Nor have we observed that the churches that have adopted the more generous practice have suffered from internal tension. On the contrary, as we look over the field we see no happier and more united congregations anywhere than the congregations which are receiving into their fellowship, without discrimination, those who are in the fellowship of Christ.

We do not believe that the issue ought to be forced. The internal unity of local churches is fundamental. The grace of patience toward those who do not yet see must be exercised by those whose eyes are opened. The demon of division must be exorcised from our hearts.

But patience must not be identified with silence and inaction. The truth must be declared. And as local churches come to possess the more Christian vision they ought deliberately to put it into instant practice.

The danger of division has been greatly exaggerated in many minds because we have been led to think that the subject was more delicate and sensitive than it really is. The California incident of last summer will never be repeated in our brotherhood. Leagues of progress have been made since last July. Local churches are readier to take the forward step than their leaders dream, and there are at least one thousand ministers among us who, in their hearts, consciously pray for the day of their release from legalistic and sectarian restraints.

Now, at the end, to answer Dr. Chilton's first question, we may repeat that The Christian Century regards the Berkeley affair as a conspicuous but passing incident, marking, however, a turning point in the consciousness of our people, from which a new epoch in their history will be dated.

The Christian Century's treatment of the incident was but a purposeful meeting of an emergency, a "temporary phase" of our work.

This newspaper is not the propagandist of any partisan platform. It seeks with a humble purpose to be the organ of a truer and deeper spiritual life in the souls of all its readers and in the practices of all the churches it can influence.

And it is its earnest and determined purpose to meet current issues with such frankness and courage that its readers may continue to have confidence in the good faith and sincerity of its policies.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

A Community School of Religion.

In Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, there has been established a community school of religion. The purpose of this school is to train parents and teachers of the community to teach religion. The sessions of the school are held once a week in the First Congregational church. An enrollment fee of one dollar is charged. This provides for the running expenses of the school only in part, the remainder being made up through private contributions.

City Churches are Endowed.

There is a call by the Methodists for more endowment funds for city churches. The passing of their Wabash Avenue Church has made clear to them the need in Chicago. They have a church in the "loop" of that city, the only church of any denomination in the central business district. This church has an endowment which has enabled it to do its own work and help other Methodist churches of Chicago by gifts of a million of dollars. The Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago has an endowment of $300,000. Its pulpit supply committee commands an income of $14,000 and the music committee has $7,000 at its disposal. The down-town church must increase its budget through a larger variety of activities or suffer a decrease of income through a change in the quality of membership. This fact is becoming a challenge to many of the denominations in great city centers.

Methodists Help Wounded Russians.

Dr. George A. Simons, who is superintendent of the Methodist work in Russia, cables that the Americans in Petrograd have established a hospital for the wounded and that the Methodist deaconesses have turned to the work of nursing the wounded soldiers. The Deaconess Hospital in Helsingfors, Finland, has also been offered to the Russian government for the care of the unfortunate men of the army.

Anniversary of Whitefield.

The Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued a call for the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Whitefield, on Sunday, Dec. 13th. The actual day of birth has been discovered after considerable research to be Dec. 16. He was educated at Oxford University and ordained in 1736. In a ministry of thirty-four years, he crossed the Atlantic thirteen times and preached over eighteen thousand sermons.

Tuberculosis Day.

The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis will enlist thousands of churches, schools and lodges in an educational movement against tuberculosis the week of Nov. 29th. The idea is that these institutions may use either the Sunday or meetings through the week for the purpose of disseminating information through literature and addresses. The organization, through its office at 105 E. 22nd St., New York, is sending out free literature to help speakers prepare for this occasion.

Lord's Day Alliance.

The Lord's Day Alliance has elected Rev. Thomas J. Stevenson, D. D., as field secretary to labor with Rev. H. L. Bowlby who is the general secretary. Doctor Stevenson has been in the service of the Anti-Saloon League the past year. The Lord's Day Alliance represents fifteen Christian bodies which are seeking a larger observance of one day in seven as a day of rest for toilers. The Alliance, the present year, has defeated nearly one hundred anti-Sabbath bills in state legislative committees. It has defeated two attempts to abolish the closing of post-offices on Sunday. The 26th anniversary celebration of the society was held in Broadway Tabernacle Congregational Church in New York Nov. 8th, and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson delivered the sermon.

One-tenth to Advertising.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, who is known as a former official of the home missionary organization of the Presbyterians, and who is now a "social engineer," made an address before the ministers' institute in Cincinnati recently. He advised his hearers to induce their churches to appropriate one-tenth of the income of the church to advertising and then undertake "to deliver the goods."

Norwegian Lutheran Union.

There are three Norwegian denominations in this country. Efforts to bring all Lutherans in America into closer fellowship is proceeding along national lines first. The Norwegian Synod Lutheran Church of America, in its sessions at Sioux Falls, S. D., has voted strongly in favor of the proposed merger of the three Norwegian Lutheran bodies. The final ballot stood 347 to 172.

The Go-to-Church Band.

During the past year there has been organized in many churches over the country "Go-to-Church" bands whose members promise to attend church once a Sunday for some definite term, especially through the winter months. Twelve thousand young people are enrolled this year and they are found in twelve denominations and in twenty-seven states. Full particulars of the movement can be obtained by addressing Clinton Alvord, 7 Summer Street, Worcester, Mass.

A Church 250 Years Old.

The First Congregational Church in Newton, Mass., has celebrated two hundred and fifty years of history during the week of October 30 and following. Two thousand people were present on one day in three services of the church. Among the well-known speakers at the celebration were Dean Brown of the Yale School of Religion and "Father Endeavor" Clark. Dean Brown's address was on the theme "The Church that Stood Four-square." The four sides of religion discussed were education, missions, social service and personal evangelism.

Memorial to Dwight L. Moody.

The Congregationalist and Christian World, on November 12, issued a fifty-six page memorial number in memory of the life and work of Dwight L. Moody. There were articles of appreciation from the pens of many eminent Christians from within and without the denomination. Mr. Moody was born in 1837 and died 1899. In 1856 he joined the Mt. Vernon Congregational Church in Boston. The same year he settled in the pioneer city of Chicago. Two institutions which remain to perpetuate his work are the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago and the Conference for Christian workers at Northfield.

Preaching Forbidden in Chicago.

Recently the police officers of Chicago issued an order forbidding street preaching in the business section of the city which has been denominated the "loop." A preacher who has a national reputation for his service against the white slave traffic was arrested for holding a meeting in the evening just outside the loop. The Y. M. C. A. has found it impossible to hand out notices of their Sunday afternoon meetings. The Chicago Federation Council of Churches has taken the matter up and will appeal from what they call police usurpation to the higher authorities.

The Largest Y. M. C. A.

The largest Y. M. C. A. in the world is said to be located at Detroit. Early in September of this year the membership reported reached the enormous total of 6,800, of which 830 were boys. This association is particularly varied in its program of work and among its activities is that of teaching English to the foreign employes of the Ford Automobile Company, a thousand in number. It is the plan of the association to erect seven branch buildings in the city as soon as conditions permit the launching of a campaign for $700,000 of funds.

Advance Steps in Evangelism.

The Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued a statement of the point of view of this commission written by W. E. Biederwolf, general secretary of the commission. This document frankly confesses the various abuses that have grown up around professional evangelism in the church. It asks that the evangelists shall be made amenable to some kind of authority in their respective denominations, as some of them in the past have not had any kind of ecclesiastical connection. The commission calls attention to the relatively small rate of increase in the Protestant churches of America last year—about 2 per cent—and pleads for a deeper interest in the work of evangelizing the portions of our population outside of religion. This report specifically disclaims that pastoral or personal evangelism lies within the field of its work and says nothing of educational evangelism.

Canadian Baptists Convene.

The Baptists of Canada were in convention at Toronto during the middle of October. Several hundred delegates were in attendance. Among the visitors from the states that addressed them were H. C. Mabie, of Boston, Mass., and George W. Truett, of Dallas, Texas. The meeting was harmonious and marked progress for this group of Christians.

Baptist Congress Dead.

After thirty-two years of uninterrupted service, the Baptist Congress has passed out of existence. The immediate cause of its demise was the financial question, for the proceedings each year were printed and bound. The Congress was over a year behind in these obligations. Many in the denomination will rejoice in the finish of this unique institution, for the Congress was the platform where much in the way of radical ideas was given forth. It is confessed by many, however, that the thirty-two volumes of proceedings are the most valuable library of Baptist thought to be found in the world. Dr. Henry Sanders, chairman, and Rev. Robert Chipman Hull, secretary, send out the announcement about the Congress. They indicate that the recently organized Northern Baptist Convention has opened up its platform to different points of view in a way to make the Congress no longer so necessary.

Ten Millions for Old Ministers.

The Presbyterians of the North have a project on foot to raise ten millions of dollars for their aged ministers. The secretaries of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation visited Detroit recently on the invitation of the local presbytery and raised $12,000 in a few days. In connection with the movement, was an effort to induce young men to enter the ministry. The ministers of the entire city in this denomination exchanged pulpits and preached upon the theme, "The Call of Our Young Men to the Ministry."

Bishop Smith Departs.

Bishop Charles William Smith of the Methodist Episcopal church died October 31, 1914. He was esteemed in his church as a man of great wisdom and his conclusions were usually final in his denomination. He came from an Irish family and grew up in the manse. At the age of forty he was a presiding elder and at the age of forty-four he was editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate. It was at the age of sixty-eight that he was elected bishop in his denomination and consecrated. He was a leading member of the ecumenical conferences in Washington, 1891, London, 1901, and Toronto, 1911. He was chairman of the commission that was appointed to revise the constitution of his church. He helped in the compilation of the present Methodist hymnal. He lived at St. Louis at the time of his death. His funeral was held in Washington and Bishops Hamilton, Quayle and Luccock spoke at the service held in his memory.

The End of the Age.

Pastor Russell, who has tabernacles in Brooklyn and Chicago and whose books prophesying the speedy approach of the millennium have sold widely throughout the country, prophesied the "end of the age" in October, 1914. At this time the dead were to be raised and live again upon a regenerated earth. The Christian world has waited with great anxiety for this denouement but so far are disappointed. The great cataclysm has been postponed for some reason.

Anniversary of John Huss.

Next year will be the five hundredth anniversary of the death of John Huss. The Baptist World Alliance had planned to meet and remember this anniversary but the war will doubtless prevent this. In other ways, however, the centennial of this great event will be remembered throughout the Christian world.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

THE CHRISTIAN UNION QUARTERLY.

This book is a sociological treatment of the subject of baptism. The author has a brilliant style and thinks along ingenious and fascinating lines. He protests against legalistic and magical interpretations of baptism, forgetting that those were simply periods of thought as sociology has a prominent place in modern thought. At best all of these are but theories of baptism as one would speak of the ransom, satisfaction and forensic theories of the atonement. All of these have their relative values. His attack on the theology of Alexander Campbell has no special significance, inasmuch as Campbell, unlike other reformers, left no system of theology, and not a line he wrote is binding upon the Disciples of Christ. He pointed men to the facts of the Scriptures. Campbell's achievement was in clearing the Scriptures of all systems of theology, leaving us the clean pages for our perusal. Mr. Morrison agrees that immersion was the ancient mode of baptism, and as such he is in sympathy with the Disciples, but arguing for the reception into the household by those who have received baptism by sprinkling or pouring, he breaks with the Disciple position. The Disciples recognize members of all communions as Christian. That is a fundamental position with them; hence their appeal for the union of all Christians on the personality of Christ. It is their custom to rebaptize those who have been baptized by sprinkling or pouring, not because they do not recognize those as Christians, but because to them, as the author says, "Immersion is the only catholic mode of baptism," and union must have in it catholicity.

It is, however, of interest to know that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the Church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity. The Baptists did not become a separate people because of their practice of baptism by immersion; neither did the Disciples. The Baptists opposed infant baptism and for a long period practiced baptism of adults by sprinkling. Their plea was regenerated church membership. In the origin of the Disciples baptism by immersion did not figure at all, and when Thomas Campbell was brought face to face with it he was greatly disturbed. Their plea was the union of the divided House of Christ. There are one hundred and eighty-six distinct communions in America. More than four-fifths of these practice baptism by sprinkling and pouring and in consequence of their common baptism Baptists and Disciples are no nearer than Baptists and Methodists; neither are Baptists and Disciples any closer together because of their common baptism by immersion than Disciples and Presbyterians. If baptism by immersion be such a hindrance to the union of the Church, what explanation can we give for the four-fifths of the American communions not getting together on their common baptism by sprinkling and pouring, or the remaining one-fifth not getting together on its common baptism by immersion? If the entire one hundred and eighty-six communions practiced baptism by immersion it would not unite the Church in America. It would remove one item from controversy, but we would have a long way to go then. The need of these times is a baptism so thoroughly Christian that those who have been baptized will cease bearing false witness against one another, will cease hating each other, and will cease their inordinate love of the world—a baptism that has around it much prayer—not saying prayers, but real prayer—both on the part of the baptizer and the person who is baptized, such a conference between these as will let in the seriousness of the covenant, followed by an effort of abandonment to the will of God. However one may differ with the author, there is much in this book to be commended from both the Baptist and the pedobaptists sides of the house. Some of his paragraphs have in them timely messages for the Church of Christ. The weakness of the book is the author's apparent disposition to find fault with the communion of which he is a member.

THE HERALD OF GOSPEL LIBERTY (CHRISTIAN DENOMINATION.)

The Meaning of Baptism. By Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, a Disciple paper. The book contains 222 pages and is neatly bound in cloth. Published by the Disciples' Publication Society, Chicago, Ill.

We have really enjoyed Mr. Morrison's discussion of baptism, not that we agree with him in all particulars, but he presents his thought from a new and interesting standpoint. We wish it might be read by all Disciples, all Christians, all Baptists, and in fact by all denominations—it will have a molding effect as to one's opinions of baptism. The Disciples themselves will likely get the most good from the book. Mr. Morrison is leading a fight for larger liberty in matters of opinion among the people of God. His position is by no means the position held by Disciples generally.

A CONTRIBUTOR TO THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.

I would like to inquire why the managers of the Atlanta convention will grant concessions in the convention building to such destructive elements as the Christian Century? If an agent for Thomas Paine's books applied for space, would he get it? Why not? Surely "The Age of Reason" would not do such untold harm at the convention as will the book "What is Baptism?" recently written by C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, who claims to be in fellowship with the body known as the "Church of Christ," yet is one of the prime disturbers in Israel. Why are not such men assigned to their own place?

ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

This is a very unusual book in much and especially in that, although written by a member and editor of an immersion church, the volume distinctly repudiates the "dogma" of immersion as usually held by them.

The Visitor

THE Thanksgiving season will bring to all true Americans a deeper sense of gratitude than any recent year. It is one of the satisfactions that this year of tragedy has left us that our own land has been saved from the unspeakable sorrow and shame of the great war, whose record is making red almost all the other parts of the world.

Not without profound depression can we contemplate so sinister a chapter in history. But the steadiness of spirit with which our own country has been steered through the crooked and tumbling currents of international affairs during the past few months is a theme of devout thankfulness. To God and to our national leaders is due our gratitude for these blessings.

We are now better able than a few months ago to measure the meaning of our national emergency when the Mexican difficulty loomed up on our southwestern horizon. There were many of our citizens who felt that our administrative policy of patience was lacking in the aggressive note which would breed respect in other lands and most of all in Mexico.

Today we can begin to understand the complications in which we might now be involved if we had permitted our first resentment at insolent treatment of our flag to have its way. Were we now at war with Mexico, with the prospect of a long and difficult battle not alone with a people of that type, but with the more serious foes of climate and disease, we might find ourselves so far compromised in the eyes of the warring world that an involvement in the present struggle might ensue, or at least we should be robbed of the opportunity to speak the word in behalf of peace for which the nations of the older lands will soon be listening.

In the meantime we have peace, and the measure of prosperity which even the alarm of war has been unable wholly to disturb. We have moreover the confidence that our commercial resources are soon to be taxed to assist our European and Asiatic neighbors to supply their needs. There is little exultation in our hearts at the thought that the coming increase in our commerce will be the result of this world-chaos, but it is inevitable.

For this we may be thankful, and for the further fact that hundreds of thousands of our citizens, whose reverence and good will go out to one or another of the fighting nations, because of past citizenship there, are profoundly grateful that they are now American citizens, and are immune from the terror of conscription and the danger of ravage.

Never did America seem more dear, more beautiful and more honored in the eyes of the world than now. Our problems are many, and our failures not a few, but we are learning some of the deepest lessons of life, partly by hard experience, and partly by shocked and sobering observation. We can not doubt that some pages are being turned today upon which we shall not need to look again.

Back then we turn from

"The field of strife, whose dews are blood,
Whose breezes, war's hot breath;
Whose fruits are garnered in the grave,
Whose husbandman is death," to the fair domain, which we hold as a goodly heritage, and where the lines are fallen to us in pleasant places. One day of late I came upon a passage in a recent book by Harlan Paul Douglass, where, in speaking of the Christian opportunity offered by America, he writes of the charm of our land in these terms:

"To know any part of our land is to love it. The white birches silhouetted against the dark hemlocks on the New England hillside; the tender little creeping greenery delicately embroidering the feet of the Adirondack forest; the meeting of rugged highland and misty marshes at the nation's greatest gateway, and the mighty stretch of reddening sunrise over the waving marsh grasses up and down all our coastal plain; the widespread shade of the live oaks draped with Spanish moss, equally stir and engage the affections of one whose parish is the nation. The lapping deep-green waters of the Great Lakes; the dotted farms and forests of the interior wreathed in the smoke of factory chimneys; the steep bridle paths of the Southern Appalachians winding under majestic chestnut and mighty beech; the smiling cotton fields of the Southern uplands and plains enclosed in a framework of pine tree and vine—all are the familiar furnishing of home to one who lives wherever the flag flies. The shimmer of sunlight over the prairie; the rich yellow of wheat ripe for harvest; the smoking gray of the new-turned prairie sod; and then the high plains southward over ranch and mine, to where, against the serrated background of mountains, the cactus towers as the sand-like pillars in the ruins of Karnak, and the day-long mirage mocks one day after day—each has a mystic compulsion over the heart of one who knows them all. From the white peaks of the farther Rockies; from the Cascades forested somberly by the firs; from the stark grandeur of the high Sierras to the virile beauty of the Golden Gate, and the smiling gardens and orchards, with the ancient missions slumbering in the mellow light between the foothills and the unutterably white surf of the Pacific—our land is goodly to know and to call ours."

And when to these considerations are added the rich heritage from an honored and manifold ancestry, the majestic legacy of the fathers of the nation, with their high hopes for its future as the greatest of the nations, the Queen of the Western World, the fairest of all the daughters of the Ocean, we know no sentiment but that of humble gratitude that thus far the God of nations has led us on our way. If in the spirit of the Thanksgiving times, America shall set her face resolutely toward justice, honor and righteousness, she shall still be the enlightener of the peoples, the champion of the highest liberty, the beautiful pioneer in the world's progress.

CREDO.

I know no sin except the lack of love,
I recognize the victory in defeat;
No gulf divides life here from life above,
I spell perfection in the incomplete.

A foe to dogma, still I hold a creed,
For I believe that all life brings is good,
That sharing bread and wine with men who need
Is the new sacrament of brotherhood.

I know the way we tread is rough and long,
And yet to toil and bleed am nothing loth,
And thus I journey homeward with a song,
Since in the very struggle lies my growth.

And when I reach that last green hostelry
Whence none have ever yet been turned away,
The slumber will be sound which falls on me,
Till dawns that longer, new, divine Today.

Joy! only joy! for Love is there and here—
Peace, only peace! though desperate my distress;
I find no foeman in the road but Fear—
To doubt is failure, and to dare, success!

—Frederic Lawrence Knowles.

"America, the Beautiful"

By Katherine Lee Bates.

O BEAUTIFUL for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties
Above the fruited plain!
America! America!
God shed his grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

O beautiful for pilgrim feet,
Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness!
America! America!
God mend thine ev'ry flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self control
Thy liberty in law.

O beautiful for glorious tale
Of liberating strife,
When valiantly, for man's avail,
Men lavished precious life!
America! America!
May God thy gold refine
Till all success be nobleness,
And ev'ry gain divine!

O beautiful for patriot dream
That sees beyond the years,
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Conference of Pastors' Wives

While the pastors' session was in progress at the Atlanta Convention of Disciples in October a quiet, unobtrusive, unheralded meeting of pastors' wives was being held in one of the rooms of the great auditorium. The idea of having such a meeting was first suggested by Mrs. Walter M. White, wife of the pastor of First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and president of the General Convention of Churches of Christ for next year. Mrs. White was herself elected to preside. Mrs. L. W. McCreary of St. Louis, read a scripture lesson and several took part in a circle of prayer.

The keynote of the meeting was one of Mrs. Walter M. White, wife of the pastor of First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., who led the meeting of the pastors' wives at Atlanta.

joy in the service of Christ and the church. It assumed the character of a testimony meeting. An optimistic view of the privilege of sharing in the Christian ministry and a spirit of thankfulness pervaded the talks. "This however satisfies my heart's longing through many years of Christian service" said Mrs. I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., "when we ministers' wives can get together, and in a quiet way, with hearts filled with gratitude to our heavenly Father, sit down and talk over the many things we have in common."

A NOTE OF WARNING.

Mrs. A. R. Moore, Mrs. Birdie Farrar Omer, and many others made bright, happy, hopeful talks. A note of warning was sounded to any who might discourage their sons to follow in the footsteps of their fathers in becoming ministers of the gospel. "Encourage your sons to become ministers and your daughters to become missionaries or wives of ministers. Advise young ministers' wives to have a sense of humor. Counsel them not to accept leadership in all organizations of the church and Sunday-school, but rather to work in a quiet way, making their influence felt in all departments of the church work. And admonish them not to neglect their first duty, the home circle." These were some suggestions.

"Have faith in yourself, have faith in others and have faith in God" was the theme of the closing remarks given by Mrs. White. She declared that much worry and fretting over daily routine of work is unnecessary if we would only do our best, each day as a new beginning, and leave the rest with Him, whose we are and whom we serve.

"We cannot always know the way, wherein God leads our feet. But this we know, that round our path His love and wisdom meet, and so we rest, content to know, He leads our feet where'er we go."

All voted to make such a conference a permanent thing, and Mrs. I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., was unanimously chosen to be the leader for the conference of ministers' wives to be held next year in Los Angeles.

ANCIENT APPRECIATION OF WOMANHOOD.

In the introduction to the third edition of his "Indian Wisdom" (page 46, London, 1876), Monier Williams cites a passage from the Mahabharata, which is remarkable, he thinks, as giving hope for the future elevation of women in India. He gives a poetic but quite literal version from that author of long ago as follows:

"A wife is half the man, his truest friend—
A loving wife is a perpetual spring
Of virtue, pleasure, wealth; a faithful wife
Is his best aid in seeking heavenly bliss;
A sweetly speaking wife is a companion
In solitude; a father in advice;
A mother in all seasons of distress;
A rest in passing through the wilderness."

Bearing upon this subject it would be pertinent and interesting to quote from a recent statement of Prof. James Blaikie to the National Geographic Society where he pays his highest respects to the ancient Egyptians of the Rameses III dynasty for their remarkable regard for womanhood. Mr. Blaikie says:

Woman was to the Egyptian not the slave of man or the minister of his pleasures; she was his companion, his fellow worker on very equal terms, often his adviser, not infrequently his ruler. There existed in the Egyptian mind a sentiment that could almost be called reverence for womanhood, particularly in respect of its great function of motherhood—a sentiment which is much more akin to our modern Western view than anything else that we meet with among ancient peoples. The mother was respected for her supreme share in the life and upbringing of her children, and for all the self-sacrifice which is essentially involved in true motherhood, and from the very earliest days the child was carefully indoctrinated with the duty of reverencing and loving his mother.

So strong was this sentiment that on the tombs of the old kingdom the mother of the dead is as a rule represented together with his wife, while the father rarely appears. In noble Egyptian families the general, though not invariable, custom was that the heir of the house was not the eldest son, but the son of the eldest daughter.

We moderns have made vast progress along many lines, but if the illustrations just quoted afford any indication of a general attitude toward woman in the days of long ago, we are not so sure but that the dim and distant past held elements that would go far to prove the existence of a golden age somewhere between Eden and Bethlehem.

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE ON PROHIBITION.

William Allen White, in an article in a popular literary weekly, declares of the prohibitory law of Kansas: "The prohibitory law is now enforced in 100 of the 105 counties of the state, and it is enforced as rigidly as any law on the statute-books. . . . In three counties there are sporadic convulsions of the rum fiend that seem to indicate vitality, but it is mere alcoholic reaction in the dead muscles. In two counties in the small mining towns there are open saloons . . . but in the larger towns even these counties enforce the law." What are some of the indisputable and beneficent results of the law? Listen: "Kansas has fewer murders, fewer homicides and fewer accidental deaths than any other state. In 14 counties no jury has been called in ten years to try a criminal case; 53 counties have empty jails, 38 counties have empty poor houses, and the second lowest death rate in America is the Kansas death rate of 7½ per 1,000."

LIGHT IN MEXICAN DARKNESS.

from Mexico City to San Luis Potosi. He told me that nearly all the superintendents on the entire system of government railways came from Piedras Negras and were friends of the People's Institute. In fact, nearly everyone I talked to on the trip told me of friends of theirs who had been my pupils or were in some way connected with the work who are now prominent in the government or in the army. A list of these would include President Carranza, his private secretary, Lic. Mirelos Espinoza; Don Gregor Osuna, chief of police at Mexico City; Prof. David Berlanga, secretary of the State of Mexico; Lic. M. A. Berlanga, civil and military secretary of the State of Jalisco; Lic. Garza Gonzales, Villa's secretary; Sr. Eliseo Arredondo, subsecretary of the treasury; Lic. Jose Vasconceloz, representative of Mexico at Washington, and many others. All these are firm friends of the People's Institute, and through it of Protestant Christianity.

"As one sees the wonderful opportunities before the Evangelical churches today, it is hard indeed to be patient and wait until we are absolutely assured of peace before the great body of missionaries return to Mexico. Every community is disorganized: the Romanist churches and the public schools are closed: the rich folks who generally lead in the community life are in the United States. Isn't this a time for some of the old heroic spirit of missions to be shown? Has our missionary science and carefulness brought us to the point where we are only willing to walk by sight and not by faith? The policy of 'Watchful Waiting' may be all right for our government; but for the Church of Jesus Christ it seems almost a travesty on the spirit of our Master and of his intrepid apostles. 'And he had compassion on them because they were as sheep not having a shepherd'. This is Mexico's situation today, and will not the compassion of the Master move us to answer her great need?"

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

Those Who Have Come Back. By Peter Clark Macfarlane. Ever since Starbuck began his study of the psychology of conversion, we have been looking at religion in another way. James, in his "Varieties of Religious Experience" has given us a somewhat wider range of study of religious psychology. The volume by Mr. Macfarlane is not formally and conventionally religious, but in the study of the cases of men "who have come back" it is dealing with a question that has interested evangelists, pastors, judges and reform workers alike. The stories are all out of real life though in only two cases are the men given their true names. These are Harry Monroe and "Lucky" Baldwin, celebrated rescue mission workers in Chicago. The collection of stories is intended to set forth the thesis that sometimes men in middle life "get their second wind." The various motives that have acted on these individuals are deeply significant. In most cases, there was a "moral kick" which aroused the man or woman. This experience of crisis is not very different from the usual experience of conversion. The characters studied are morphine eaters, drunkards, burglars and a Magdalene who is redeemed through her mother love. Mr. Macfarlane is a brilliant and effective writer. His work has dash and individuality. While in the pastorate at Alameda, in the Disciples' church there, he used to read story sermons to his Sunday evening audiences with great effectiveness. As secretary of the Brotherhood movement, he built up a magazine with a circulation of over twenty thousand. Though he has gone out into the world of letters from the pulpit, it is evident that a deep religious motive is still to be found in all his work. His career is being watched by Disciples with the deepest interest for Mr. Macfarlane is a much-loved man among them and his work gives them occasion for great pride.

The King of the Dark Chamber. By Rabindranath Tagore. It has long been known by the elect few in the West that the Orient has souls of rare insight into the heart of the universe and that some of them are able to express the wisdom of the East in language as beautiful as any utterance of the Occident. But it has remained for this generation to discover that fact not for scholars alone but for the man of the street. For the appeal of this Hindu poet's work is to every soul that possesses a sense of values in the realms of thought and expression.

The former volumes, especially the essays on the realization of life, gathered in the book called "Sadhana" made clear the greatness of this Bengali master. The present work, a play in twenty scenes, discloses more fully the treasures of that kind which carried away last year the greatest literary prize in the gift of the Western world.

Tagore, like Maeterlinck, is a symbolist. Some call him a mystic. But his is not the passion of the saint, but rather the illusiveness of the dreamer. Yet his message is profoundly ethical. He is weary of the false and superficial. His is a soul that has quested long for a reality, and at last, wearied with the search, comes home to find it in the common things nearest at hand.

"The King of the Dark Chamber" is capable of many interpretations, but essentially it is an allegory of the impatient spirit, symbolized by the Queen Sundarshana, demanding the satisfactions of the senses, only to come dangerously near the loss of her king, until at last, stripped of false ornament and ambition she comes humbly home to find him in the dark chamber of self-abandonment and gratitude. It is only then that the king can welcome her, and lead her forth into the light. (Macmillan, $1.25 net.)

Neighbors. By Jacob A. Riis. Readers of "How the Other Half Lives," "Children of the Tenements," and the many sketches of the New York submerged, will be glad to find in these "Life Stories of the Other Half," as the sub-title runs, a further explanation of the unselfish devotion of one of our greatest citizens to the cause of the poor and the unfortunate. There are heart-breaking records of shattered hopes and blasted efforts; heroic narratives of struggles with misfortune and want that ended in success and rollicking stories of the comic side of life, even as seen on Ludlow street and in Poverty Gap. The Russian Jew whose health gave way after a bitter fight with pinching poverty; the inebriated Mr. Riley, who celebrated his relapses into liquor by beating up his family and his belongings; the widow who refused the advice and help of the Aid Society in order to keep her little family together; the two young girls who set up their home in one of the vilest sections of the great town in order to be "neighbors" to some of their unhappy sisters—these and a dozen more are the human documents, which Mr. Riis assures us are taken from real life.

After reading some of these pages one no longer wonders that this great humble-hearted man was loved and trusted by the leaders of the nation and by the people of the lower wards whom he was glad to count as his "neighbors." (Macmillan, $1.25 net.)

They Who Question. The author of this anonymous novel has attempted to discuss the problem of suffering in some of its modern aspects, such as the brutality of nature, the tragedy of afflicted childhood, the hereditary taint of insanity, and the apparently hopeless condition of the sodden and bestialized inhabitants of some of the East-London slums. It cannot be said that the story grips, either in its studies of character or in its discussion of the central theme. Its people are illusive and unconvincing. Sir Philip Gurney, the artistic pagan, is an aristocratic and leisurely dissenter who is also very nearly a prig, his disdain for people who break their eggs into glasses nearly ruining his trip to Palestine. His wife, Enid, is an anaemic and mediaeval saint who exhausts herself in deeds of charity and at last loses her faith through the sufferings of their child. The curate is a caricature. The sister, Mrs. Brutherolan, is a stoic, quite conscious that this is the worst of worlds, but determined to meet her troubles without surrender. The dean is the one winsome character in the story, and his sermon at the end is supposed to bring everybody to a proper frame of mind. The most pleasing parts of the book are the beautiful affection of Philip and his wife, and the scenes in Egypt and the Holy Land. (Macmillan, $1.35 net.)

What Have the Saints to Teach Us? By Joseph Fort Newton, D. Litt. With the revival of the study of mysticism the lives of the saints have awakened renewed interest. But the author of these brief chapters believes that the pilgrims of the inner path—Augustine, Francis, the two Catherines, Eckhart, Teresa, Tauler, Jacob Boehme and John Woolman—have a series of most practical lessons to teach the church of our age. In their abiding joy, their study of the Bible, their quietness of spirit, their passionate love of God, their fervor in prayer and their devotion to the welfare of mankind they disclosed the quality of living which is alike sacrificial and satisfying, and for which the world ever waits. Literary Notes.

The Year Book of the Church and Social Service in the United States, edited by Harry F. Ward, is prepared under the direction of the Federal Council of Churches; and contains detailed information regarding the efforts now under way in all the churches to develop plans for social service. A full report among other things, is given of the work of the Commission on Social Service for the Disciples, of which Prof. A. W. Taylor is chairman. Ample bibliography is included. (Revell.)

* *

War news no longer occupies the entire front page of our newspapers, but there are many indications that public interest in the subject is still lively. One is an announcement from the publishers that Prof. Roland G. Usher's "Pan-Germanism" is in its thirteenth printing. Few books can claim such a unique record as this. Published almost two years ago, it attracted no more attention than dozens of other books and more than one reviewer inclined to think it overdrawn, hardly to be regarded seriously. Today it is receiving the honor and attention of a prophecy that is being fulfilled and it is more in demand than any other book relating to the present crisis.

Disciples Table Talk

Kentucky Ministers Meet.

The ministers of central Kentucky held a meeting in the Phoenix Hotel at Lexington Nov. 9. Forty ministers were in attendance. These meetings are held monthly. At the meeting noted there were the following out of town ministers: E. B. Barnes of Richmond; H. C. Garrison of Danville; J. H. McNeill of Winchester; J. D. Armistead of Cynthiana; J. P. Sharrard of Paris; and H. W. Elliott, the missionary secretary of Kentucky. The topic was presented by Mr. Reynolds on "The Doctrine and Polity of the Presbyterian Church."

Zanesville, O., Dedication.

The church at Zanesville, O., has built a new building at an expense of thirty thousand dollars. On Nov. 1, the beautiful building was dedicated free from debt after fifteen thousand dollars had been pledged by the members. The pastor of the church is Hugh Wayt and he went to Zanesville in 1909. He has done his own evangelistic work and conducted the dedication services alone except for the presence of Zanesville ministers of other bodies. In the five years of this pastorate there have been 550 accessions to the church.

Union Meeting at Trenton, Mo.

The churches at Trenton, Mo., have been joined in a union meeting during October. There were two hundred additions and the largest number went to the Disciples, the Methodists being a close second. Seventy-one new members were received by the Disciples.

Carload of Provisions.

The churches of Nodaway county, Mo., are getting ready their car-load of provisions for the orphans of St. Louis under the care of the National Benevolent Association. C. R. Harmon of Pickering, superintendent of the Sunday-school there, has charge of the offerings from the county Sunday-schools. Potatoes, apples, toys, nuts and every other kind of thing useful for children will be put on board the car. The Pickering school will send a crate of chickens.

A Tithers' Band.

The North Side church of Omaha of which Geo. L. Peters is pastor has a Tithers' Band recently organized in the church. A part of its work will be to educate fellow Christians in the duty of giving. This church made a splendid showing last year. Two hudred and seventy members raised for all purposes $5,514.91. Omaha has decided to have a "Billy" Sunday meeting beginning in May.

New Cotner Field Secretary.

Cotner University of Lincoln, Neb., has chosen one of her alumni as field secretary. He will make his home at Bethany. His work will be to solicit students and funds for the university. His work at present is in connection with the securing of an offering on Educational Day.

Women Sew for Belgians.

The appeal for the poor Belgian children has found a response in our church at Ann Harbor. The pastor, Geo. Knepper, proposed that the men should buy material and that the women should make garments for little Belgian children who without aid will die of want this winter. The very first Sunday after the suggestion was made, there was seventy-five dollars put into the church collection box for material and a dozen sewing machines are at work in the church parlors making the garments. The city papers of Ann Arbor. The pastor, G. W. Knepper, proposed space to the enterprise and it promises to become a city enterprise with headquarters at the church.

Dean Lhamon Lectures.

Dean W. J. Lhamon of the Bible School of Drury college, is delivering a series of ten lectures on successive Monday evenings to a class of above a hundred preachers and teachers of Springfield, Mo. The class is under the direction of the Federation of Churches. This is Mr. Lhamon's second series of lectures to the Springfield Sunday School workers.

Church Ladies Work for Magazine.

The ladies of the Aid Society at Galesburg, Ill., have undertaken the work of securing two hundred and fifty subscriptions to a popular magazine as a part of their financial program. They are selling post cards of their new church building which is now going up and are serving a turkey dinner.

Evangelist Holds Shop Meetings.

Clyde Lee Fife is holding evangelistic services in Terre Haute, Ind., and a part of his program there is to hold meetings in the factories of the city. A Sunday afternoon service was held in a skating rink. The workers in the meeting lunch together frequently and receive their assignment of work. Two hundred and forty-seven people have come out on the first nine days of invitation.

Progress in the Congo.

H. C. Hobgood has been visiting the outposts of Lotumbe this fall in the Congo country. He has been gone for nearly two months and has baptized 406 people while in the field. This makes a record of 561 since the first of May. At Tumba, where the lamented missionary Eldred is buried, over 300 were baptized. In every one of the Congo stations there is progress.

Minutes of the General Convention.

The minutes of the sessions of the General Convention recently held at Atlanta, Ga., have been printed and are ready for distribution. Anyone may secure a copy by writing to the general secretary, Graham Frank, at Liberty, Mo. These minutes contain much information concerning the workings of the General Convention.

C. W. B. M. Makes Visit.

The C. W. B. M. of Winchester, Ind., made a visit to Union City recently to inspect the new church at the latter point and to be guests of the auxiliary at Union City. There were thirty ladies in the visiting party.

Laymen and Laywomen Preach.

The church at Dearing, Kans., is at present pastorless and the laymen and laywomen of the neighboring churches are helping them out with a series of special services extending through a week. Mrs. Nelson Gardner, wife of the Cherryvale pastor preached on a Sunday evening. Other church leaders of surrounding towns are scheduled to speak.

Howard Cree Holds Meeting.

Howard Cree, pastor of the church at Augusta, Ga., is in Savannah of the same state assisting A. R. Moore in special services which will last through two weeks. The two preachers will go together in a house-to-house work that will add greatly to the significance of the meeting.

Every-Member-Canvass

In many sections of the country, the "every-member canvass" is being carried on and with uniform success. In Boulder, Colo., on a recent Sunday afternoon, twenty teams of two men each visited the whole church in the single afternoon and brought back a very fine report of their achievements.

Distribute Thanksgiving Dinners.

The Grandview church of Kansas City, Mo., will distribute Thanksgiving dinners to one hundred needy families on the morning of Thanksgiving day. The supplies are being gathered from many sources.

Joint Missionary Apportionment Meets With Favor

The first Joint Missionary Apportionment has just been mailed to the churches of the United States. It is exceedingly gratifying to those who have worked at this difficult task to know that the Joint Apportionment is meeting with such hearty response. There are, of course, errors in this apportionment and inaccuracies which will have to be corrected. I am giving below some expressions of appreciation from well known brethren in various parts of the country. These are only a few of the very large number that have reached me thus far. The Missionary Societies are following the Joint Apportionment with Every-Member-Canvass Conferences. If each church will accept its apportionment with whatever modifications seem to be wise and set about in the best possible way to raise the missionary money, I feel sure that there will be a large increase in the number of contributing churches and also a large increase in the missionary offerings.

The following letter from Judge Frederick A. Henry, of Cleveland, Ohio, expresses his appreciation of the Joint Apportionments.

"Answering your favor of the 9th inst., I wish to thank you for the copy of the printed 'Joint Missionary Apportionment for 1914-15 for the State of Ohio. I had already seen a copy of this interesting document and had repeatedly expressed my admiration for the thoroughness and the detailed excellence of the work which it reflects. Really it is a most amazing result of painstaking efforts which, in extent, exceed anything I could have believed possible. More than that, it evinces discriminating care and intelligent discretion in considering the application of the apportionment to the special condition of each individual church. Such systematizing of our benevolences and missionary enterprises is the very sort of thing for which the general convention idea was developed and put into operation, and this is really all that was contemplated. I never expected, however, to see the details worked out so admirably and extensively as this document shows to be the case, and when I reflect that what was done for Ohio has likewise been done for all the states in the Union and the provinces of Canada, my appreciation is really beyond expression."

Among other expressions may be quoted as follows:

"We like your plan very much."—M. L. Buckley, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"I certainly appreciate the great work you have done for our brotherhood. The Colorado sheet will be an inspiration I know."—Chas. W. Dean, Denver, Colo.

"May I congratulate you on the good work which you are doing and prophesy a new day of co-operation for our entire brotherhood?"—C. E. Lemmon, Hastings, Neb.

"The general plan is fine."—E. S. Ames, Chicago, Ill.

"I am very sanguine over the prospect of realizing on the full budget of $17,856.00 for the Sixth Missouri District this missionary year."—J. P. Rowlison, Vandalia, Mo.

"Please accept my heartiest congratulation upon the plan."—Guy L. Zerby, Donovan, Ill.

"I am delighted with this system and shall do all in my power to get all the churches in Alabama to adopt it."—S. P. Spiegel, Birmingham, Ala.

"I want to congratulate you on the excellent work you have done in the preparation of the Budget. It is to my mind an excellent thing."—J. A. Hopkins, Confluence, Pa.

"I think that the committee is to be congratulated upon the business-like way in which their work has been done, and the neat appearance of their printed matter. The apportionment idea is all right."—E. H. Clifford, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"I am delighted with the plan of the Joint Missionary Apportionment."—Chas. L. Beal. Fresno, Cal.

"The new plan appeals to me to be the very best that has yet been suggested."—H. F. Phillippi, Milroy, Ind.

"I rejoice that the 'budget' has at last been inaugurated. I believe that we have taken the most important forward step of our history."—Geo. L. Peters, Omaha, Neb.

GRAHAM FRANK, Cor. Sec.

Atlanta, Ill., School Moves Forward.

R. H. Newton, pastor at Atlanta, Ill., reports that his school has organized the Senior Department with over 100 young people in it—one class in teacher training, two in the first year Senior Graded work and one in the second year Senior Graded work. The last mentioned class is made up of seniors in high school and some who graduated last year, with a membership of 18 and is taught by Mrs. Newton. They are to have written examinations once a quarter and the one in that class that makes the best grade will receive tuition paid for one year in Eureka College, the gift of the Bible school. It is hoped that credit may be secured for this work in the high school course.

A Debt Raising.

During last midweek between dedication at Triplett, Mo., and South Bend, Ind., Evangelist Geo. L. Snively of Lewistown, Ill., assisted E. T. McFarland of Lawrence, Kan., in raising seventy-five hundred dollars of indebtedness that has long hung like a pall over that congregation. The debt was incurred before Bro. McFarland's call to that church but it has so hindered progress there that its obliteration became a work of necessity. The minister now feels that his work in that great university center will now tell for infinitely more in its educational, ethical and spiritual phases. During 1915, Bro. Snively will give time between dedication to these debt lifting endeavors.

C. W. B. M. Talks About Indians.

The Auxiliary in Pasadena, Cal., held a session on Nov. 6, at which the topic of discussion was the California Indians. The program was as follows: Reading, "The Search of a Nez Perce," Mrs. Cora Barnard Vedder; address, Mrs. E. W. Brown, superintendent of the Indian school at Guinda; solos, four American Indian songs, Mrs. Jeffries Svendson; reading, Miss Ella Strawn; remarks, Mrs. Annie P. Cason of Pomona, president of the C. W. B. M. of Southern California. Mrs. A. W. Mills, president of the auxiliary, closed the meeting with prayer, after which a social time was enjoyed and refreshments served.

Church Celebrates Debt-Raising.

The church at Sayre, Okla., had a jollification over the raising of enough money to pay off the mortgage on their church building. The budget deficit has been met and the building is being repainted and redecorated. At the service celebrating the victory, the notes and mortgages were burned by the man who had signed the church's paper in days gone by.

North Texas Bible Schools.

The North Texas School of Methods closed in Wichita Falls, November 6, with an enrollment of an even 100, representing fifteen Bible Schools, thirty-one students graduating. There was splendid attendance. The Wichita Falls School had every teacher and officer present except one who was sick in the hospital. Sixty-two in all were enrolled from this one school. Thanks are due the American Christian Missionary Society for making this school possible. Mr. Clarke, Miss Lewis and Miss Maus are experts. Their work met with great appreciation on the part of every student. The Bible Studies in the Gospels by F. F. Walters, pastor Wichita Falls Church were very fine indeed. S. W. Hutton gave the course in Organization and Management.

Endeavorers Fight Saloons.

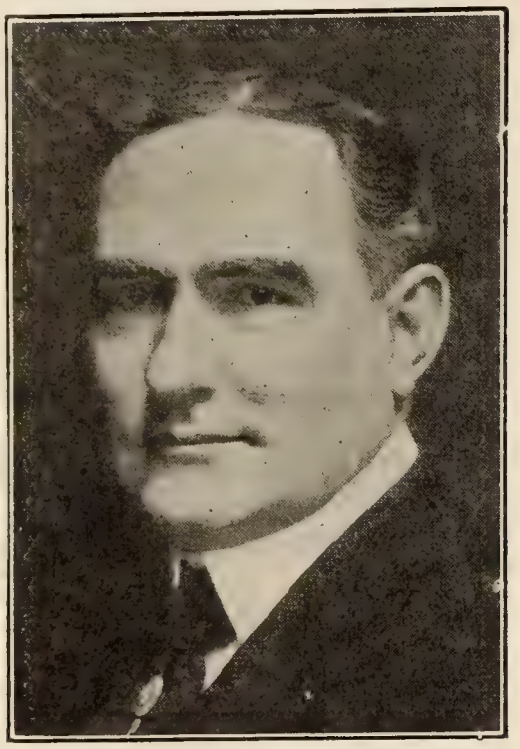
Even if California did go "wet," a good hard fight was made. The Christian Endeavorers of the state were lined up in genuine Endeavor style. Here's the way they did it at Los Angeles: The plan there was to cover the town with temperance posters. When the bill posters of the city discovered what kind of posters the Endeavorers wished to put up, they "immediately with one accord began to make excuse." Some discovered that they would not have space to dispose of until after the elections. But the Endeavorers found a way to get up their posters in spite of opposition. Bill boards seven and a half feet by twelve feet were prepared and painted in the brightest colors. A certain brewery has a bill board on which appears a blue flag with the brazen legend, "Budweiser Spells Temperance." The Endeavorers got up similar bill boards with red flags and the indisputable truth, "Booze Spells Ruin." These bill boards were placed in busy thoroughfares and on street car lines where they would strike the eye of thousands.

Endeavor Society Gives County Fair.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the University Place church in Champaign announces a County Fair for Nov. 20. There are many novel forms of entertainment including moving pictures, a minstrel show, a Japanese tea garden, as well as the time-worn but necessary monstrosity shows. There will be a fortune teller and a picture gallery, besides stands serving various kinds of refreshment.

Wars on Public School Sex Instruction.

Dr. R. P. Shepherd, educational secretary of the Illinois S. S. Association, is holding training schools in various sections of the state. These training schools are being operated in part for social uplift. One of the startling products of the Association's work is a declared policy to war on the teaching of sex knowledge in the public schools. This war on sex education has attracted considerable attention in the secular press.



Dr. R. P. Shepherd, who is organizing community training schools in Illinois.

City Paper Sends Glee Club.

The Indianapolis News maintains a Glee Club for giving neighborhood entertainments in various parts of the city. The club appeared at the Hillside church, C. M. Fillmore, pastor, on a recent evening. There were forty voices in the club and they rendered music of the very highest grade.

Dr. Jenkins on the Missing Link.

Burris A. Jenkins startled his Kansas City congregation by this antithesis. He said in part: "To be sure scientists have not yet found the 'missing link.' To many religious persons the idea of being descended from anthropoidal apes is still repugnant. But, however repugnant it may be, I would as lief be descended from an anthropoidal ape as from some of the human beings I have seen and known. The Digger and Ute Indians that you see sitting along the railway tracks in the Far West in the Great American Desert, are little, if any, in advance of the anthropoidal apes of Africa. Some of the tribes found in the heart of Africa are little, if any, above the line of intelligence of the beasts of the field."

Opera for Organ Fund.

The choir of the church at Lawrence, Kan., recently gave a comic opera called "The Larks" for the benefit of their organ fund in the F. A. U. hall of the city. The cast embraced not only members of the choir but also prominent business men of the city. The opera was under the direction of Mrs. E. L. Charlton. The Kansas University Trio Club assisted in the performance.

A Children's Chorus.

During the revival services at the Oakland church, in Topeka, Kans., a children's choir rendered very effective service. This choir was called the Sunshine chorus. There was also an adult choir.

An Efficiency Rally.

The church at Dearing, Kans., held an efficiency rally on the night of Nov. 8. Mrs. Nelson Gardner spoke as well as others. The addresses were in the direction of making more economical use of the energies of the church in doing its legitimate work in the community.

Wall Map Goes to Jacksonville, Ill.

W. H. Waggoner of Eureka, Ill., made an offer recently to give a large missionary wall map of the world to the auxiliary which wrote the best paper upon the subject, "How to Interest People in Missions." Mrs. S. Thornberry of the auxiliary in Jacksonville, Ill., wrote the winning essay and the wall map goes to her auxiliary. Mrs. Porter, State president of the C. W. B. M., will go to Jacksonville to make the C. W. B. M. day address.

Will $35,000 Go to Church?

R. R. Gorden of Moweaqua, Ill., died recently and left a will in which $35,000 was to go to the First church in St. Louis. The will has been contested by the nurse who took care of Mr. Gorden and the court has awarded her five thousand dollars from the sixty thousand dollar estate. It is not yet clear just what effect this court decision will have upon the money that might have gone to the First church.

Bulgin Meeting at Boulder, Col.

Evangelist Bulgin has been holding union services in Boulder, Col., which have resulted in a large number of accessions to the churches. Our church has followed the revival with four days of baptismal services in which the converts were received into the church and 64 have been added. Among the converts was A. P. Ardourel, state representative, and Col. T. E. Irvine.

State Convention in Alabama.

The state convention of Alabama is in session at Birmingham, Nov. 11-13. The sessions are held in the Ensley Opera House and during the convention the cornerstone will be laid for the Ensley church. Mrs. Ellie Payne and Grant K. Lewis were among the speakers from outside the state.

High School Credit for Bible Study.

Texas joins North Dakota and Colorado in giving credit toward the high school diploma for Bible study. E. C. Boynton, pastor of the church at Belton, is the leader among Texas Disciples along this line. He has just completed outlining a two years' course in the Old Testament, which has been approved by the pastors' association and high school board of Belton and was put into use in the Sunday-schools of Belton at the beginning of the school year, September 14.

Church Members Don Overalls.

Volunteers from the First Church of Seattle, Wash., have set out to build a church building in a day in another section of the city to house a mission Sunday-school. The workers will be under the direction of George S. Turner, a contractor. The new building is to cost $500 for material but the work is all donated. This present building is regarded as a temporary make-shift while the church makes preparation to build a more pretentious building. The Ladies' Aid Society are to serve lunch to the laborers.

Secretary a Benedict.

E. H. Koch, state secretary of Tennessee, married Miss Rosa King Davis of Memphis, on Nov. 5. Congratulations are pouring in upon the happy man.

Doctor Combs Will Hold Meeting.

The churches at Bloomington, Ill., on the initiative of First church, have engaged Dr. George H. Combs of Independence Blvd. Church of Kansas City for a meeting which will begin on Nov. 30 and continue to Dec. 12. We have four churches in Bloomington and suburbs, besides our work for the colored people. This series of meetings is arousing the deepest interest in the Bloomington churches.

Dr. Breeden University Preacher.

Dr. H. O. Breeden, who is just recovering from a serious illness, will be the university preacher at Leland Stanford University on Dec. 6. Dr. Breeden is well-known throughout California outside the circles of his own brotherhood.

Successor for President Prichard.

President H. O. Pritchard has taken rather unusual pleasure in announcing the arrival of his successor at Eureka. The new arrival is a son but it will be some time before he becomes active in his father's duties.

Church's Jubilee Year.

The church at New Castle, Pa., which is ministered to by W. W. Sniff, will observe its fiftieth anniversary of organization on Dec. 6. Five of the 24 charter members are living and two of them live in New Castle. The other three are in California.

Newark Church Helps Prohibition.

The church at Newark, O., held a big massmeeting for men the night before election with speakers advocating prohibition. The church will go into a meeting with home forces Nov. 15. There have been 23 added at the regular services the past two months.

More Church Bulletins.

The note in a recent "Century" about the church bulletins that come to the office has borne fruit. Several more churches have put this office upon their mailing list. This courtesy is much appreciated by the office editors. Many other churches would render a service to the brotherhood by a similar act of thoughtfulness.

Central Texas Bible Schools.

The Central Texas School of Methods was held in Temple, November 9-13. There were expected at least 100 in attendance. E. C. Boynton, pastor at Belton, Texas conducted the course in Bible Study. E. S. Bledsoe, pastor, and J. W. Bonner, superintendent, had made thorough preparation for the school.

IN AND AROUND CHICAGO.

A platform meeting was held at Hyde Park church on Sunday afternoon, November 15. The speakers were C. C. Morrison, H. L. Willett and E. S. Ames, and the theme was "The Mission of the Disciples of Christ." Hyde Park church had four additions last Sunday and has had twenty-five new members since October 1. A large congregation filling the house was in attendance at the platform meeting.

Herbert L. Willett, Jr., has written his parents that his ship has touched port at Alexandria. There has been much anxiety about his safety in view of conditions in the Orient. He is on his way back to Beirut where he teaches in the Syrian Protestant College.

The Sheffield avenue church reported three additions on November 15, and Harvey reported one.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Jackson Boulevard church conducted the regular evening church service at West End church on a recent Sunday night.

At the ministers' meeting on November 16, J. E. Wolf of Whiting, read a paper on "The Religious Ideas of Richardson." About fifteen pastors were present.

KANSAS CITY AND VICINITY.

The hospital building which is being constructed by the Christian Church Hospital Association of Kansas City, is progressing most satisfactorily; the walls of the fifth and last story are now going up and we hope to have the building under roof by January 1, 1915. This building when completed, will contain the administrative offices, together with provisions for about one hundred and twenty patients. The building alone is costing $200,000 and will be the most modern hospital in Kansas City. Unless there is some unexpected delay, we hope to open the institution to the public in the latter part of the summer, 1915.

The churches of the Disciples in Kansas City have all decided to make "The Every Member Canvass" on the afternoon of the First Sunday in December. A large number of men will be selected from every congregation and sent out two by two, in order to complete the work in one afternoon.

The Evangelical Churches of Kansas City have united in extending an invitation to Rev. W. A. Sunday to conduct a series of revival services here in our city, beginning about a year from this date. It is understood that Mr. Sunday has accepted the invitation. The Disciples are co-operating.

The Men's Movement

Merger of the Brotherhood with Adult Division, Department of Bible Schools, of the American Christian Missionary Society.

At the recent Atlanta Convention there was consummated the merger of the "Brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ" with the Adult Division of the Department of Sunday Schools of the American Christian Missionary Society. This action was taken by recommendation of the Board of Directors of the "Brotherhood." The following excerpt from the report of the National Brotherhood Secretary, Mr. E. E. Elliott, will explain the action: "At a joint meeting of representatives of the Sunday-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society and the Brotherhood Movement the merger of the Brotherhood Movement with the Adult Division of the American Christian Missionary Society was arranged and the following men were nominated as members of the Committee on Men's Work to serve with members to be appointed by the Sunday-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society: R. A. Long, Kansas City, Mo.; C. M. Chilton, St. Joseph, Mo.; T. W. Grafton, Indianapolis, Ind.; E. E. Elliott, St. Louis, Mo. The duties of this committee when fully constituted shall be to assist the Sunday-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society in the conservation and in the further promotion of the work already done by the men's Bible classes and the Brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ."

CONVENTION CONFIRMS MERGER.

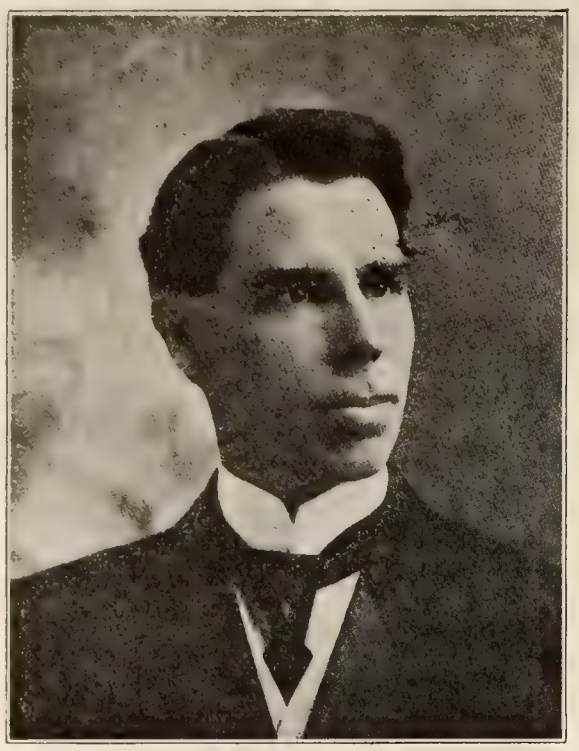
The convention confirmed this action of the Board of Directors of the Brotherhood and the Department of Sunday-schools of the American Christian Missionary Society has assumed the larger responsibility of directing the men's work as a unit from the office in Cincinnati, Ohio.

With the resignation of E. E. Elliott as national secretary, the adult superintendent for the American Christian Missionary Society, W. J. Clarke, becomes the national secretary and within the adult division a men's department is being created with the following committee on men's work to assist the National Sunday-school Department in planning the larger program now before the churches and Sunday-schools: R. A. Long, Kansas City, Mo.; C. M. Chilton, St. Joseph, Mo.; T. W. Grafton, Indianapolis, Ind.; E. E. Elliott, St. Louis, Mo.; W. L. Kennett, Louisville, Ky.; R. A. Doan, Nelsonville, Ohio; C. R. Stauffer, Cincinnati, Ohio; Alva W. Taylor, Columbia, Mo.; W. J. Clarke, Cincinnati, Ohio.

With this unification of the men's work, and with this advisory committee composed of those vitally interested in men's work from the points of view of both Brotherhood and the Sunday-school we believe that the recommendation of the Board of Directors of the Brotherhood to the Sunday-school Department that, "Such portion of the Brotherhood program of service as may be practicable be embodied in the program of the Adult Department" can be successfully realized and a larger and more effective program than ever before attempted can be put in operation. We are persuaded that the new arrangement is going to develop most profitably the work of Men in the Kingdom. The Sunday-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society is now in position to develop upon the basis of the organized men's section or Bible class, a complete program of Bible study, religious training, and Christian service. Such a program is now in process of preparation and we hope to see our four thousand men's classes enthusiastically lined up for the biggest task the men have ever undertaken.

AN ENLARGED PROGRAM.

The enlarged program outlined above, promoted and directed by the adult division of the Sunday-school Department of American Christian Missionary Society, will entail large financial outlay which friends of the work will be invited to provide. It is presumed that inasmuch as the Adult Division has been made heir to the financial help hitherto pledged to the Brotherhood Movement, the recommendation made by the Board of Directors of the Brotherhood to the effect that "the moral and financial support of the former supporters of the Brotherhood Movement be continued toward the continuation organization" will be realized. Upon this support will largely depend the successful working out of this great program for the men of our churches.



Mr. W. J. Clarke, Adult Bible Class Superintendent for the Disciples, who now becomes the leader of the Brotherhood Movement in the church.

In conclusion it should be known that there is at present a movement on foot throughout all the churches similar to that which has been accomplished among the Disciples of Christ looking to the unifying of the purpose and the program of all brotherhoods, clubs, leagues and Bible classes.

E. E. Elliott.

F. W. Burnham Begins Secretaryship.

The Wilshire Boulevard church in Los Angeles has graciously released F. W. Burnham so that he may begin service as secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society on December 1.

Denver Churches Have Great Day.

At the close of the "Billy" Sunday meetings, the Denver churches observed their second "Go-to-Church" Sunday campaign. It was reported that seventy thousand people were in the churches on one day which exceeds last year's record by twenty thousand. The Broadway church of which D. Y. Donaldson is pastor, received a large number of new members and broke all records for Bible school attendance. All the churches in the city were enjoying similar prosperity.

Illinois Year-book Appears.

The annual year-book of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society is a very creditable booklet, setting forth the facts about the Illinois churches in great detail. It also has the minutes of the last state convention and the reports of missionary activity. The 1914 year-book is just from the press and keeps well up to previous standards.

Union Survey of a City.

In Covington, Ind., the churches are going together for a union survey of the city. Those participating are the Disciples, Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists. The results of the survey will be used by all the different denominations at work in the city.

Church Organized in Tab, Ind.

The Van Duesen Brothers have just finished a tent meeting at Tab, Ind., which has resulted in the organization of a new church. They came at the invitation of two ladies and left the community with a church of 65 members. A committee is at work raising money for a new meeting house.

Pastor Architect Moves.

F. M. Wood, of Urbana, Ia., who drew his own plans and supervised the work on the church building erected last summer, is going to a church in Kansas City. He was known as the "fighting parson" on account of several interesting encounters.

New Pastor at Crawfordsville.

Our great church at Crawfordsville, Ind., lost their pastor, J. M. Alexander, last summer. He resigned and accepted the work at South Bend, Ind. The pulpit committee immediately entered into communication with R. E. Moss of Eminence, Ky., and succeeded in securing him for the work. He began in the new field November 1.

Evening Features at Denver, Central.

The Central Church of Denver, of which G. B. Van Arsdall is pastor, has been having a vesper service in recent years. Following the "Billy" Sunday meeting, they have changed back to an evening service at 7:45. Mr. Van Arsdall is to give twenty-two lectures on the subject, "The Practice of God."

Governor Hodges Helps Welcome New Pastor.

On the evening of Oct. 23, a reception was given the new pastor of the First Church at Topeka, Kans., O. L. Cook. In the receiving line were Governor and Mrs. George H. Hodges and a number of other prominent citizens of Topeka.

Denver Goes to Church.

Denver claims to be the originator of the "Go-to-Church" movement that has spread all over the country. They observed the day for the second time on November 1. The Central church of Denver, G. B. Van Arsdall, pastor, was in the movement and at the evening service that day there were fifteen baptisms.

Drake Home-Coming Day.

Nov. 21 is the date set as Drake Home-coming Day at Des Moines. It is the time of the Drake-Ames foot-ball game. A banquet will be served in the evening in the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce building. There is already great interest in this approaching event.

Nevada Ladies Can Fruit for Orphans.

The ladies of the church at Nevada, Mo., each year can a special supply of fruit and ship a large consignment of it to the orphans' home in St. Louis for use Thanksgiving Day and afterward. In this way the church keeps in touch with the benevolent work of the brotherhood.

Bank President Fills Pulpit.

C. Q. Chandler, president of the Wichita Kansas National Bank, filled the pulpit of the Central church of Des Moines, Ia., on a recent Sunday evening and gave an address on the work of "Billy" Sunday as an evangelist, in anticipation of the coming of Mr. Sunday to Des Moines.

Dr. Braden Addresses C. W. B. M.

The County Federation of the C. W. B. M. met in Missouri City, Mo., on Nov. 11. The chief speaker for the occasion was Dr. Arthur Braden, who has recently gone to Lawrence, Kans., to fill the Bible Chair that was vacated by Wallace Payne.

Pastoral Evangelism.

The church at Liberty, Mo., has been greatly built up spiritually by the meeting which was held there by C. M. Chilton. The preaching was on great themes of the gospel and leaves nothing to be apologized for afterward but on the other hand these addresses will abide in the hearts of the members long after the meeting is closed. There were 26 additions, 23 being on confession of faith.

Progress at Pendleton, Ore.

The church at Pendleton, Ore., sent its pastor, Tolbert F. Weaver, to the national convention and he returned through Arizona and California. The church has had several additions since his return. He took part in the dry campaign which made Oregon dry by a considerable majority. The Eastern Oregon Missionary Convention will meet at Pendleton on Nov. 18 and 19. This convention has the territory from the Cascades, east.

Angola Church Calls Pastor.

The church at Angola, Ind., which was ministered to by John R. Golden the past two years, and which is the home of the Tri-state Normal College, has called for pastor Paul Preston of Ft. Smith, Ark. Mr. Preston will begin work in the new field Dec. 1.

Edgar County, Ill., Churches.

The churches of Edgar County, Ill., have a county organization which brings a considerable sense of common interest to the churches in this section. H. H. Peters of the Paris church has just closed a meeting with the Bell Ridge Church with 25 additions. This church has 300 members. Victor Dorris is pastor of this church and of a church at Asher, which has two hundred members, making him five hundred members on his rural circuit. Herbert Yeuell will begin revival services in the Paris church early in January.

Movies for a Church.

The church at Ann Arbor, Mich., is announcing that they will soon install in their church the finest moving picture machine and stereopticon that money will buy. They plan to present in the near future a number of travelogues and missionary and educational lectures. These are to be used on Wednesday evening. They have a luncheon each Wednesday evening followed by conferences and lectures.

Encouragement at Columbus, O.

The Wilson Avenue Church at Columbus, O., has had sixteen additions at its regular services the past three weeks. Over a thousand were in the Sunday-school on Rally Day. The Wright Brothers of Des Moines will hold revival services here in January.

Ann Arbor Church Invites Congress.

The church at Ann Arbor, Mich., of which Geo. W. Knepper is pastor, has invited the Disciples' Congress to meet in this church next May. They report in their church bulletin that they have met with much encouragement from the committee but no decision has been announced yet.

Preaches in Mormon Church.

H. W. Robertson, an evangelist, wished to hold meetings in Perry, Okla., and accepted the hospitality of the local Mormon church. He will hold a week of special meetings in this building.

Bible Class Dramatics.

The Twentieth Century Bible Class of the Union Avenue Church in St. Louis, has interest in amateur dramatics and they presented recently a dramatic entertainment called, "Waiting for the Trolley Car." The entertainment was received with much appreciation.

Spokane Wants National Convention.

The exchanges report that J. E. Davis, pastor of our Central Church at Spokane, Wash., has been co-operating with the local chamber of commerce to give an effective invitation to the Disciples of Christ to hold their national convention in 1917 at Spokane. One of the methods of co-operation has been the circulation of large quantities of convention "spinners." Some of these will be sent out by Bert Wilson from Kansas City.

F. M. Rains in Louisville.

On account of the illness of E. L. Powell of the First Church, Louisville, Ky., his pulpit is being supplied by visiting ministers. F. M. Rains, secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society spoke in this church on Nov. 8. He took for his theme his recent journey around the world in the interest of mission study. He called attention to the enormous growth of Christianity in foreign parts, the Christian population having doubled in less than fifteen years.

NO ALUM
IN ROYAL BAKING POWDER

New Church at Visalia, Cal.

A new church has been established at Visalia, Cal. For the present the services will be in charge of Miss Elsie Rushhaupt. It is hoped that the new work may make rapid growth.

Annual Visitation Day.

The church at Jacksonville, Ill., to which Myron L. Pontius has been recently called, has established a new custom called Visitation Day. Disciples are familiar with the "Every-Member-Canvass" for missionary funds. This is a canvass of the whole membership for co-operation. A hundred people went out two by two in Jacksonville on a recent day, and in one day reached every member in the church. Information for the pastor was tabulated on cards. The topics of sermons for the winter were printed on cards and distributed in the canvass. After the canvass was completed, the workers returned to the church where they had dinner together and undertook to interpret the material which they had gathered. There have been 19 additions in this church since Sept. 1.

Exposition Roadster at Paris.

Edward B. Hanson, vice-president and general manager of the Panama Exposition is touring the country in an auto and posting up signs along the ways of travel indicating the automobile roads to the exposition. He also gives illustrated lectures on the exposition and on the evening of Nov. 10, he spoke in the church at Paris, Ill., to a large and appreciative audience.

One Text All week.

E. M. Borden who is conducting special services at the Mathewson Avenue Church in Wichita, Kans., preached a whole week recently from the text, Mt. 16:18. Mr. Borden is editor of the Christian Pilot, published at Little Rock, Ark., and recently issued a book of sermons called "Jacob's Ladder."

Where is the Prince of Peace?

Roger T. Nooe is supplying the pulpit in Broadway Church, Louisville, while the pastor, W. N. Briney, holds a meeting in Mr. Nooe's church. Mr. Nooe's subject recently was "The Prince of Peace." He insisted that we were not waiting for Him to come but that he was already here in the hearts of many people and especially in the heart of the president of the United States.

Jasper County Convention.

The churches of Jasper Co., Mo., held a convention in Duenweg November 8 and 9. There was an address by Dr. C. C. Drummond of India, who used a stereopticon. C. C. Garrigues also gave a stereopticon address on the benevolent work of the church. The convention was presided over by D. W. Moore of Carthage.

Minister Has Shower.

A. E. Billman has recently closed a series of special services in the Waltham schoolhouse near Ottawa. At the close of the meeting the country people got up a "shower" for him and brought in abundant supplies of all the good things from the farm.

Will Organize New Church.

R. E. Dunlap is state secretary in Arizona. He has headquarters at Phoenix but has been working at Tempe, recently. He is now going to Bowie, Ariz., where he is planning to organize a church in the near future.

Men's Club is Aggressive.

The Men's Club of the First Church in Youngstown, O., is very active this year. Its president is William Dernan, a prominent attorney of the city. The club maintains a Bible class for men. It is planning to provide a number of Sunday evening luncheons to give men an opportunity to get acquainted. The club conducts Sunday evening services occasionally at which prominent laymen of the city speak. A congressman and a representative to the legislature will speak at an early date.

Prosecuting Attorney Will Preach.

From prosecuting sinners and sending them to jail, B. J. Dillon, prosecuting attorney of Adams County, Ida., has turned to the work of preaching the gospel to them and turning them away from their evil way. Those who know him, prophesy for him a very useful career.

Parsonage Helps Church.

The church at Greeley, Ia., has built a nice parsonage and finds it a great help in keeping a minister on the field. This church was without regular preaching for ten years but now has a minister for full time.

A Bazaar of Nations.

The Minute Circle of the Linwood Boulevard Church in Kansas City will give a Bazaar of Nations Nov. 27 and 28. They will have a French cafe, a cabaret of local artists, and the booths will represent nations. The Egyptian booth is to have a palmist, the Irish booth is to have songs made famous by John McCormick and the American booth is to have the Goddess of Liberty.

Conference on State Work.

The team of state workers, including John R. Golden, secretary, and Clarence L. Depew, Bible-school superintendent, visited our church at Champaign, Ill., on Nov. 6. An afternoon conference was held with the more active workers and in the evening a public meeting was held which was addressed by the visitors. The idea is to make the state mission idea familiar in the great centers of the state just as foreign missions has long been promoted by rallies in the early spring.

Aid Society that Aids.

The women of the Central Church in Des Moines are organized in a way to assist greatly the program of the local church in other ways than in raising money. The society is called Women's Work and the group is divided into neighborhood circles called after the names of the women who are prominent as leaders, as the "May Idleman Circle," "Mary Fullerton Circle" and other such designations. These circles take up definite neighborhood responsibilities for parish work in addition to the more common Aid Society activities.

CHRIST RISEN FROM THE DEAD.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR DECEMBER 6.

Mark 16:1-8; Matt. 28:11-15.

Memory Verses, 6, 7.

Golden Text.—Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen. Luke 24-5, 6.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

Mark 16. (1) And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, bought spices, that they might come and anoint him. (2) And very early on the first day of the week, they come to the tomb when the sun was risen. (3) And they were saying among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the tomb? (4) and looking up, they see that the stone is rolled back: for it was exceeding great. (5) And entering into the tomb, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, arrayed in a white robe; and they were amazed. (6) And he saith unto them, Be not amazed: ye seek Jesus, the Nazarene, who hath been crucified: he is risen; he is not here: behold, the place where they laid him! (7) But go, tell his disciples and Peter, He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you. (8) And they went out, and fled from the tomb; for trembling and astonishment had come upon them: and they said nothing to any one; for they were afraid.

Matthew 28. (11) Now while they were going, behold, some of the guard came into the city, and told unto the chief priests all the things that were come to pass. (12) And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave much money unto the soldiers, (13) saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept. (14) And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and rid you of care. (15) So they took the money, and did as they were taught; and this saying was spread abroad among the Jews, and continueth until this day.

Verse By Verse.

(From Tarbell's Teachers' Guide.)

1. When the Sabbath was past. After sunset on Saturday evening, the Jewish Sabbath. Christ was in the tomb three days according to Jewish reckoning, for they spoke of a part of a day as a whole day.—Mary Magdalene. Of whom we heard in Lesson IV of the First Quarter.—Bought spices that they might come and anoint him. Nicodemus had brought a hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes at the time of entombment, Jn. 19:39, 40.

2. On the first day of the week. With the exception of the Sabbath, the Jews gave no names to the days of the week, but called our Sunday the first day, Monday the second, and so on.—When the sun was risen. Yet it was "very early;" Luke says it was "early dawn," and John says "while it was yet dark." It has been suggested that a "not" has dropped out of Mark's words, and what he wrote was "when the sun was not risen." The women evidently started for the tomb very early, when it was still dark, yet the entering of the tomb occurred by daylight.

4. Looking up. "As they approached the tomb: suggestive of heavy hearts and downcast eyes on the way thither."—For it was exceeding great. This clause seems to belong at the end of verse 3, as a reason for their anxious questioning. As it stands, the size of the stone explains the fact that even from afar they could see that it had been rolled away.

5. A young man. Lk., two men; Mt., the angel. As one commentator remarks, minute and detailed agreement in independent narratives under such circumstances of excitement would be suspicious. The Greek word for an angel means "one who is sent with a message."—They were amazed. They were affrighted and bowed down their faces to the earth, Lk. 24:4.

6. He is risen; he is not here. The apostle Paul declares that the resurrection proves the atoning work of Christ on the cross: If Christ be not raised your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins, I Cor. 15:17.—Behold, the place where they laid him. The tomb as seen by Peter and John is described in Jn. 20:5-7.

7. But go. You have gazed long enough at the empty tomb: go and make known the wonderful fact that its Occupant has arisen.—Tell his disciples and Peter. There is a special message for the repentant Peter.—There ye shall see him. He was seen there by over five hundred at once.—As he said unto you. See Mt. 26:32.

8. They said nothing to any one. Fear kept them silent for a time, but Mt. 28:8; Luke 24:10; and Jn. 20:2 state that they delivered the message to the disciples.

11. Told unto the chief priests. Who had directed them to guard the sepulchre, Mt. 27:65, 66.

12. They. The chief priests.—They gave much money. A bribe.

13. While we slept. Death was the penalty for falling asleep on the watch. If they had been asleep, how could they know that "the disciples stole him away?"

14. Come to the governor's ears. Or, come to a hearing before the governor, RVm. The governor was Pilate.—We will persuade him. With money, for Pilate was a bribe-taker, according to Philo. Or else they thought that as they had so successfully persuaded him to put Jesus to death, they could accomplish this also by words. —Rid you of care. Better than secure you, RVm. Our word secure is from the Latin se (sine) without, and cura, care.

15. This saying. Verse 13.—Until this day. When the Gospel of Matthew was written.

"He is Risen"

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

He who sets himself to build a harmonious narrative of the resurrection out of the various New Testament accounts has before him a difficult, if not an impossible task. If we are more concerned about what kind of a body Jesus possessed after he came forth from the tomb, than we are about the deeper truths, we miss the point. One story has him eating fish and another has him passing through locked doors and all of them have him ascending. It is quite out of the question for us to imagine the fleshly body of our Lord going up into the air. Or, if we are able to imagine that we still have to account at some time for a change into a spiritual body.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

THE HEART OF IT.

But what is the central truth? What is the Easter message? It is that Christ lives now. It is that Christ liveth in us. It is that Jesus is not numbered among the dead as a mere man but that he is reigning now as a divine spirit. There are many details about the resurrection story that I cannot harmonize, but I have no shadow of a doubt that I worship a living, reigning, loving Lord. I believe with all my heart that because he lives I shall live also. I believe that I shall be like him seeing him as he is. That is enough. What glory to be like him. If it be true that Christ is now a spiritual body, then I shall one day also possess a spiritual body. But it will be enough to be like him and to see Him as He is.

SOMETHING HAPPENED.

You cannot deny the resurrection. Something happened. Something put lion hearts into the runaway disciples. Something tremendously impressed them. I believe that Christ actually appeared to them after his death on the cross. Just how he looked, just how he appeared, just how he thus deeply impressed his divine and living personality upon them I do not know in absolute certainty but my reason can only be satisfied by believing that he actually appeared to those men. How else account for the radical change which occurred in those men? Mythical theories will not suffice. Men do not die for dreams. Men do not give their lives in a passion of service in response to auto-suggestion.

WHAT BECAME OF THE BODY?

No one knows. What became of it at the ascension? You still have to account for it some way. If you accept the bodily resurrection you still have the problem of the bodily ascension to meet. If you say that he ate fish you have not accounted for his passing, ghostlike, through barred doors. But I beg you not to waste your time in the unknowable realms of this great event. Let men have their favorite theories and opinions without debate. "In opinions—liberty." The point of the whole narrative remains—Jesus is not a dead man but a living Lord.

PERSONALITY PERSISTS.

The point to emphasize is that of immortality. No doctrine has been so much aired in very recent days. Even Maeterlinck comes to its defence. The truth of eternal life seems to be more firmly grounded than ever before. Eternal life—not simply everlastingness but a quality of life. Eternal life—the kind of life that Jesus lives. I remember a very striking epigram of Dr. Shailer Mathews, "The problem of heaven is how to be happy without a body." If one finds all of his enjoyment in this world in eating, drinking and fleshly enjoyment; if one neglects all the spiritual culture now, what can heaven mean for him? Christ is the first-fruits of them that slept. We all firmly believe that we also shall live after death. We shall rise to the next higher realm—that of the spirit, and live like Christ in the society of the good and great. It will be a society of great souls and we had best prepare for it here and now. Eternal life begins in that hour in which you ally yourself with the Lord of life. Christ is risen! Seek those things which are above. Set your affections on heavenly things. Seek first the Kingdom of God.

In Chinese Sunday-schools.

There are great Sunday-school possibilities in the Chinese Republic. Some of the members of the World's Sunday-school tour party, which last year made a circuit of the globe with Mr. H. J. Heinz as chairman, stopped off in the city of Kiukiang, on the Yangste River. Kiukiang is a city of 82,000. It is the center of a huge district of 5,000,000 people. For nine years Miss Jennie F. Hughes, a Brooklyn Sunday-school girl, has been the only foreign missionary in that great district. She is an enthusiastic Sunday-school worker, and has developed some wonderful work. The training-school is turning out a number of Sunday-school teachers. Every day-school in this district is a Sunday-school, and the teacher is usually the superintendent, and often the pastor as well. Over 2,000 boys and girls are numbered in these district schools.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 2.

Bearing One Another's Burdens.. Gal. 6:1-6; Rom. 14:7-8; 15:1-7; Col. 3:12-13.

The debt of strength is the theme we have for this week. Christ rejected the theory that strength has no obligations. Right is mighty but might does not make right. In savagery and in civilization it has been believed that it is the right of the strong to rob the weak. Jesus teaches that stable institutions depend upon mutual helpfulness and that man is man only as he gives and receives aid.

TAKING CARE OF NUMBER ONE.

There is a way of looking out for number one which is inconsistent with the teachings of Christianity. We withhold our commendation from those who follow this way even when we try it ourselves. It is chosen by those who think there is no gain for one without loss to another. There is another kind of interest in one's own affairs that is of the essence of Christianity. We are members of one another, says the apostle. As such, each of us ought to count for something. We must not allow ourselves to become a burden to others. Many of the heaviest burdens laid upon the honest worker are imposed by the incapacity and laziness of men who boast of their independence. If I neglect my work, I make the work of some other persons heavier. I am under obligation to guard my health not only for my own advantage but also for the advantage of others. Overwork, underwork, vice, and whatever else injure health levy tribute upon honest workers. Perhaps some who are ruining their health by feverish activity which they think is for the salvation of the world would really do the world a good service by going to work in a garden where they would regain health and calmness.

THE BEST GIFT.

What does strength owe to weakness? It owes strength. And this means that the weak person is to be made strong. It is better to cure a man of his sickness than it is to do his work for him while he is sick. It is better to impart knowledge to the ignorant than it is to think for them. To relieve dependent men of responsibility may be the greatest injury we can do to them. The teacher who is worthy of his profession is trying to stimulate the pupil to self-activity. The first object is not the answer to questions, knowledge of mathematics, history, or science, but independence of judgment and ability to deal with novel situations.

CREATING FAITH.
